Richard Steel.....Wyndham Standing
Edward Langholm.....Ronald Byram
Rev. Woodgate.....William Gross
Mrs. Woodgate.....Emma Campbell
Mrs. Vanables.....Nancy Hathaway

The Story: Ruth Minchin is unhappily married to her father's former business partner—a drunken brute. She contracts a friendship for Severino, a pianist, who lives in the same apartment house, and Minchin, discovering them together, orders the pianist from the room and knocks his wife down. Severino kills Minchin in a delirium following pneumonia, and Ruth is suspected of the crime. She is befriended by Richard Steel, who knew Minchin in Australia, but Steele is also suspected of the murder, and she cannot marry the man who killed her husband, but she recalls the encounter with Severino and, under pressure, the pianist confesses, clearing the mystery and their road to happiness.

Feature Pauline Frederick as Ruth Minchin and Wyndham Standing as Richard Steel.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Pauline Frederick Star of Screenplay Based on Ernest W. Horung's Novel, "The Shadow of the Rope."
Something to Think About With States Voting on Prohibiton Amendment.
Mystery Story Baffling the Plot-Detectives Has Fine Moral.
Photoplay of Continued Thrills and Sensations for Screen-Fans.
Intensely Dramatic Screenplay With Gripping "Heart Interest."

Advertising Angles: Make appeal to Miss Frederick's following. For the story, work on the mystery angle of a woman, herself suspected of her husband's murder, suspecting the man she loves of the crime. Tell that it is a story by E. W. Hornung, creator of "Raffles" and "Stingaree." Work this angle heavily.

Advertising Aids: Two each one, three and six sheets. One-24-sheet. Lobby displays, 8x10, 11x14 and 22x28. Cuts from one to three columns on star and production. Advertising lay-out mats. Slides. Press book.

GOLDWYN SAYS

"The Moving Picture World says that Geraldine Farrar in 'The Hell Cat' is 100 per cent drama and that the World's reader circulation is likewise 100 per cent. We agree with the World both ways. The Moving Picture World is the journal that all exhibitors should subscribe to and read regularly—it's a thoroughbred among trade journals."

PERFECTED PROJECTION

THE DE VRY

A portable projector, embodying scientific principles of construction. Is ideal for use in screening film, and in small town theatres where no dependable light current exists.

Operates on either alternating or direct current; takes standard size reels and film; throws pictures up to 12 feet in diameter, and is so light that it can with ease be carried from place to place.

Write today for a catalog fully describing its application to your work.

Ralph Ruffner Said:

(To members of the A. M. P. A.)

Ralph Ruffner.

Take Care of Small Town Man.

"It would be unfair for you to gauge your work entirely by my wants from you as an exhibitor. In a city the size of Butte we have advertising and publicity facilities that are not available to exhibitors in smaller places.. I can buy art work of a kind, if it is necessary. I can employ ad writers if I am too busy to prepare copy. Let the small town exhibitor predominate in your consideration of exhibitor wants, and in working to equip him thoroughly, you will more than satisfy managers like myself.

THAT'S what the MOVING PICTURE WORLD DOES!

It takes its message to thousands of "Small Town" Showmen; their needs predominate in the purpose of the Publishers and the Editors of the World.

Simplex

The Latest Adjunct to the Perfect Projector—

Simplex "EXTRALITE SHUTTER"

Does the Opinion of These Men Mean Anything to You?

F. H. RICHARDSON
PROJECTION ENGINEER,

PROF. M. F. WEINRICH

CECIL WOODS
CHIEF PROJECTIONIST,
D. W. GRIFFITH ATTRACTIONS.

They have endorsed the "Extralite" Shutter as having all of the qualities which we claim for it.

WITH the idea of better screen results in mind we decided to improve the revolving shutter.

This meant experimenting with countless types until the "Extralite" was reached.

We now have gone farther in projector improvement than any other manufacturer—for with the "Extralite" it is possible to produce——

PRESENT SCREEN ILLUMINATION ON LESS CURRENT OR BETTER SCREEN ILLUMINATION WITH PRESENT AMOUNT OF CURRENT

GREATER DETAIL OF PHOTOGRAPHY
NO FLICKER UP TO NINETEEN MINUTE SPEED

These remarkable results are accomplished by—
Mechanically perfect synchronized perforations which admit the added light upon the picture screen.

Chemically treated filler material between perforated blades, thereby eliminating "light-ghosts" and destruction of half-tones so prevalent in ordinary perforated shutters.

"Extralite" shutters are now part of every Simplex equipment without extra charge.

Single "Extralites" now for sale by all Simplex distributors.

Adaptable to All Machines Using Front Outside Shutter.

Projectionist Ray says

"If you could only visit my projection room and see my Power's Cameragraph in operation, you'd be a booster, too.

"Smooth action? I guess yes.

"They say, 'all good things are three.'

"Power's loop setter instantly and automatically re-sets the lower loop. Power's exclusive, wonderful intermittent movement gives each picture a longer exposure and better definition. Power's base which possesses the broadest expanse, insures the greatest rigidity. There they are.

"I'll say that the very best that the market affords and that human brains can invent, is in this projector. It has always aimed high and it has never failed to hit this bull's-eye."

"DON'T CHANGE YOUR HUSBAND"

An ARTCRAFT Picture

By JEANIE MACPHERSON

Her Husband Was No Beau Brummel

IN "Old Wives for New" you saw the wife who grew "careless." In "Don't Change Your Husband" the untidy, neglectful husband gets "his."

Financial giants bowed to "The Glue King's" wishes, but he was so unkempt that his wife was ashamed to walk beside him. No wonder she sometimes walked with other men.

HE "backed into" his unpressed clothes. SHE wore the most sumptuous creations of the Fifth Avenue modistes with a charm that was the envy of her exclusive set—a charm that attracted all men to her.

Staged with the luxury typical of Cecil B. DeMille and with a cast that includes Elliott Dexter, Gloria Swanson, Sylvia Ashton and Theodore Roberts.

Exhibitors Tell Why Crowds Stormed Doors to See D. W. Griffith's "The Greatest Thing in Life"

Artcraft Picture Is Box-Office Knockout, Consensus of Opinion of Showmen—A Genuine $2.00 Production

D. W. GRIFFITH'S "The Greatest Thing in Life," his newest Artcraft Picture, is proving to be one of those rare productions that pile up new box office records in city and village alike.

It is leaving in its wake enthusiastic patrons shouting again the praises of D. W. Griffith, and smiling exhibitors with greatly enlarged bank accounts.

What About "War Scenes?"

Exhibitors who have not yet shown "The Greatest Thing in Life" will be particularly interested in comments made to the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation regarding the war angle and its effect upon attendance.

The war scenes in "The Greatest Thing in Life" did not detract one iota from its box office value. Rather, according to many exhibitors, it helped bring larger crowds.

A $2.00 Attraction

"The Greatest Thing in Life" is a genuine $2.00 attraction and, because their patrons realize that a D. W. Griffith picture has entertainment value many times that of an ordinary moving picture, scores of exhibitors doubled their prices for the run of "The Greatest Thing in Life." And at increased prices the theatres did turn away business.

"War Stuff" Aids Business

The tremendous business done by exhibitors with D. W. Griffith's latest Artcraft Production, "The Greatest Thing in Life," seems to show that the "Victory" feature of the story helps greatly to produce better business.

W. F. Dagon, the Vaudette Amusement Company, Springfield, Ill., says: "The fact that it is a war picture did not hurt our business, but rather increased it. 'The Greatest Thing in Life' was one of the finest pictures that we have ever shown and our patrons were most lavish in their praise."

"It being a war picture undoubtedly increased its drawing power considerably," according to a statement from Carr & Schad, Inc., of Reading, Pa.

S. Trinz reports that "The Greatest Thing in Life" did very well at the Covent Garden theatre in Chicago. "As a rule," he says, "war stuff does not appeal to his audiences, but this D. W. Griffith production was not affected by this state of affairs. I consider it an excellent picture, high-class, artistic and well done."

Runs for Four Weeks at Clune's Auditorium

Clune's Auditorium theatre, in Los Angeles, according to W. H. Clune, found the popularity of D. W. Griffith's "The Greatest Thing in Life," was so enormous that it was necessary to extend the run for four weeks.

"Our turn-away has been so great," Mr. Clune states, "that we had to double our regular program by giving two shows both New Year's Eve and New Year's Night, all this with the competition of many inviting counter attractions. 'The Greatest Thing in Life' has captured the public's favor and builds daily despite the fact that our 3,500 seating capacity is continuously packed and our prices the highest in the city, with over seven hundred 75-cent seats and the balance at 50 and 25 cents."

ON this page are given comments from exhibitors upon the drawing power of "The Greatest Thing in Life," and details as to how they exploited this D. W. Griffith-Artcraft production. All this information is of great value to the exhibitor who has not yet shown this picture.

It is not only in the large cities that "The Greatest Thing in Life" is breaking records. The Florence theatre, in Elk Point, South Dakota, reports: "D. W. Griffith, the master director, in his latest big masterpiece, 'The Greatest Thing in Life,' has produced a wonderful picture which will go down in history as one of his best efforts."

Charles Fecher, the Lexington theatre, Chicago, reports capacity business.

J D. Weiner, manager of the Ziegfeld theatre, in Chicago, says: "'The Greatest Thing in Life' adds another pure water pearl to the string of successful Artcraft releases. It is an unqualified success from start to finish. Never has an audience at the Ziegfeld theatre been more unanimous in its expression of satisfaction than was manifest at this exhibition."

The Jewel theatre, Sioux Falls, S. Dak., wires the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation: "'Greatest Thing in Life' went over big three days. Pleased all classes. Morning papers started a contest offering $10.00 for the best 200-word letter on 'What is the greatest thing in life?'"

How They Advertised Griffith Production

The Strand Theatre Company in Birmingham, Ala., aroused Birmingham's curiosity before the showing of D. W. Griffith's "The Greatest Thing in Life" with a very successful contest in the Birmingham News for the best essays upon the subject "What is the greatest thing in life?" The Strand theatre furnished the free tickets which were given as prizes to the winners.

In its newspaper advertising the Strand theatre emphasized the fact that it was a D. W. Griffith production.

J. Kuhn, manager of Loew's Stillman, in Cleveland, exploited "The Greatest Thing in Life," as "D. W. Griffith's contribution to Victory." His entire lobby was displayed with all the Allied flags. These were clustered and held by an American shield bearing the word "Victory."

About ten days previous to the showing of "The Greatest Thing in Life," Mr. Kuhn ran teaser ads. in the newspapers asking "What is the greatest thing in life?"

"Of the many thousands of patrons who have viewed this picture I have heard nothing but praise," Mr. Kuhn says. "I am quite satisfied that it will bring big business wherever shown, for it is timely, excellent entertainment and made by one of the greatest producers in the motion picture ranks to-day."

T. B. Baylies, manager of the Olympia theatre, New Bedford, Mass., advertised "The Greatest Thing in Life" as "the Great Victory Picture—a true lesson of the war." Mr. Baylies says: "I personally

Critics Say the Greatest Thing in Life is D. W. Griffith's "The Greatest Thing in Life"

Judgment Pronounced by Dramatic Writers on Artcraft Picture Distributed by Famous Players-Lasky Corp.

D. W. GRIFFITH
Whose Latest Artcraft Picture is "The Greatest Thing in Life"

IF a great majority of the newspaper critics agree that a motion picture contains unusual entertainment value, the exhibitor is safe in assuming that it is worth booking for an extended run and that it will make good in added box-office receipts as well as with its patrons.

But when every critic, whether in New York, Los Angeles, Keokuk, Iowa or Gallup, New Mexico, stands right up and shouts from the columns of his newspaper that he has found the most extraordinary motion picture that he has seen in many a day—then every exhibitor knows that the thing for him to do is to rush right down to the exchange just as fast as he can go and try to book that production for as many days as he can get it.

The Market Tips

The dramatic criticisms of the newspapers are genuine market tips to exhibitors. The average dramatic critic is an expert in picking flaws. When he goes to a motion picture theatre he has his mind made up in advance that what he is going to see is not quite as good entertainment as the manager of the theatre has proised.

Remarkable indeed is the outburst of praise from the dramatic critics for D. W. Griffith's latest Artcraft production, "The Greatest Thing in Life." They have found that the promises were not half strong enough.

The trade paper experts have proclaimed "The Greatest Thing in Life" as a genuine Griffith production in everything that the expression means. The newspaper critics, usually even more severe, have joined in the unanimous praise given to the latest triumph of this screen genius.

CRITICAL FLASHES

The newspaper men and women say just what they think about D. W. Griffith

Archie Bell, Cleveland News, says:
"'The Greatest Thing in Life' is a Griffith film, not just a motion picture."

The Indianapolis Star says:
"Mr. Griffith is the one genius of the film—he stands supreme and alone."

The Washington, D. C., Herald says:
"With all due respect to his rivals, Mr. Griffith has demonstrated his claim to the sole and only right to make a picture that will go on the big time and stay there at $2.00."

The New York Sun says:
"Again Griffith comes out on top. 'The Greatest Thing in Life' sets a higher mark in realism."

The Philadelphia Public Ledger says:
"'The Greatest Thing in Life' is the greatest thing in life."

Mae Tinnee, Chicago Journal, says:
"The picture is masterly in production."

Antony Anderson, in the Los Angeles Times, says:

"'The Greatest Thing in Life' is a wonderful achievement. Griffith stands supreme."

T. E. Oliphant, New York Mail, says:
"'The Greatest Thing in Life' contains what is probably the greatest and most thrilling scene ever shown on screen or stage."

The New York American says:
"D. W. Griffith—head and shoulders above any other creator of films."

Louella Parsons, in the New York Telegraph, says:
"In 'The Greatest Thing in Life' D. W. Griffith scores another success."

The Verdict of the Jury—Dramatic Critics

The New York American says:
"Mr. Griffith, head and shoulders above any other creator of films, can make pictures that satisfy Americans. His 'The Greatest Thing in Life' is Artcraft's very finest picture of recent issue. It gives forth such a vital stirring picture as only this master producer has been able to present. The drama ends with the boy saying: 'I love you.' The girl answers: 'Yes, I know you do.' And because she loves him, you see, that's the greatest thing in life."

New York Evening Journal says:
"In 'The Greatest Thing in Life,' David Wark Griffith, acknowledged as the supreme master of screencraft, has done it again. His second Artcraft production undoubtedly hits the mark. The big audience at the Strand, gripped by the action of the play, seemed dazed for a while by the very bigness of the theme, then burst into storms of prolonged applause which left no doubt as to its verdict. Attempted by any other producer it would have meant ruin."

Mae Tinée, in the Chicago Journal, says:
"Mr. Griffith weaves a poignant and tender story, high-lighted with humor and softened by touches of the most human sort of pathos. He does these things so well! The picture is masterly in production."

Philadelphia Evening Bulletin says:
"Dramas may come and dramas may go, but none is likely to exceed in human appeal Mr. Griffith's, 'The Greatest Thing in Life'—a superb example of the new photographic art."

New York Sun says:
"'The Greatest Thing in Life' is remarkable for its realism and signally effective strokes of pathos. Again Griffith comes out on top. 'The Greatest Thing in Life' sets a higher mark in realism."

Philadelphia Enquirer says:
"'The Greatest Thing in Life' is quite up to the lofty Griffith standard. It is a thrilling story. Whatever other producers achieve along these lines Mr. Griffith always contrives to come along and go them one better."

New York World says:
"'The Greatest Thing in Life,' produced by Mr. Griffith, has all the wealth of setting and realism."

New York Herald says:
"Nothing in the photographic art has ever been more subtly impressive in the art of pantomime than in this Griffith picture."

Philadelphia Public Ledger says:
"'The Greatest Thing in Life' exhibits the usual Griffith skill in supervision, wonderful photography and exquisite lighting."

Exhibitors Tell of Their Successes

consider it the best Griffith picture we have yet had, an artistic picture in every sense of the word and one that will stand for some time as a master-piece."

Herman A. Schwahn, general manager, the Eau Claire (Wis.) Theatre Co., wires the famous Players-Lasky Corporation:

"Accept our heartiest congratulations on Griffith's 'Greatest Thing in Life.' Any exhibitor who is asleep at the switch and fails to grab this quick will have something to regret, as I consider it one of D. W. Griffith's best—a one hundred per cent. sure fire home run attraction and entitled to extended runs everywhere. We advertised this as a D. W. Griffith special, and after our initial showing mouth-to-mouth advertising was all that was necessary."

Samuel Goldwyn presents:

Geraldine Farrar

We advise every exhibitor who has the Geraldine Farrar Star Series Goldwyn productions under contract to give his nearest Goldwyn manager increased playing time on this production.

"Shadows" is the biggest and most unusual Farrar production ever made. It is "a story of Eastern days and Alaskan nights;" a stirring, exciting dramatic story of a woman swirled perilously close to the flame of the Yukon.

Millions of this great star's American and world admirers will be amazed and delighted to see her in the role of an Alaskan dance hall girl.

As in her other powerful Goldwyn productions, "The Turn of the Wheel" and "The Hell-Cat," she is supported in "Shadows" by a notable cast including Milton Sills as the hero-husband; Tom Santschi as the miner-villain and Frederick Truesdell. And there is the power of direction that you can always count on from Reginald Barker.

In SHADOWS

By Willard Mack
Directed by Reginald Barker

The "Five-minute-whistle" has blown on the steamer that is to take the last passengers "outside" before winter closes in upon the frozen Yukon.

During this five minutes in the room of an Alaskan saloon-dance hall a hunted, desperate woman forces to a terrible climax the drama that casts its dark shadows upon her later life and happiness.

This woman is Cora Lamont—never before has Geraldine Farrar had such a role on stage or screen.

The man is Jack McGoff—and never before has Tom Santschi had such a role.

Willard Mack knows the mad, fevered, quick-on-the-trigger gold country—and he knows big drama that makes the pulses leap. "Shadows" in such a picture.

Prints of this exceptional production have been sent to all Goldwyn offices and we advise exhibitors to ask our managers for an immediate screening, for no one can see this without giving it more playing days.

"The Turn of the Wheel" and "The Hell Cat" justified everything we said about them for drawing power.

"Shadows" has just double the pulling power. Have you booked the Farrar series?

CAPITOL COMEDIES

They Nudge Each Other and Say: "Oh, Look! There Goes "Smiling Bill" PARSONS."

IN every city and town in America where "Smiling Bill" Parsons goes on his travels, to make a picture or to steal away for a rest, he finds that his reputation tips him off to the populace.

This is the penalty of popularity and the greatest distribution in the motion picture industry—the Goldwyn distribution.

"I saw you last night at the Temple," says the waiter at the breakfast table. "I like your picture this week at the Tivoli?" says the coat room maid. "Gosh, if it isn't Smiling Bill Parsons," exclaims the chauffeur. Hundreds of times a day this is repeated.

Capitol Comedies are worth and deserve the best efforts of a great organization. They have earned their place in exhibitor and public liking on quality and merit.

There are 26 Capitol Comedies a year—one every second Monday and the chief regret of the exhibitors who play them is that we do not have 52 of them, or one a week. Exhibitors advertise them regularly saying:

But we wonder whether, in the vast number of names announced and to be announced, you will notice the powerful and nationally known first runs that are presenting The Ford Educational Weekly to their patrons?

The famous Stanley and the Mastbaum chain in Philadelphia; the Jones, Linick and Schaefer and Ascher Bros. chains in Chicago; the popular Majestic, Detroit; the Clemmer, Seattle; Alhambra, Toledo; Liberty, Youngstown; the million-dollar Graumann, Los Angeles; the entire Marcus Loew New York chain of theatres.

What exhibitors say about "UNDER FOUR FLAGS"

The Government's Great Victory Picture

Exhibitor Comment:

"Wonderful picture. Extra Big Business." "A picture that every theatre should play"——M. P. News.

Consensus:

"Powerful production with extra big drawing powers"——M. P. News.

Letters from Prominent Exhibitors who gave official presentations of the picture:

RIALTO and RIVOLI
New York

Let me reiterate my declaration that aside from its patriotic and historical values, "Under Four Flags" is perhaps the most important picture of the great war, as viewed from a box-office angle.

Its success in a simultaneous run at the Rialto and Rivoli, to a week of capacity business, and its return after the lapse of a week, for a second week at the Rivoli, is now a matter of motion picture history. This presentation of the picture, entirely without precedent, was certainly a strong test of the drawing power of the production.

"Under Four Flags" is listed high among our important successes at the Rialto and Rivoli.

SHEA'S HIPPODROME
Buffalo

Because "Under Four Flags" is a war film, we thought that possibly the public would not be interested, on account of present-day conditions. We did more than capacity each day of the showing of the picture. The writer cannot endorse the production too strongly, either from the point of interest it holds or as to box-office value. It lends itself to presentation and exploitation as no other production can.

"Under Four Flags" is a box-office attraction of the highest order.

Harold B. Franklin

METROPOLITAN THEATRE
Washington, D. C.

"Under Four Flags" played here as the opener for the Metropolitan and was a tremendous success and in a large measure responsible for the immediate popularity of the house. It was rebooked by public demand. The exhibitor who overlooks booking these remarkable government pictures makes the biggest mistake of his life, because he not alone co-operates with his Government, but he does a business at his box-office which will make him wish for a Government picture every day, if he could get it.

STANLEY THEATRE
Philadelphia

"Under Four Flags" was conceded by the newspapers to be the best war picture ever produced. Patrons were lavish in their praise and patronage. I am sure the Division of Films will have very little trouble in placing this picture in the representative theatres throughout the United States.

CIRCLE THEATRE
Indianapolis

The remarkable success of the official presentation of "Under Four Flags" at the Circle is ample testimonial to the wonderful drawing power of the picture and its absorbing interest to the public. The presentation here was one of the outstanding achievements of this theatre, while from a box-office standpoint it has a value that cannot be too highly recommended. The picture itself is an artistic achievement that merits the unanimous praise it has received on all sides.

Death of Mrs. Carl Laemmle Following Pneumonia Attack

RECHA STERN LAEMMLE, wife of Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, following a short illness died Monday morning, January 13, at the family residence, New York City. Mrs. Laemmle contracted influenza shortly after New Year's Day and despite efforts of physicians, pneumonia, which caused her death, developed.

Mrs. Laemmle is survived by two children, Rosabelle, aged seventeen years, and Julius aged eleven. Funeral services were held from the Laemmle home, 378 West End avenue, Wednesday morning, January 15, and as a tribute of respect to the memory of Mrs. Laemmle, employes in Universal exchanges all over the world suspended work for a period of five minutes. Employes of Universal exchanges subscribed to a fund to purchase flowers, but at the request of the family the fund was turned over to a charitable organization for which Mrs. Laemmle was a devoted worker. Mrs. Laemmle was forty-three years of age.

Now Des Moines Backs Up Ralph Ruffner Contention

DES MOINES exhibitors are again complaining about the entire lack of co-operation on the part of some exchanges in providing publicity material. After a number of scorching letters went into the exchanges at fault, service was a little better for a while, but recently two Des Moines theatres that use still photographs and make their own cuts for ads have not had a new still on certain stars from certain exchanges in the past month.

Kicks to the exchanges elicit the information that they "haven't got 'em" and no further interest in the matter is forthcoming. The press agent of the house in question has been forced to write New York executives in a wild appeal for a little assistance. In some cases press sheets have not been provided and often times there are no one-sheets. This kind of service has become very monotonous and has cost many dollars in patronage through inability to make proper exploitation of films.

When stills are provided they are usually the very ones that would be rejected in an opportunity for choice. The good ones seem to stay in New York or on the coast and the dark inartistic ones are spread broadcast for use by the fellows who are paying out their good money for service.

Whoever is at fault in this matter should take a tumble to the meaning of the word co-operation. Bull letters about "the interests of the exhibitor first" and so on fall on barren ground when there is no indication of a spirit to back them up.

Some exchanges are giving this co-operation as it should be administered, but two or three of the biggest producing and exchange concerns in the business still think a hundred-screen cut is the only thing needed to put a picture over. If it were not for the assistance provided by the Motion Picture World in their publicity aids a lot of exhibitors in this part of the country wouldn't even know the sort of pictures they are buying.

A Worth While Story.

Don't miss reading "Talking It Over with A. P. Kelly." Edward Weitzel is on the inquiry end of an interesting conversation with a young man who is known as the highest paid freelance writer of screen fiction and also as the author of the "big money" war drama of the stage. It's worth while.

Far Rockaway to Have Fine Big Strand Theatre

THE new combination of theatrical interests formed for the purpose of extensive amusement operations announces its first new venture. Sol Brill, for long years associated in the theatrical business under the firm name of Fox & Brill, and Max Spiegel, the well known theatrical manager, vice president and secretary of the corporation owning and operating the New York Strand Theatre, Broadway and Forty-second street, and the new Strand Theatre now in the course of erection in Brooklyn on Fulton street, corner of Rockwell place, and president of the corporation owning and operating perhaps the finest moving picture theatre in New Jersey, known as the Newark Theatre, in Newark, have formed a corporation which will build a theatre in Far Rockaway, which is to be one of the finest playhouses in that section of Long Island.

The site selected for the new house is within forty feet of one of Far Rockaway's busiest corners, the intersection of Cornaga avenue and Central avenue. The lobby of the theatre will cover the plot of ground now occupied by the stores of Mullin & Buckley and will contain bowling alleys and a large ballroom. The investment will represent an outlay of $350,000.

The house will be called the Strand, a name identified with the highest quality of photoplay presentations. It will be a completely equipped theatre, capable of staging the largest attractions and will have seating capacity of 2,500—built and designed by Thomas W. Lamb, the well known theatrical architect. This new theatre will undoubtedly prove one of the most profitable enterprises of the Strand chain of theatres.

Will Fight Film Devil with Free Sunday Show

NOEL J. BREED, pastor of the First Congregational Church at Grand Rapids, Wis., found the moving picture theatre a serious rival for his Sunday evening sermons. But the Rev. Mr. Breed was not to be outdone.

"If people are determined to go to movies, the best I can do is to furnish good ones for them," he reasoned. Accordingly, he closed his usual Sunday morning sermon a month ago with the statement that his congregation could all come round to the local opera house that evening and see a movie show, no admission charged.

His congregation was there en masse, with a liberal addition of other movie fans, and Mr. Breed has inaugurated a custom that promises to be kept up through the winter months. His first two pictures were "The Sign Invisible" and "The Passing of the Third Floor Back," booked from the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, Milwaukee.

Last week H. J. Fitzgerald, manager of the Milwaukee branch, received the following, written by Mr. Breed:

"Have the new Mary Pickford productions 'Daddy Long-Legs' and 'Pollyanna,' been released yet? If so, what arrangements could we make to secure them? If they have not, when will they be available? I should be glad to secure information from you in regard to other new releases."

Brooklyn Exhibitors Act Quickly on Albany Bill

AT a special meeting of the Executive Committee of the Associated Motion Picture Exhibitors of Brooklyn and Long Island, called by its chairman, William Brandt, to consider a bill introduced by Assemblyman William F. Brush, of Orange County, New York, designed to create a State Motion Picture Department to supervise and regulate the production, distribution and exhibition of motion pictures in this state, a resolution was unanimously adopted against the enactment of this bill.

A committee of five was appointed for the purpose of planning by publicity or otherwise to oppose the proposed legislation. It was the consensus of opinion of those present that this bill is the most iniquitous piece of legislation ever aimed at the motion picture industry.

The following telegram was ordered sent to all locals in New York State:

"The exhibitors of Brooklyn through their executive committee passed a unanimous resolution thanking Peter J. Schaefer, Alfred Black and Louis F. Blumenthal for their splendid efforts in connection with securing reductions in proposed tax legislation for the motion picture industry at Washington.

"WM. BRANDT."

Binghamton Decision Stirs Citizens of Nearby Towns

THE ruling of Justice George McCann, of Binghamton, vacating the injunction restraining the police from closing the theatres of that city on Sunday, has created great interest in cities of that section of New York, where there are Sunday pictures. It is understood the matter will now be carried to the Court of Appeals, and if the highest court sustains the decision all of the theatres of the State can be closed if such a movement on closing is made.

The city of Oneida, about twenty-seven miles west of Utica, is singularly free from "conscientious objectors." The motion pictures are recognized as a big factor in every patriotic and educational idea promulgated. As far as can be ascertained none of the ministers in Oneida are opposed to the opening of the moving picture theatre on Sunday.

Suspend Permit for Sunday Shows.

Ilion, a fair-sized city just east of Utica, enjoyed Sunday pictures for about two months. The permit to run on Sunday was allowed because of the necessity of providing a means of recreation for the large number of men who were employed in the plants of the Remington rifle and typewriter company. Considerable protest was made against the opening of the theatres on Sunday, but nevertheless Sunday shows were the rule for a time. Finally when the company began to lay men off and there were not nearly as many there as during the war, the permit allowing the Sunday shows was suddenly suspended and now Ilion has no Sunday shows.

However, Sunday shows made such a hit with the regular residents of Ilion that a petition has been circulated for the names of all those who desire the Sunday shows and it will be presented to the Board of Trustees of the city. R. E. King, editor of the Ilion Citizen, printed a strong editorial on the value of motion pictures.

Go to Syracuse to See Pictures.

Utica also expected to get Sunday pictures during the fall of last year, but the municipal authorities would not allow it. It is a well known fact that large numbers of Uticans go to Syracuse every Sabbath to obtain recreation in some sort of amusement.

Otto to Direct May Allison.

Henry Otto is again directing May Allison. Two years ago Mr. Otto directed Miss Allison, when she was co-starred with Harold Lockwood. Otto is now at the Metro studios in Hollywood, and, with Miss Allison, has started a new picture. It is "The Island of Intrigue," adapted by A. S. Le Vino from Isabel Ostrander's novel. Joseph Strauss serves as Otto's assistant and business agent for the Allison production.

Kinograms Issues Sample and "Demonstration" Extra

A KINOGRAM "extra" has been sent to the exchanges of the World Film Corporation as an introduction of the new news reel to the men in the field who will be concerned with its distribution, and incidentally for advance showings to exhibitors at World exchanges. This is declared to be the first time in the history of news reel making that real screen advertising and advance announcement have been used. The idea of the "sample" is to carry to the exchangemen and exhibitors a demonstration of the "de luxe" news reel idea as set forth by the Kinogram Publishing Corporation.

Incidentally the reel presents views of the Kinogram concern's laboratories at 71 West Twenty-third street, the only special news reel laboratories on Manhattan Island and operated directly adjacent to and in connection with the editorial offices. It also includes pictures of Charles Urban, Ray L. Hall and Terry Ramsaye, who make up the executive and editorial staff of "Kinograms."

The advance sample contains some remarkable pictures from the local field and from abroad, with remarkable news-scenics from the Italian Alps. A part of the reel is devoted to a discussion of news reel title and typographical treatment, which should have a technical interest to all picture producers.

Incidentally, Mr. Urban has admitted the coinage of the name of this news reel "Kinograms." "Everybody knows, of course," he remarks, "that 'Kino' means motion picture in probably the largest part of the globe. That is the root word of our name, and it is and will prove increasingly valuable in our foreign connections, which extend through Continental Europe, England, of course, and the Far East. The other end of the word 'grams' is politely but firmly taken from 'cablegram,' indicating that we are transmitting the world's news on the screen in pictorial terms. In other words, we are sending the motion picture theatre Kinograms. Very simple. Then there is another important aspect—the name is entirely our own and cannot be well imitated with success."

The first issue of Kinograms is now in work, and will receive its final chapters on shipping date. It will be available in New York on February 1, and elsewhere on receipt by the World Pictures exchanges.

Explains Why Credit Cannot Be Given Detroit Exhibitors

WHILE the new five trade rules recently put into effect by most of the Detroit film exchange have created a little ill-feeling on the part of some of the bigger exhibitors who feel that an exception should be made in their cases, on the whole the plan is meeting with favor and very little opposition. Some exhibitors who complained bitterly at the outset calmed down when the reasons for adopting them were properly explained. Several exhibitors take the attitude that credit is extended to reliable concerns in other lines of business—why not in the moving picture industry?

President J. E. Flynn, Goldwyn manager and a member of the Board of Motion Picture Exchange Managers, says that in other lines of business some tangible merchandise is sold, but that in the picture business service is being sold and that if the exhibitor does not pay there is no redress. "And the best proof is the outstandings on the books of any exchange, large or small—not only in Detroit but all over the country," he adds. "We would all be tickled to death if we could extend credit to every exhibitor and know that his account was as good as money in the bank. There are some splendid fellows in the theatre business whose credit is beyond question. But if you are going to establish a rule, you can't make fowl of one and fish of the other. It must be an ironclad rule—otherwise, there are too many loopholes, and before you know it your own rule which seems drastic is so elastic that it is not accomplishing its purposes.

"Maybe, some day it will be possible to establish a credit bureau in each town where exchanges exist, and by co-operation on the part of the exchanges single out the good exhibitors from the bad. But that day is not here just yet. We hope it will come and real soon. Meanwhile, we must proceed with our plan of enforcing the five trade rules because it is the only solution of an evil that threatens the very life of this industry. Exhibitors do not extend credit to the public—the railroads do not extend credit—the postoffice does not extend credit—why should exchanges?"

Lasky Engages Three More Directors.

Jesse L. Lasky announces the acquisition of George Fitzmaurice, Kenneth Webb and Irvin Willat to augment his company's staff of directors. Mr. Fitzmaurice has been a director of successful films for the past five years and, at the head of his own organizations, produced the Astra pictures for Pathe release. Before becoming a director Mr. Fitzmaurice was a scenario writer.

Kenneth Webb gained prominence lately in the producing field. Although he has only been connected with this branch of the industry about a year, Mr. Webb has come to the front ranks as a result of exceptional capabilities.

Irvin Willat is now on his way to the Western studios to start work on a Lila Lee subject, "Judy of Rogues' Harbor," an adaptation from a novel by Grace Miller White.

FIRST NATIONAL MEN TAKE RECESS

Hold Long Executive Sessions for Three Days and Then Adjourn for Sightseeing and Studio Visiting—Air Thick with Rumors—Meeting Believed Important

Los Angeles, January 9.

THE board of directors of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, composed of Robert Lieber, of Indianapolis, T. L. Tally, of Los Angeles, Aaron Jones, of Chicago, Walter Hayes, of New York, E. H. Hulsey, of Dallas and Claude Jensen, of Seattle, who are holding a conference in Los Angeles, finished a three days' executive session on January 9 and took a recess to visit the moving picture studios and various other points of interest, after which the business meetings will be resumed.

While it is pretty certain that film history was made at the meeting of the executive board of the association, it is history that as yet is unwritten and, in spite of the many rumors and conjectures, history that is unguessed.

Whether the already strong and powerful body known as the First National will be stronger and more aggressive; whether combinations with other concerns, which are rumored, were formed; or whether it will maintain the keep-to-itself, conservative policy that has characterized its activities in the past, is not known except to the little band of seven who sat in secret in a conference room at the Alexandria Hotel, with a guard at the door, for long hours on each of the three days of the session.

T. L. Tally, vice-president, and one of the originators of the First National Association, says that the meeting is largely informal, and that nothing significant is attached to its being held here and at this time.

Sort of Picnic, Intimates Tally.

"We wanted to have a meeting," said Mr. Tally, "and the members were glad of the opportunity to come to Los Angeles and escape a little of the rigors of the Eastern and Middle Western winter. They wanted to see the studios and study production at first-hand, and to see our new star—Mary Pickford—at work on her first picture for the circuit; and they conferred a great favor on me by coming out here, where they can go without their overcoats and bask in our sunshine and allow me to entertain them, instead of dragging me to some snow-bound Eastern meeting place."

The town is full of rumors, conjectures and hand-woven and fancy embroidered guesswork. Rumors of combinations of various sorts; combinations that will seek to control the entire industry; combinations that will mean the retrogression of the star; combinations that will mean the elimination of the small fish of filmdom.

Big Men's Presence Adds to Guessing.

Stories that the First National are seeking the services of a number of big stars are being circulated, and among the names are Douglas Fairbanks, Clara Kimball Young and Charles Ray; and while members admit that they are on the look-out for new talent to add to the strong list now controlled, they will make no definite statements as to names, contracts or terms.

The presence in Los Angeles of Hiram Abrams and Benjamin Schulberg, who are known to be here for the purpose of forming a producing or distributing company of some sort, and of Samuel Goldwyn, of the Goldwyn corporation; of Winfield Sheehan, of the Fox interests, and Adolph Zukor, of Famous Players-Lasky and Artcraft, leads many to connect their simultaneous presence with the First National meetings.

The reputed combination to be formed between First National, Goldwyn, Famous Players-Lasky and Metro has no authentic foundation, according to association members, and the consensus of opinion is that the First National will not combine with any other concern for the reason that they do not need them.

To quote a member who speaks unofficially:

"Why should we combine with anybody? We've got the theatres; we've got the stars, and we've got the money. Why worry?"

In addition to the seven members of the executive board of the First National Circuit there are eight other stockholders and franchise holders in Los Angeles.

Attention Centered on Alexandria.

The lobbies of the Alexandria, where the meetings were held, were thronged day and night by producers, their agents, actors looking for lightning to strike them, men with schemes and men with dreams.

In the meantime the little group of seven, holding their meetings up in Parlor A, on the mezzanine floor, sat through their portentous deliberations, and at the same time sat on the lid so tight that nothing came out.

The persistent rumors that the First National is negotiating with Douglas Fairbanks is neither admitted nor denied. Adoph Zukor declares that Fairbanks will not leave Artcraft, and the guessers say: "He said much the same thing three days before Mary Pickford signed her big contract with the First National."

Robert Lieber, president of the First National Exhibitors, when asked for a definite statement, delegated H. O. Schwalbe, of Philadelphia, as spokesman.

In response to the question: "Is a combination between the First National and other producing concerns being formed?" Mr. Schwalbe replied:

"I know nothing of combinations, and anything along that line that is published is mere rumor."

"Are you negotiating with stars?" was another query put to Mr. Schwalbe.

"What stars?" he asked. "We have some stars."

Schwalbe Points with Pride.

And while Mr. Schwalbe is the most modest of men and not given to boasting, there was a distinct we-point-with-pride accent to his words "some stars."

"And we have a few theatres, too," he went on. "We are doing nicely all along the line. We also have some responsibilities, but withal we are doing well and are happy. New stars and new enterprises mean new responsibilities, and with those we might not be so happy. Why make ourselves unhappy?"

While there seems to be a general and widespread belief in film circles that a combination or a merger of some sort between the First National and other concerns is probable, there is nothing to substantiate anything along this line in a statement of facts.

UNITED ARTISTS ASSOCIATION FORMED

Griffith, Chaplin, Pickford, Hart and Fairbanks Organize Producing and Distributing Company

Hollywood, Cal., January 15.

MARY PICKFORD, William S. Hart, Douglas Fairbanks, Charles Chaplin and D. W. Griffith will withdraw from all producing and distributing organizations when their several contracts, which are rapidly drawing to a close, have expired.

The United Artists' Association was formed at a meeting composed of the above named players held at the residence of Sidney Chaplin on the night of January 14.

The following statements were made in the articles of agreement signed by all members:

"We believe this step necessary to protect ourselves, as well as the exhibitors who play our pictures, from injurious combinations between the various producing concerns now operating and to protect the exhibitor from having poor pictures forced upon him.

"Douglas Fairbanks, whose contract expires in February, will be the first member of the association to begin independent producing and distributing operations.

"As soon as the contracts of four others expire they will also produce and distribute through the association."

The Executive Board of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit is still in session.

Sid Chaplin has signed for two five-reel light comedies.

Persistent rumors of combinations between the First National and other producing concerns, particularly Famous Players-Lasky, are denied on all hands.

Charles Chaplin has announced that his studio will be closed while he and his wife make an extended honeymoon trip to Europe. J. D. Williams, manager of the First National, says Chaplin's status with his organization is definite.

Chaplin has two more pictures ready for the finishing touches. Two more will be made in Europe, one in England and one in France. GIEBLER.

TWO PITTSBURGH FILM MEN DIE IN FIRE

Peter J. Stockey Is Instantly Killed and C. F. Michaels Succumbs to Burns—Additional Details

ONE of the most disastrous fires that ever visited the film industry occurred Tuesday afternoon, January 7, shortly before 5 o'clock at the Sauer Building, 804 Penn avenue, Pittsburgh. The building is a total wreck and the damage is estimated at $1,000,000, $700,000 of which is films alone.

Ten persons are dead and a large number wounded as a result of the blaze. Its exact origin has not as yet been determined at this writing—in fact, it is not likely that it ever will be. Rumors state that it started on various floors, but owing to the speed at which the fire spread, there was no time to investigate. Four investigations are being made to find the parties guilty of starting the fire. City, county, State and federal authorities are making investigations.

Most of the casualties were due to the victims' jumping from the upper floors, and most of the dead are apparently not those having been employed in the film exchanges.

The building, which was one of seven stories, housed the following exchanges: Exhibitors' Mutual Distributing Corporation, Hudson Feature Film Company, Pyramid Motion Picture Advertising Company, Bell Film Exchange, Michaels Exchange, Keystone Film Service, S. & S. Film and Supply Company, Inc.; Superior Skirt Company, West Disinfecting Company, and Pittsburgh Monotype Company.

It is thought the first explosion occurred on the fourth floor at the Keystone Film Service. The impact was so terrific that the entire rear wall was blown out as if it had been a piece of paper. Immediately the films on the second floor, occupied by the Mutual, let go with a bang that was heard all over Pittsburgh and smashed every window within a radius of two blocks. By this time the building was a seething furnace, and all escape cut off. Many of the one hundred and twenty-five persons in the building were fortunate enough to escape over the roof and by jumping, but others were not so fortunate.

Two Film Men Dead.

At the present time only two film men are known to be dead. They are C. F. Michaels and Peter J. Stockey. C. F. Michaels, who was burned so badly that he succumbed at the hospital the next evening, was owner and manager of the Michaels Exchange, and also managed two theatres on the Southside, the Strand and K. & K. Michaels also had an interest in the Bell Film Exchange here. P. J. Stockey is a Cleveland man, formerly manager of the Bell Exchange there, and was in Pittsburgh conferring with Mr. Michaels and other business associates at the time of the fatal explosion and was instantly killed.

Among the injured are the following: A. W. Cross, lacerated head and dislocated shoulder; George Anthony, of the Bell Exchange; Charles S. Casanave, cut on face and hands, not considered serious; W. H. Rippard, manager of the Mutual, cut and slightly burned; Miss Alice Keenan, stenographer for the Hudson Exchange, internal injuries; Miss Clara Berger, Mutual poster clerk, left leg fractured; Miss R. Berger, Mutual booker, internal injuries; Miss Rose Rapkin, S. & S. stenographer, hands and arms cut; Fred Lacey, Mutual shipper, burned; M. L. Schoenfield, booker for Michaels, badly burned. Practically all of them were declared out of danger at the various hospitals by Friday morning.

FAIRBANKS MAKING MORALE PICTURES

Artcraft Star to Produce Series of Subjects Reflecting the Spirit of an Awakened America

MOTION PICTURES helped a lot in winning the war. They are to play a still greater part in re-establishing peace. The newly created morale division of the War Department will rely to a great extent on pictures to enlist the enthusiastic co-operation of citizens and soldiery in what now needs to be done and the spirit in which we should all set about it.

Brigadier-General Munson is head of this Morale Division and Raymond D. Fosdick, chairman of the Committee on Training Camp Activities, is next in command. Douglas Farbanks, the Artcraft star, is making a series of photoplays, the first having been nearly completed. This new project, as he outlined it, seems very wise and wide in scope. "Yes," said Doug, "I'm at work for the Government at present. I've dropped all other plans for the time being.

"The Government realizes there is to be a new deal all round. Presently we will have with us upward of two million men in the prime of life and the pink of condition, in whom war has developed a habit of thinking and an appreciation of the use and beauty of team work. The adventure from which they are returning will incline them to new adventures opening up everywhere. We've got to feed the world, pretty nearly—anyhow for the next two years. We've got to supply most of the material and a good deal of the man power of restoration of ruined France and Belgium. We've got to be the leaders, and we can.

"But we've got to be prepared. We have to learn a lot. We're just beginning to get a glimpse, a vague notion of our destiny. We must acquire real, useful knowledge. We must speed up, but wisely. There's hardly an industry in the land developed to more than 20 per cent. of its possibilities. Transportation needs overhauling—no, that's no pun, and it doesn't relate to aeroplane freight either, although that is one of the next big things we shall see. And travel by the air lanes—but I don't want to say much about that now, although I can promise you a story that is likely to startle the world when Uncle Sam is ready to make public the work he has now well in hand.

"So the War Department laid down four principles for my guidance and told me to get busy. These principles are 'Purity of purpose,' 'cheerfulness,' 'steadfastness' and 'willingness to sacrifice.'"

"Little Mary" is godmother of the 143d and journeyed to Oakland, Cal., to greet them upon their arrival from France.

Norma Talmadge Buys "Nancy Lee."

The Norma Talmadge Film Corporation has purchased the motion picture rights of Eugene Walter's successful drama, "Nancy Lee," which played at the Hudson Theatre, this city, for two prosperous seasons. In the Broadway production the role of Nancy, in which Miss Talmadge will appear, was played by Charlotte Walker.

PUTTING OVER A SMALL TOWN SHOW

Portland, Oregon, Is Not in That Category, but "No Bull" Noble and Manager Myrick of the Liberty Just "Play" Their Facilities Are Limited and Get Over Big

I'M going to be a typical small town exhibitor for one week. I'll forget that I ever saw Portland, Oregon. or Seattle, or San Francisco, or shots of Broadway in a news weekly. I'm just a thorough country town theatre manager, with seats to fill and a special feature to sell. Let's go."

The involutionist was Paul Emerson Noble, better known as "No Bull" Noble, advertising manager of the Liberty Theatre of Portland, Oregon.

"What's the big idea? Portland's not a country town." E. J. Meyrick, manager of the Liberty, asked the question.

"Just this," continued "No Bull" Noble. "The small town exhibitor thinks that the chaps in the big cities have it all over him in opportunities and materials for big promotional campaigns on pictures. Maybe he is right. But I doubt it. And I am going to take one production and do nothing on it in the way of advertising that I could not do if I were in a typical small country town."

"What do you want to do, bankrupt the Liberty for a week?" Meyrick asked.

"No, we won't lose much, and perhaps we'll gain a lot. It won't hurt either of us to step out of the accustomed path on one production. Perhaps we'll get a little inspiration as the premium for our nerve."

Novelty an Asset to Show Game.

"You'll probably get inspiration, all right," rejoined Meyrick, "but it'll come from Jensen and Von Herberg, and it will be a polite hint to both of us to stick close to the metropolitan fireside of exhibitor tactics."

"Aw, come on in. We'll both smoke this town up a little. Novelty is a great asset in the show game. I'll bet you a dinner that if you make up as a small town exhibitor for one week you will surprise yourself when you count up the receipts on Saturday night. Let's go!"

"All right, Paul. I'm with you. Let's go!"

There begins the story. It developed a lot of interesting features, all of which are embraced in the daily dialogues between Noble and Meyrick. In the characters of average small town exhibitors they first proceeded to attempt the solution of a problem that had vexed both of them for weeks.

"Do you remember how I sat down in the audience one night," Meyrick asked, "and found that there wasn't as much of the friendly spirit among the patrons as we figured there should be?"

"Yes," answered Noble. "You mean that they were all acting as strangers to one another, rather as though they were foreigners in a strange land and weren't certain about the customs."

"Something like that. They didn't pull together exactly in the big moments of the picture. Some were enthusiastic, and others weren't. They all liked the program, but they didn't all say so with applause."

Capitalizing Community Singing.

"All right," continued Noble. "That's a typical small town exhibitor problem. Let's call the effort—'Getting Them Warmed Up.' How about a series of specially written slides, to take advantage of this epidemic of Community Singing that is sweeping the Coast?"

"Sounds good. Let's go!"

Equipped with a press sheet on "The Romance of Tarzan," the First National release on which they were making their experiment as small town exhibitors handling a metropolitan house and doing nothing to promote the production that a small town exhibitor could not do in the same way, at approximately the same cost, they sought Mr. Murtagh, the organist of the Liberty Theatre. He volunteered to write the verses. And he succeeded in getting into each of them a touch of comedy, a swing and lilt really infectuous with the audience, and, most important of all, just enough suggestion of big entertainment possibilities in the production to make every patron who read the words on the screen, or who sang them with the remainder of the audience, determine then and there that he or she would be at the Liberty when the sequel to "Tarzan of The Apes" was showing. The verses were:

Just Whistle This to Yourself.

Dear old Tarzan—
His skull is five feet thick!
He'd think you were flirting
If you hit him with a brick.
The way to hurt his feelings
And to make him long for home
Is to take a locomotive
And drop it on his dome.

Dear old Tarzan—
He never felt at ease
Until he'd had his morning walk
Across the tops of trees.
Like Eva Tanguay—he don't care;
From tree to tree he skips
But—(and this is confidential)
I'd like to see him slip.

Handsome Tarzan—
The simple life for him!
He didn't care for baths,
But every month he took a swim.
He'd never had a haircut
On that far off desert isle—
Heaven help the barber's union
If Tarzan sets the style.

Dear old Tarzan—
No silly dude was he.
He didn't own a wristwatch
And he knew not B. V. D.'s.
He never wore a hard-boiled shirt
Until he traveled west
(Ah! 'Tis sad to see a stout guy
Dolled up in evening dress)."

Dear old Tarzan—
(Oh, Death, where is thy sting!)
He had no ear for music,
But he dearly loved to sing.
And with his friend the elephant
Would sing duets so gay
When these two Carusos warbled
It spoiled a perfect day.

And Then There Was the Lobby!

In addition to writing the verses, Murtagh composed a good swinging tune which he played for the accompaniment.

"That isn't beyond the province of a small town exhibitor," Noble declared. "Murtagh is not to be found in small towns, but there isn't a town on the map that hasn't a musical genius who has not improvised material of that kind."

Sample of Liberty Advertising.

The next item for consideration was the lobby. Here it was much harder to resist using the big city facilities available to them, but Noble and Meyrick stuck nobly to their resolution. Cutout figures of elephants, taken from twenty-four sheets, were mounted on compo board, and "dressed" with hand-painted titles. This, too, is possible for small town theatre managers. Next they used composite layouts, carefully mounted, for the one-sheet frames. These consisted of cutouts of Tarzan figures from the three-sheets, put on backgrounds of foliage and animals and tree trunks taken from the other three-sheet and the one-sheets. The effect was very unusual, and it caused considerable comment from passersby.

"That's something any exhibitor can do," Meyrick remarked as they stood back and viewed the result. "It takes scissors, paste, patience, care and a little dark paint to soften the joined places. We're still inside the limits of our possibilities. What's next?"

Use Spotlight and Color Wheel.

"Get some snap into those elephant cutouts. Let's use a spotlight, focused from the Imperial Hotel, across the street. No country town is without a spotlight. Exhibitors would know where to get them. The flood lights under the marquis and lobby arch won't be enough." So the spotlight was placed on the third floor of the Imperial Hotel. The use of a color wheel helped to get tremendous attention for the display.

"Now for some jungle atmosphere," continued Noble. "A few ferns and flower baskets, hung from the marquis, or placed just inside the lobby, will bring the tropical achievements of nature right to our door." And it was done, still with the small town exhibitor limitation in mind.

"Next," Noble went on, "will be the newspaper advertising. Now, boy, we have an unlimited field, excepting that the small town newspaper has no variety of type worth while; the small town exhibitor has no artist, no layout man, no engraver. Let's see what we can do."

Again the press sheet was consulted, and a selection made of several of the prepared line cuts, which were ordered from the First National exchange. For these Noble wrote copy which fitted with his advertising policy of "No Bull."

Still Inside the Limit.

"There," he commented as he surveyed the complete campaign, laid out on his desk. "There isn't a thing that the small town exhibitor can't get or create for himself. We're still inside the limit, and we have whipped three of the hardest promotional angles on any production. Now let's go, and see what happens."

The Liberty Theatre seats nineteen hundred people. And nineteen hundred voices joined in the specially written Tarzan verses, while Murtagh supplied his own air for the words. Every night, for five nights, there was a new verse, and it went over big at each show.

"Gee," reflected Meyrick, "you'd think they were all brothers and sisters down there now, instead of husbands, wives and mothers-in-law. They're warmed up fine to the house and to the music and the screen."

"Yes, and the best of it is that any exhibitor with six hundred seats or less in any size town could find someone, if he can't do it himself, to duplicate this stunt with the same result. Maybe he hasn't a pipe organ, but he's got a piano to lead."

And then, with promotional methods which, as both Noble and Meyrick had agreed, at the start of their work, should be only those that any exhibitor, in any community in the country, could devise, they saw a line averaging from one block to a block and a half long, waiting in front of the theatre from 10:30 in the morning throughout the day, to see a picture which had received no advance advertising or publicity savoring of exceptional facilities or unusual talent not available in Dundee, Illinois, or Oskaloosa, Iowa.

TALKING IT OVER WITH A. P. KELLY

Author of the Stage Success, "Three Faces East," and Numerous Feature Pictures Compares the Construction of the Spoken Drama With That of the Silent Stage

By Edward Weitzel

TO be twenty-four, the highest paid and most sought after free-lance writer of screen fiction and the author of the "big money" war drama of the spoken stage is a position in the world of amusements that should satisfy any reasonable ambition. Asked if he were satisfied Anthony Paul Kelly admitted he felt grateful to a kindly disposed fate, but hoped to do better things in the future. Young Mr. Kelly is a modest man and it is not easy to make him talk about himself or his work. Asked his opinion on the difference between writing for the stage or the screen he pleaded having been too busy creating examples of both arts to find time for adequate analysis or comparison of the two subjects. The experience of the craftsman who fashioned "The Bar Sinister" and "Life's Greatest Problem," adapted "The Witching Hour" to the screen and gave the spoken stage "Three Faces East" was bound to be illuminative and of unique value, however, and so the interviewer proceeded to dig for information by a process of persistent interrogation.

Direct Examination.

"Have you been paying much attention to the articles by exhibitors demanding better pictures, that have appeared recently in the trade papers, Mr. Kelly?"

"No, I can't say that I have. I've been too busy trying to do the best I could with the orders I have on hand."

"Well, I have been analyzing picture construction for the last five years and I think you will agree with my convictions. If not, there will be a fine chance for an argument. Are you willing to submit to direct examination, as the lawyers put it?"

"That's what I'm here for."

"And you promise to tell the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but—?"

The witness broke into the question with:

"I don't think I know it—no one knows it—about the moving picture. But I'll answer to the best of my ability."

"Then you are bound to please the court of public opinion. I will put the first question":

Q.—Do you consider the experience you gained by writing "Three Faces East" and seeing it produced on the stage to be of help to you in your screen work?

A.—Very much so.

Q.—In what way?

A.—It has been an impressive object lesson on the importance of conceiving a drama in the right mood and sticking to that mood to the end.

Q.—You agree with me, then, that your play makes its appeal solely to the curiosity of an audience? That it is addressed to the intellect and not to the emotions, and seeing it played is like watching a game of chess?

A.—Yes. That is why the tempo is never speeded up. The audience is trying to solve a riddle and must not be distracted by hurried action, which is always directed at the emotions.

Q.—How will you apply this experience to the photoplay?

A.—By taking more precaution than ever that the screen story I decide on gets into its proper class—or mood—and stays there right up to the finish.

Q.—Do you hold to the theory—or fact, rather—that moving picture fiction is divided into two distinct classifications—the drama and the novel?

A.—There can be no question about it. Up to the present, however, very few writers or directors have kept the two forms distinct—including myself.

Anthony P. Kelly,

Who Was First a Scenarioist and Then the Author of a Reigning Broadway Stage Success. Represented in His Uniform as a Chief Petty Officer, U. S. N. Photographic Division.

Q.—Which form do you consider the more valuable to the screen?

A.—The drama.

Q.—Would you mind giving me your definition of drama as it is understood in its technical sense?

A.—It is the method by which the attention of an audience or body of spectators is absolutely controlled by the dramatist. This is a blanket statement, but it covers every phase of an art whose object is to give life to the men and women that people its stage.

"A Good Answer."

"'A good answer!' as Touchstone said," was the interviewer's comment, before putting the next question:

Q.—Have you noticed the absence of thrill in many so-called photoplays?

A.—Not to the extent that you have, probably—I don't see so many pictures. But I recognize the error of defying the laws of drama—unless the playwright is prepared to substitute intellectual appeal. The brilliancy of Shaw's dialogue makes up for the halts in the action.

Q.—For all that, you wouldn't want a steady diet of the Shaw school of play, would you?

A.—No, indeed.

Q.—Did you read the article in the Moving Picture World on "Scrapping the Old Rules?"

A.—Yes.

Q.—And you agree with me to disagree with the writer in Harper's, who gravely informs the budding photoplaywright that all the old rules of construction must be thrown upon the junkheap?

A.—By all means. Suspense and thrill can only be obtained by sticking to the principles of drama. The photonovel often interests and often contains patches of real drama, but these patches are present only when they have been constructed according to the old rules.

Re-Direct Examination.

"If you don't mind, Mr. Kelly, we'll go back to the first question asked you—the one about exhibitors demanding better pictures."

"You know more about it than I."

"There has been quite a little agitation in some quarters. Of course every one with the slightest comprehension of the great need of the screen knows that it requires a larger supply of suitable stories. It is also generally understood that this supply is exceedingly difficult to acquire; a condition making it imperative that every story be given the most expert handling while being fashioned into a scenario. The reverse is often true. Good stories are intrusted to continuity writers who have no sense of proper elimination and consider their task well performed if nothing is left to the imagination. It's true that the density of some people is appalling, but the average intellect is the one to go by. The primer grade of continuity may find favor with some spectators—do you see the cow?—it is a red cow—it has four legs—one on each corner—but not many persons are like the man who saw a picture in which the villain killed the father of the heroine, assaulted the girl and then forced her to get into a wagon and be driven away from her friends and the man she loves, and failed to get the connection between these incidents and the climax. It is shown that the heroine has managed to get hold of a dagger just before the start is made, and when the wagon is overtaken by a rescuing party the villain is sitting next to the girl—but he is dead—the dagger is buried in his heart. Turning to his companion this particular spectator asked resentfully, 'Who killed him?' Surely, Mr. Kelly, no one is ever asked to write down to that sort of mentality?"

A.—I hope not! The "happy medium" we're always hearing about is what I aim to hit. Well-made drama does away with the necessity for telling every trivial detail. Correct construction so holds the attention of the spectator that he has no time or inclination to demand further explanation.

Q.—Is there any room for an argument over the statement that by far the greater proportion of spectators go to the screen theatre and to the playhouse for emotional stimulation, and the more they receive the greater the success of the picture or the spoken play?

A.—Not the slightest. The big scene of a drama is always a vivid revelation of human nature, and the longer I work at scenario writing the higher my regard for its craftmanship.

Q.—So then, drama is the same thing whether on the stage or the screen?

A.—Precisely.

Q.—And the way to screen drama and better pictures is through better technic on the part of the scenario writer?

A.—Yes—and the same applies to the director.

POSTER'S MESSAGE MUST BE FORCEFUL

Otherwise Best Location Isn't Worth a Dollar, De Montluzin Tells the Associated Advertisers

AT a largely attended meeting of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, Inc., held at Wallick's, January 9, President P. A. Parsons in the chair, a lively discussion on the subject of poster advertising applied to motion pictures was participated in by nearly all the members. The discussion was led by Albert De Montluzin, general sales manager of the Poster Advertising Company, Inc., of New York, who was introduced by Paul Lazarus as the guest of the day.

Mr. De Montluzin, whose position at the head of his profession is recognized, dwelt at length upon the great advance made in the last few years in the art as well as the business of poster advertising. "The value of the twenty-four-sheet, six-sheet or one-sheet stand is measured only by the message placed upon it," he said. "The best location procurable is not worth a dollar if the message flared before the eye of the public is not one of commanding force. The poster man himself has improved the physical side of the business. He has evolved the indestructible steel stand. He has raised it up out of the weeds and out of the dirt of the street and has placed it where the view of the passer-by is unobstructed and he has made of it to a certain extent a thing of beauty.

Strength and Simplicity Must Dominate.

"The advertiser is not keeping pace with this advance if he is not improving the quality of his message commensurately. The poster message must be strong and simple. Apply the law of elimination to the limit. Never approve a sketch. Ask yourself the question, 'What's wrong with it?' And find out what is wrong with it before it is put up, for afterward it will be too late."

President Parsons read the following letter from Ralph Ruffner, manager of the Rialto Theatre, Butte, Mont., who addressed the association while in New York recently:

"May I ask that you convey to the members of the A. M. P. A. the deep gratitude I feel over their kingly good fellowship extended to my humble self on the occasion of my recent visit? I am merely asking that you repeat the same expression I gave vent to at the time. The boys may all be Easterners, but the atmosphere was so cordially Western in spirit that I felt 'all fired' at home. Many questions were asked to which I know I did not give a clear, definite, intelligent reply, but it may have been due to the fact that I failed to catch properly the questions as they were put, and I realized this fully after I had time to gather my thoughts.

The Needs Are Mutual.

"We cannot get along without the loyal assistance of the gentlemen who compose your membership any more than you can get along without the exhibitor, and how much better we can work and direct our individual efforts when we understand the problems which confront both sides! If I gained nothing more on my trip, meeting with you all established the conviction that my troubles in the past were due almost entirely to faulty distribution—that the stuff had been turned out by you gentlemen, but had become lost in the channels of faulty distribution, and for that you cannot be held responsible.

"I promised faithfully, and I fully intended to keep that promise, to call upon every gentleman who had invited me to call, but multitudinous duties of sightseeing and a host of big-hearted guys making dates for me completely upset all plans, and through you as president must I ask that an apology be extended for this neglect on my part. A whole handful of good things to every last man on the ship, now and always."

DANCE IN HONOR OF MRS. OUIMET.

L. E. Ouimet, president and general manager of the Specialty Film Import, Limited, of Montreal, controlling the Pathe and American Film productions, gave a dance for the trade and exhibitors at Auditorium Hall on January 6. The affair was held in honor of Mrs. Ouimet, who is about to take a trip to California.

Among the list of exhibitors present were George Nicholas, manager of the Strand; Frank Warnicker, manager of the Regent; Henri Jodin, manager of the Moulin Rouge; A. St. Germain, proprietor of the Crystal and Mount Royal Theatres; H. Desjardins, proprietor of the Victor Theatre, and Mr. Mills, manager of Loew's million dollar house.

Among the exchangemen present were Mr. Hazza, manager of the Canadian Universal; J. O'Loughlin, manager of the Regal Film; Maurice West, manager of the Fox, and Charlie Lalumiere, manager of the Specialty Film Import, Ltd., Montreal branch.

Fox Continues Taking Back Soldiers.

The William Fox policy of taking back all men who left the organization to enter the army is being lived up to. Leon Bamberger, formerly head of the contract department, who entered the army last September and was sent to Camp Greene, S. C., has been honorably discharged and is once more in the Fox fold.

Another to return is Sergeant M. G. Felder, formerly of the New York exchange, who enlisted in September, 1917. He was sent to Camp Upton, where he was placed in charge of motion picture entertainment at the camp theatre. Later he was transferred to the photographic division, Forty-eighth Service Company, Signal Corps, where he served as personnel officer. Discharged last month, Sergeant Felder is now back at the New York exchange.

ADJECTIVES IN ADS ARE NECESSARY

So Declares Robert H. Cochrane in Answer to Los Angeles Advertising Club, Which Would Minimize Use—He Has Tried All Kinds of Film Publicity, Too

By Walter K. Hill

WHEN news reached this coast last week that the Advetising Club of Los Angeles had launched a movement against an overplus of adjectives in film advertising, Moving Picture World was immediately interested. The added information that the Los Angeles club was asking the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World to cooperate with the west coast initiative made the matter become almost serious.

The first impulse was to interview the N. A. M. P. I., but that was not altogether practicable. Better still, see the first man who ever spent an atom of intelligence on the work of writing a film advertisement—R. H. Cochrane, now vice president of the Universal Film Company. Mr. Cochrane broke into the film publicity and advertising game at a time when the only moving picture words printed in newspapers of any sort were trade paper advertisements reading "Films for Rent," carrying those words only plus the address of the advertiser.

From that primitive start advertising and publicising has gone to such an extreme, as applies to films, that the Advertising Club of Los Angeles wants the advertising clubs of the world to protest "misleading advertising, the promotion of unknown and so-called stars and the featuring of unworthy pictures"! Our purpose of investigation led us straightway to Mr. Cochrane, and what we quote below is what we best remember of a conversation that covered not alone film advertising but the work of men who are, presumably, members of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World.

Deals with Two Factors.

"I am afraid these gentlemen are going against what we in the film business have already been through," said Mr. Cochrane. "Here in the Universal we have tried both kinds of advertising—the advancement and the suppression of adjectives in bringing our product before the exhibitor and the general public. There are two entirely different classes of readers to deal with in our work—the showman and the fan."

Asked to give an explanation of the difference in these two elements of human nature, Mr. Cochrane was ready in a jiffy with examples. He first cited the case of Bluebird photoplays when that brand was originated.

"You will remember," said Mr. Cochrane, "that our advertising policy conformed with what we believed indicated the class of Bluebirds. We used page 'inserts' in the trade papers comprising some of the most beautiful art work a film advertisement ever carried. Perhaps I might not confine my estimate exclusively to films; but at all events these 'inserts' were extremely beautiful and artistic and depended almost exclusively on the art drawing rather than adjectives to impress the exhibitor with the nature of Bluebird productions.

When Ideals Got a Jolt.

"After we had created no end of comment in the trade by the beauty of Bluebird advertising, our ideals received a severe jolt from a showman in the Middle West who wrote us in effect that if the time had come when Universal didn't have the nerve to say anything more about a photoplay than to print a pretty picture in the trade papers there must be something wrong with the product. Other letters of a similar nature had come to us from time to time but this particular exhibitor expressed his own mind and interpreted the minds of other exhibitors so clearly that—we went back to the use of adjectives and eliminated the fancy 'inserts.'

"Quite another remarkable demonstration came from the public," continued Mr. Cochrane. "When we first opened 'The Heart of Humanity' at the Broadway we handed cards to those who purchased tickets and asked them to indicate, in writing, their opinion of the picture. The net result was a pile of adjectives that we didn't have the courage to print. Finally we hit upon and idea, and I instructed our art department to form these contributions of adjectives into an advertisement that credited the various expressions to the men or women who wrote them, adding their street number and further address. That advertisement will go out with only one line we have written here in our publicity department and that line is: 'These Are Not Our Adjectives.'"

Films Hard Commodity to Sell.

When we asked Mr. Cochrane if in his opinion the writers of commercial advertisements never used exaggerations and adjectives he agreed that they did. "And if they wrote film advertisements they would still have to use adjectives," said Mr. Cochrane, "because selling films to the exhibitor and the public is even harder than selling articles of commerce."

He referred to the sentence in the Los Angeles story "the promotion of unknown and co-called stars," and continued:

"Every star is unknown until advertised, and every star is, in a very great majority of instances, created by advertising. Take our own stars like Dorothy Phillips, Harry Carey, Mildred Harris and the others. They were good players before we started to advertise them, but advertising has created the demand for them that exhibitors are expressing; and if the public did not come to the theatres where they played because the exhibitor advertised them, they would not last long as Universal stars.

"But we must be careful with our adjectives because to utterly misrepresent a film attraction would soon impair our profits. We may all have ideas that we would like to exploit but there has come to be a standard of honesty in all advertising that makes film advertisers beware of fooling the public. There is always someone or something that will compel an advertisement writer to use caution in handling adjectives.

"And so I repeat," concluded Mr. Cochrane, "these advertising clubs are going into something that we in the film game have lived through and tested out. Their conclusions will be interesting, and I am of the opinion that I have an idea in advance what they will be."

The World man got the impression that Mr. Cochrane agrees with the general proposition that adjectives are the best advertising—for films.

The subject remains open for an expression of opinion from any qualified source. We should be glad indeed to have the Advertising Club of Los Angeles contribute to the discussion.

Next week we shall present an article on the contrasting phases of film and commercial advertising, upholding the position taken by the Los Angeles club. Come on, then, the more the merrier and better!

The Rambler.

Tradition Balks Yankee Notion.

TERRY RAMSAY makes Edwin Mocsary, Rialto treasurer, tell this one: "A certain American advance man went to London about ten weeks ahead of a heavy attraction that was to open there at Queen's Halls, which as everyone knows is most imposing and dignified. Among other snappy ideas, our young friend suggested an electric sign announcing the coming of the show.

After five weeks of negotiation Lord B., head of the board of governors, called a special meeting at which the proposal was discussed "in camera." After the meeting Lord B. had the advance agent ushered in.

"You will be pleased I am sure," Lord B. began, "to note that the board holds that your electric sign idea is a jolly good one."

"Yes, yes, go on," urged the advance man.

"—But," continued Lord B., "we have decided after mature deliberation and with due respect to the traditions of Queen's Hall, that it would be too damned conspicuous."

Word from Joe Brandt, Universal's adjutant general, now at Universal City, is to the effect that Jim Corbett is taking to the films like a duck to water. Joe insists that he is not over-enthusiastic about the former "champeen boxer," but when Corbett's serial is released the public will find his praise of the star's work well merited. Brandt also states that the day he arrived Universal City looked like a field hospital due to the number of influenza cases among the players, but with the epidemic evidently at an end the Universal producing organization is again sparking on all twelve.

Putting Into Type the First Mistake a Printer Ever Made

FROM Beulah Livingston, who suffered at the hands of this department last week we have received the following protest:

"Since when have you taken to reading Gertrude Stein? I always thought you too original to copy any one else's style. Upon my word, I don't know whether you meant to convey some subtle compliment in this notice or whether I ought to get my lawyer after you!"

Someone else may have read the offending type; so in justice to Miss Livingston, the O'Brien Printing Company, and all others who believe that this is a sad old world we reproduce first the "gummed up" sentence and then the correct arrangement of words:

Here's How It Appeared.

THE sign capacity of the small exdisposition which has been recording Beulah Livingstone's inmost follow the lead of Metro in titling "The Great Victory, Wilson or the Kaiser, the Fall of the Hunzollerns."

Here's How It Was Writ.

THE sign capacity of the small exhibitor will be seriously taxed if all producers of pictures follow the lead of Metro in titling "The Great Victory, Wilson or the Kaiser, the Fall of the Hunzollerns."

We should use up too much of what we have left of life if we tried to explain in detail just how it all happened; so we dash at once into the dash:

POLITICAL POT BOILING AT ALBANY

Measure Introduced in Legislature Calling for a Commissioner of Pictures, a Large Staff, and with Great Powers—Sunday and Censorship Bills Expected

Albany, January 15.

By C. L. Grant

THE first move at Albany on motion picture legislation was made today, when a bill was introduced in the assembly by Assemblyman Brush. The measure creates a motion picture department headed by a commissioner to be known as the "Commissioner of Motion Pictures," to be appointed by the Governor with the consent of the Senate, for a term of five years and receiving an annual salary of $7,500. The commissioner can be removed by the Governor for inefficiency, neglect of duty or misconduct in office.

The Commissioner of Motion Pictures is empowered to appoint a secretary and such deputies, inspectors and other assistants as may be required, their salaries to be fixed within the limitations of an appropriation. The expenses of the commissioner, secretary, deputies and others will be paid by the State.

It is proposed to establish the principal office of the department in Albany, with a branch office in New York and others about the State as are found necessary, the branch in New York City being in charge of a deputy. The bill proposes to license producers, distributors, exhibitors and operators, after September 1, 1919. These licenses must be obtained from the commissioner, a separate exhibitor's license being required for each place of exhibition.

A License for Producers.

The proposed fees are the same as were proposed in the bill offered in the Assembly on April 12, 1917. A producer's license will cost an annual fee of $5, with an additional fee for each positive print for exhibition within the State of a picture produced by him within the State, based upon the footage cost of the negative of such positive print, in accordance with a schedule outlined.

A distributor's license will be $5 a year, with an additional fee for each positive print within the State except a positive in respect of which an additional producer's fee is payable under certain subdivisions of the proposed law.

An exhibitor's license will be $5 for the year, with an additional fee for every positive used by him in the exhibition of the motion picture, except a positive in respect of which an additional producer's or distributor's fee is payable under certain subdivisions. Such additional fee for an exhibitor will be measured by the cost of production of the negative, at the same rate as the additional fee to the producer and distributor.

No person can operate a moving picture machine under the age of 21 years. An examination must also be taken.

The commissioner is also empowered to suppress what he may term as improper pictures.

In connection with the additional license fees, these are to be based on the cost of producing the negative and will be as follows:

Schedule.

If $2.50 or less, one-tenth of a cent per foot.

If more than $2.50 and not more than $5, one-fifth of a cent per foot.

If more than $5 and not more than $7.50, three-tenths of a cent per foot.

If more than $7.50 and not more than $10, four-tenths of a cent per foot.

If more than $10, one-half cent per foot.

If the bill passes and becomes a law, it will become effective September 1, 1919. The sum of $50,000 is appropriated by the bill in meeting the first year s expenses.

ALBANY SEES TWO BIG PICTURE FIGHTS

Measures To Be Introduced Legalizing Sunday Shows and to Establish Bureau of Censorship

Albany, January 14.

TWO bills of vital interest to the motion picture industry will be introduced in the State Legislature during the next few weeks. One will seek to legalize Sunday movies throughout the State of New York, the other will seek the establishment of a bureau of censorship. This much has been definitely decided on. While the one will be opposed by many who term themselves "reformers," the other will probably bring about opposition from the motion picture interests who are satisfied that pictures being shown in this state require no censorship. There is every indication of great activity preliminary to the actual introduction and thrashing out of these measures before the Senate and Assembly.

Up until a day or so ago little if any talk had been heard about the State Capitol in regard to the introduction of a moving picture censorship bill. But the Reform Bulletin, issued in this city, now comes forth and announces that "Seven great moral battles" will be before the Legislature at the present session. Included in this array of seven are the ratification of the national prohibition amendment; the law to enforce national prohibition amendment; a bill for the opening of motion picture theatres on Sunday; Sunday baseball bill; the prizefight law; a moving picture censorship bill, and a bill for the defence of direct primaries.

Censorship Move a Surprise.

While it has been understood all along that there was a strong possibility of legislation which would legalize the Sunday movie, the announcement of an introduction of a censorship bill in this state comes as a decided surprise. It is a well-known fact around the State Capitol that former Governor Charles S. Whitman, Speaker Thaddeus Sweet of the Assembly, and others in power, do not consider censorship along motion picture lines as necessary. It is considered doubtful if the measure gets much further than a committee, where it will die an unheralded death.

The so-called "reformers" think differently, however, and in conversation with a representative of the Moving Picture World, one of the leaders in the movement today said that he believed many of the juvenile crimes of today could be traced directly to pictures that depicted the burglarizing of houses and crimes of a similar nature. The effort to be made will be to eliminate such features hereafter from pictures thrown on the screens in this state.

That the reformers expect strong opposition to their efforts to do away with the Sunday motion picture show is very evident from their own words.

"This will be the greatest battle of the legislature, with the possible exception of the battle for the ratification of the prohibition amendment," says the Rev. O. R. Miller, state superintendent of the New York Civic League. "The movie crowd is making and for several months has been making extraordinary efforts for the passage of such a bill.

Reformers Worried Over Situation.

"The increasing number of cities and towns which, with the help of the New York Civic League, have suppressed or prevented the opening of motion picture theatres on Sunday have so aroused the motion picture trust that they are now spending enormous sums of money to secure the passage of a Sunday movie bill. We are greatly worried over the prospect and unless the Christian people, those who believe in the defense of the Christian Sabbath, write to their senators and assemblymen in overwhelming numbers this vicious bill will surely be passed.

"The movie crowd claim that three-fourths of the legislators before election promised to vote for such a bill. We cannot believe that statement, but if they did, many of them will not dare to keep such a bad promise if they receive hundreds of letters from their constituents urging them to vote against such a bill. If we legalize the opening of motion picture theatres on Sunday that will be the entering wedge to split wide open the Christian Sabbath and make possible the legalizing of every other public amusement and sport on the Lord's day in our state."

DENVER HOUSES SUFFER BIG FLU LOSS

Managers of Picture Theatres on Curtis Street Estimate Epidemic Shutdown Cost Them $100,000

THE influenza epidemic cost the Curtis Street motion picture theatres about $100,000, according to estimates by the managers of the picture houses. The theatres were closed five weeks—from October 6 to November 11—and for one week subsequent to the lifting of the ban all patrons and employes were compelled to wear masks. Up to the first week in December the houses did a business about 40 per cent. of normal, and the patronage now is about 80 per cent. of the average before the epidemic.

The vacillation of city officials regarding the ban was one of the chief causes of complaint on the part of the exhibitors. When it was first suggested that a closing order be issued, the principal theatre men notified Mayor Mills that they would shut their houses voluntarily rather than endanger a single life. But the order affected solely theatres and churches; all stores were permitted to operate without restrictions. One week after the ban had been lifted Dr. W. H. Sharpley, manager of health, on the advice of the medical advisory board, renewed the restrictions. Representatives of the 500 employes of the motion picture houses of Denver protested, declaring the order discriminatory, and the next day it was modified, with the provision that masks be worn in all theatres.

Rivoli, Isis and Strand Lose $42,000.

The closing order and the loss of business during the following five weeks cost $42,000 to the Rivoli, Isis and Strand Theatres, according to George Megahan, who shares with L. B. Brown the control of this string. Mr. Brown and Mr. Megahan recently bought the Isis from S. L. Baxter, a pioneer among Denver exhibitors. The closing order came just after Mr. Brown and Mr. Megahan had obtained control of the Rivoli, formerly the Paris, on which a large sum had been spent in remodeling and redecorating. Mr. Megahan declares that lack of co-operation on the part of distributors during the epidemic has been injurious to the motion picture business in Denver.

"Instead of showing a willingness to bear their share of the loss caused by the epidemic," Mr. Megahan said, "the distributors evidently believed the entire burden should fall on the exhibitors. In some instances the gross receipts of some of the theatres were not enough to pay film rental—and yet the distributing companies usually insisted on obtaining the full price paid under normal conditions."

H. E. Ellison of Greaves & Ellison, owners of the Princess and Rialto, looks for an early return to normal business conditions.

"We expect to do a normal business by February 1," said Mr. Ellison. "Stock show week is going to attract crowds to Denver, and the tourist business is going to be enormous this year. While the influenza epidemic hit the exhibitors hard I see no reason why the loss we suffered during 1918 should not be more than made up for this year."

Select to Release for 1919 All Norma Talmadge Output

SELECT announces that it has acquired by purchase exclusive ownership in all Norma Talmadge Select pictures. This includes not only all past pictures made for Select, but all Norma Talmadge subjects to be released during 1919.

This action has been taken by the Select company at very heavy cost in order completely to protect the exhibitors who hold contracts calling for the delivery of Norma Talmadge features. It is felt that this purchase by Select of the Norma Talmadge pictures will entirely remove any doubt in the minds of exhibitors as to the ability of Select to deliver Norma Talmadge pictures without interruption until 1920. Not only will Select be able to deliver to its customers all Talmadge productions during the current year, but these are the only Talmadge pictures which can be put out during the period named.

When inquiry was made at the Select offices if it were not a fact that Norma Talmadge's contract with Select did not expire until November, 1919, the answer was made that such was the fact. Confirmation on this point also was given by the First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

Restricts Running Time of Calgary Picture Theatres

CALGARY, Alberta, is another Canadian city which has taken steps to restrict the hours of operation of moving picture theatres as a result of the recent epidemic. The first definite move in this direction was made at Edmonton, where the exhibitors voluntarily decided to close their theatres each day between the hours of 5.30 p. m. and 7 p. m., after consulting with the local health authorities.

The Calgary Board of Health has issued an order prohibiting the operation of local theatres except between the hours of 2 and 5 p. m. and between 8 and 11 p. m. Further, the Calgary Board has prohibited the entry of any child under the age of fifteen years into any local theatre. Theatre managers are also required to display a notice to this effect in the lobbies of their theatres. Theatres must also be ventilated and disinfected at stated intervals, according to another clause of the order.

No intimation is given as to the period in which these regulations will be enforced and it is possible that Calgary theatres may be called upon to observe the above hours more or less permanently.

Hugo Ballin Writes a Script.

Hugo Ballin, Goldwyn's distinguished art director, has turned his hand for the moment to playwriting. Madge Kennedy's next starring vehicle, now under way at Goldwyn's Culver City studios, is from his pen. It's title has not been announced, nor has a release date for it been set.

Mr. Ballin's name, thanks to his unusual and distinctive settings for productions made under the Goldwyn banner, is known to cinema patrons everywhere. In one or two plays he was co-director. But he vowed he wouldn't be wholly happy until he had written a scenario for his favorite star of the screen—Madge Kennedy. The result is now in the balance.

The World brings to exhibitors in small towns the best ideas of progressive showmen; ideas on advertising, promotion and theatre management that mean money in the box-office. Its subscription list includes the names of exhibitors in hundreds of towns that film salesmen never visit and to these managers its value is far in excess of the sum they pay for its weekly message.

The Motion Picture Exhibitor

HOOSIER SHOWMEN WANT SUNDAY SHOWS

Will Fight to Get Legislature Now in Session to Pass Measure Legalizing Opening on Sabbath

WITH the Indiana state legislature now in session at Indianapolis, numerous reports are in circulation throughout the state that the Hoosier exhibitors are planning to renew the fight for the passage of a law that would legalize the operation of motion picture shows on Sundays, but nothing definite in the matter has yet come to the surface.

The Sunday closing question, which has been argued pro and con in Indianapolis for many years, has always proved a rather ticklish proposition, and the exhibitors this year apparently intend to maintain an air of secrecy about whatever action is to be taken. Whether a bill is to be introduced that would legalize the shows or whether some kind of a compromise can be effected between the exhibitors and the ministers, who are united in opposition against any such movement, is not definitely known, but it is said on fairly reliable authority that the exhibitors have something of a "surprise" stored up their sleeves.

Ministers to Fight Legalization.

Although there has been nothing thus far that would indicate the exhibitors are intending to introduce a bill legalizing the Sunday shows, the ministers are perfecting plans for a determined drive against the passing of such a measure. The executive committee of the Indianapolis Church Federation, an organization composed of a number of protestant ministers, has passed a resolution placing the organization against the proposed measure on the ground that the legalizing of the Sunday shows would be a "step downward in the social life of the communities of the state and would cause a breaking down of the general observance of the Sabbath."

The members of the Indianapolis Ministerial Association, which organization passed a set of resolutions calling on Mayor Charles W. Jewett to enforce the Sunday closing law in Indianapolis, are also opposing the proposed bill. A committee from this organization called on Mayor Jewett last week and requested him to make a statement as to his policy in regard to the Sunday shows. The mayor promised that such a statement would be issued in a few days, but did not indicate what side of the issue he would favor.

Morton C. Pearson, secretary of the Indianapolis Church Federation, announced last week that he has taken the Sunday closing matter up with the Indiana Church Federation and that a vigorous fight, which probably will be state-wide, will be waged against the passage of such a bill.

The Hoosier exhibitors have not made known just what they intend to do in the matter, but it is a safe bet they are not losing any time in perfecting plans to see that some kind of a law legalizing the operation of Sunday shows is passed by the legislature.

Miami League to Change Name.

Although the work of the old Miami League of Ohio was considered effective by Dayton managers and exhibitors, and even though this organization was satisfying the need very well, it seems as though the progressive spirit has hit the exhibitors of Dayton, and they collectively are to change the old Miami Valley Exhibitors' League to a newer and better fraternity.

It seems that when the league was organized it covered the field well, but with the advancement in Dayton of the industry the rules and by-laws of the league became antiquated. The officers of the league knew this and for some time they have hankered for a complete change.

Several meetings have been held for this purpose and a committee to make over the by-laws and add new ones was created, consisting of Mark Gates, Al Kinzer, Val Rayburg, Clay Brehm, Elmer Rauh, James L. Weed and Julius Leopold. A meeting was held Friday, January 10, and reports were made by the different members as to their progress. A definite policy will be decided upon soon. A new departure for this organization will be the admittance of the "legitimate" managers and owners to membership.

Wichita Exhibitors' Body Elects.

Wichita, Kan., exhibitors have been able to act in concert during recent emergencies because they have a local organization. This organization is somewhat informal—it holds occasional meetings, the members talk things over, and so get an idea as to conditions, and as to the best thing for them to do individually.

At a recent annual meeting the following officers were elected: President, L. M. Miller, owner of Palace and Princess theatres; vice-president, Charles A.

Mary MacLaren and Jack Mulhall in "Creaking Stairs" (Universal).

urer, C. C. McCollister, Wichita Theatre. The occasional meetings have got the exhibitors into a friendly feeling for each other—and there is seldom any complaint of unfair competition or of the introduction of methods that will have a tendency to disrupt the business.

MANHATTAN LEAGUE ELECTS OFFICERS

Lee Ochs, the New President, Tells Score of Members Present That All Must Do Their Share

THE New York Exhibitors' League, Local No. 1, held its annual meeting for the election of officers for the ensuing year on Thursday afternoon, January 14. The president, John Manheimer, called the meeting to order.

Mr. Goldreyer nominated Lee A. Ochs for president. Mr. Ochs said he thought it would be unfair to elect anyone as president of the league before a thorough understanding of the league was brought to the attention of its members. It would be unfair to saddle any one with the presidency without funds. Now is the psychological moment to raise money. The league needs it. No organization could amount to anything without it. He thanked Mr. Goldreyer for placing him in nomination, but he would respectfully decline until he was assured that the exhibitors want an organization and will support it.

"We must have a decent clubhouse and the exhibitors must finance it to have a real exhibitors' body that will carry weight," said Mr. Ochs.

"It is necessary to make this showing of dignity and influence, otherwise it is fruitless to attempt it.

Mr. Ochs referred to the recent effort to raise $5,000 to carry this project out, fifty exhibitors subscribing $100 each. Only $900 was received, he said, and it was afterward returned to the donors. Continuing, he said he had hoped to see the president of the state league present at the meeting to explain his attitude and that of the state organization, its aims and general condition. He thought it was due the Manhattan local in particular and all the locals in general. He did not consider the state president stronger than the metropolitan league of New York. In conclusion he said we must know where the money is coming from to support the league. It is not very flourishing at the present time. When he left the presidency, after paying all indebtedness, it had $2,900 in the treasury.

Offers Support to Ochs.

Mr. Gerson said the exhibitors want Lee Ochs as president, and if he would accept the nomination they would support him financially and personally to the limit.

Mr. Manheimer took occasion to state that he had lost enthusiasm in the league because the state president had taken upon himself the responsibility of butting into the affairs of the local league during the recent epidemic by dealing with Commissioner Copeland, by what right Mr. Manheimer said he did not know, without consulting the local body. The state president had appointed a committee, of which he was one, to draw up a set of resolutions and by-laws for the league, and it had not been done, very much to his embarrassment. He did not think, under the circumstances, the league was in such a bad condition. He then assured Mr. Ochs of his full support.

Mr. Ochs said he certainly wished Mr. Cohen success in his purposes, which no doubt were meant for the best, but thought Mr. Cohen should have attended the meeting to explain them to his own league.

All Locals Should Be Consulted.

"Mr. Cohen thinks he is sufficient in himself and has taken over the duties of the whole committee on legislation, which was appointed at the last state convention at Albany, without consulting any of the other members," said Mr. Manheimer. "All locals should be consulted on legislation so that the most satisfactory bill may be drawn."

The nominations at this point were taken up and the following officers were unanimously elected: Lee A. Ochs, president; I. E. Harstall, first vice-president; Max Oestreiker, second vice-president; M. J. Gerson, financial secretary; Morris Needles, treasurer; Gus Koenigswald, sergeant at arms; Charles Haring, chairman of finance committee. Mr. Ochs was conducted to the chair and appointed the following members to fill out the finance committee; Charles man and Samuel Rhonheimer.

In his remarks as the new president, Mr. Ochs said: "The New York local must be taken into account in all legislative matters and everything else pertaining to the welfare of its members, and we shall see that it is. There is a whole lot of useless members in it now who must be weeded out. They are not of any material benefit. We must start right. All must help the president and they must make it part of their business to work. If one is willing to give his time others should not withhold theirs."

A motion was made by Mr. Manheimer to instruct the secretary to notify the state president to call a state convention in the near future. The motion was unanimously carried.

Mr. Ochs announced a meeting of the executive board which he would appoint to discuss plans for the future of the league, including new and up-to-date clubrooms. The meeting is to be held on Thursday morning, January 23. A general meeting to be held on Tuesday, January 28.

Those present were Ike Harstall, M. J. Gerson, Lee A. Ochs, Rudolph Sanders, Morris Needles, John Manheimer, Charles Waring, R. Rodney, John Oestreiker, Adolph Weiss, Samuel Rhonheimer, Al Hartsen, Gus Koenigswald, Henry Martineau, A. J. Stocheimer, Charles O'Reilly, Tom Howard, Charles Goldreyer, Otto Lederer, Charles Mayer and Frank Gorman.

TALBOT IS PRESIDENT OF OKLAHOMANS

Succeeds Momand, Who Becomes Secretary—Convention Well Attended—Reports Are Good

RALPH TALBOT of the Palace Theatre, Tulsa, is the new president of the Oklahoma Exhibitors' Association following the annual meeting of the organization held in the Lee Huckins Hotel, Oklahoma City, January 5 to 8.

Mr. Talbot, who is one of the best known motion picture exhibitors of the Southwest, succeeds A. B. Momand of the Odeon, Shawnee, who takes the place of secretary of the association. The other officers elected were: First vice president, Tom H. Boland, Empire Theatre, Oklahoma City; second vice president, S. H. Jones, Empire Theatre, Altus, Okla.; third vice president, J. W. McCall, Liberty Theatre, Oklahoma City; treasurer, George Pollard, Gem Theatre, Guthrie.

The convention was attended by some 300 exhibitors and their wives. The visitors had a first-class time with an entertainment program, including dancing, banquets and luncheons, and sightseeing trips about the Oklahoma metropolis.

The question of empowering the Vice Commission of Oklahoma to handle motion picture censorship was the main topic of discussion in the sessions, which were of an executive nature.

The vice commission plan, which it is not thought will ever become a law, allows any person by payment of the fee of $1 to become a contributing member of the commission. The powers of such a contributor would permit him to act as an amateur censor and file complaint against any picture which he might dislike.

Exhibitors point out that such an enactment would lay them open to innumerable cases of personal spite or whims and think that they might as well close up their places of business and have done with it if such a law goes into effect.

The influenza closing situation was reviewed at the meeting. Reports of the Chicago medical convention to the effect that closing the theatres had absolutely no effect in checking the "unknown disease" were discussed.

A big delegation of Dallas film exchange representatives were present at the convention, including Leroy Bickel, E. C. Leeves, Al Russell, Al Bartlett, Dave Prince, Louis Pelleran and others. The Dallas film men will back the Oklahoma exhibitors to the limit in seeing that they are not discriminated against in their line of business.

The trend of talk at the convention was ultra-optimistic. Oklahomans have forgotten the "flu", so exhibitors stated, and with full houses at present and similar promise for the future indicate one of the best year's business in the history of the state.

Some of the exhibitors attending the meeting were John Slocum, of Mangum; O. Gill, Hugo; J. H. Sticker, Sand Springs; Messrs. Williams and Walker, of Lawton; L. L. Cox, Ardmore; Al Derry, El Reno; J. Humphries, Miami; Art Hamley, Pauls Valley; L. W. Brophy, Muskogee; Foster McSwain, Ada; J. L. Murray, Chickasha; D. W. Jackson, Stillwater; A. Jackson, Pawhuska; J. Billings, Enid, and H. Waters, Purcell.

A special screening of "Virtuous Wives," arranged by the First National, was well attended.

Bronx Exhibitors Hold Election, Then Banquet

ON Tuesday evening, January 14, the Cinema Exhibitors' Association of the Bronx, New York City, held its seventh installation of officers and gave a banquet at Fleischman's. The officers are: John J. Wittman, president; Nathan Vinegrad, vice president; Henry Cole, executive secretary; Abe Suchman, treasurer; Herman Bolte, sergeant at arms; Isadore Rothman, Eddie Falter, Meyer Solomon, trustees, and Samuel Goldstein, attorney.

Among those present were: Sol Coleman, E. G. Ostrander, J. Morrison, Sam Ackerman, Charles Steinman, George Davis, Irving Rothenberg, John J. Wittman, Sol Levin, Edward G. Falter, Herman T. Bolte, Fred F. Bauer, John W. Brantigam, Morris J. Kleinmann, Chas. A. Goldreyer, Jack E. Wugerfeld, Abe Coleman, Charles Steiner, John Manheimer, A. J. Ronheimer.

Charles O'Reilly, Nathan Vinegrad, Henry Cole, Sam Berman, Judge Robitzeck, Sydney Cohen, E. I. Harstall, Jack Schwartz, H. Weisner, W. Kandall, Rudolph Sanders, Sidney Ascher, Matt Cohen and Sam Spedon of the Moving Picture World. The specially invited guests were: Hons. Henry Bruckner, Francis Martin, Louis Gebbs, Harry Robitzeck, John McGeehan, John Sexton and John Gilchrist.

Judge Harry Robitzeck acted as toastmaster at the banquet and in befitting words presented John J. Wittman with a diamond ring as a token of esteem and appreciation from the members of the Cinema Association. In similar fashion he presented Henry Cole with a gold octagonal watch from the members.

The menu was excellent and the attendance indicative of a flourishing exhibitors' organization in the Bronx, reflecting credit upon the executive ability of Messrs. Wittman and Cole, who have been re-elected for seven consecutive years. The "feed" was interspersed with speeches and cabaret.

Texas To Be the First To Try Film Air Route

TEXAS, the state of army flying fields, is going to be the first to establish a lightning air route film service from city to city. In Dallas, the hub of film distribution for the Southwest, the matter of airplane film transfer is already being seriously discussed. In South Texas between San Antonio and Houston it has already been tested out and found satisfactory.

Thousands of expert flying men are being discharged from Texas flying fields during the demobilization activity. Many of them are applying for jobs in the aerial mail service. Some of the expert flyers from Love Field, Dallas; Kelly Field, San Antonio; Call Field, Wichita Falls, and the field at Camp McArthur, Waco, have already consulted Dallas film exchange managers regarding the immediate establishment of an inter-city air service.

Between Houston and San Antonio the stunt has already been done. Early in January the screen telegram showing President Wilson's reception in France was rushed from Houston to the Liberty Theatre, San Antonio, by a flyer. The long transfer was merely the matter of an hour or so.

The Dallas Chamber of Commerce is interested in the proposition and recently made inquiry as to how many planes could be purchased from the government.

A film air service with Dallas as its center and extending to Little Rock and Oklahoma City to the north and Fort Worth, Waco, Houston, Galveston and San Antonio southward has already been mapped out on paper. Film exchange managers declare that the plan is entirely feasible should army airplanes be available now the fighting has stopped.

District of Columbia Men Have Important Session

THE question of censorship nationally and in North Carolina and Maryland was the principal topic of discussion at the meeting of the Washington Exchange Managers' Association held in the offices of the General Film Company, in Washington, D. C. A great deal of interest is now being taken in this organization by reason of the good work it has been able to accomplish, and at this meeting all but one of the exchanges in Washington were represented by their respective managers.

In opening the meeting President Smeltzer expressed his gratification on having all of the managers turn out as they had. It requires the active cooperation of all, he said, and it is unfair that a few or even a majority of the men should be doing the work that should be participated in by all. The men who shirk their responsibility are to be considered selfish.

Varner Writes of Censorship Threat.

A letter was received from Henry B. Varner, secretary-treasurer of the North Carolina Exhibitors' League, telling of the threatened censorship in that state. From Mr. Varner's letter it may be taken that some of the exhibitors in North Carolina are not alive to the situation. The exchange managers discussed the problem at length and will probably assist the theatre men in trying to discourage this unnecessary legislation.

However, in the event that a censorship law is passed, the North Carolina exhibitors will find their cost of doing business will be increased by the amount of expense produced by the law. The exchange managers feel that they will have to "charge back" to the exhibitors all outlays of censorship fees, etc.

The introduction of a National censorship bill in Congress was brought to the attention of the managers. They were informed that no action would be taken by the Committee on Education of the House of Representatives, to which the bill has been referred, at this session of Congress.

Considering Baltimore Branch.

The opening of a Baltimore branch of the association to look after matters generally of interest to the local exchanges was discussed and a committee, of which George F. Lenihan, Sidney E. Kent and Sam Flax are members, was appointed to go over the situation and bring in a report at a special meeting to be called later. The Baltimore office would literally be a service station. There is a large amount of business to be transacted in Baltimore and the managers have for some time been considering the need for direct representation.

Complaints were received from some of the Baltimore exhibitors against the present type of express service being rendered them, and asking the managers to assist them in bringing about a change.

C. F. O'Donnell, local representative of the United Picture Theatres of America, and W. L. White and H. I. Coleman of the Capital Film Company, were elected to membership. The association decided to send to all small towns in the territory, not already covered from New York, copies of the circular letter from the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, dealing with the influenza epidemic, together with reprints of the New York Times article, etc., on this subject.

LINZ.

Smith-Hughes Censor Bill Rears Head in Washington

CONGRESSMAN RANDALL, of California, the only prohibition member of the House of Representatives, predicts that the motion picture theatres are going to supplant the saloons of the country. But he spoils it all by introducing regulatory legislation of a type that will, in the end, do for motion picture films what prohibition legislation has done for the liquor traffic. There will be no limit to it all, and in the end instead of supplanting saloons there will be no motion picture shows.

Mr. Randall, just at a time when the producers and exhibitors are having their worries with other things, the influenza epidemics, tax bills in Congress, local legislation, the general upheaval of business which has followed the conclusion of the war, the closing of the military camps and cantonments from which the theatres have derived a large part of their wartime patronage, and many other similarly troublesome conditions, has introduced the old, worn-out Smith-Hughes bill which created such a furore among the reformers some years ago.

The sponsor of the bill, when interviewed by the Washington correspondent of the Moving Picture World, said there is a real need for censorship just now.

Mr. Randall was asked if the prohibition element in the capital was not back of this new move to put a censorship law on the statute books, and he replied that Dr. Wilbur F. Crafts and others were in favor of it and that gentleman had spoken to him about the bill.

Connelly Engaged to Support Nazimova.

Edward J. Connelly, one of the more brilliant character actors on the stage, has left for California to play General Jung-Lu, commander of the troops of the Dowager Empress of China, in the Nazimova production, "The Red Lantern."

Connelly was in the support of Nazimova in "Toys of Fate" and on the speaking stage supported the Russian star in New York in a series of Ibsen plays at the Plymouth Theatre, doing notable work as old Ekdall in "The Wild Duck."

PUTTING THE EDUCATIONAL ON THE MAP

George A. Skinner, President of Educational, Tells of His Company's Plans and Preparations

IN his office at the Educational Films Corporation of America at 729 Seventh avenue I found Henry McMahon handing out cruel treatment to a small and inoffensive typewriting machine. "Have a cigar?" invited Henry. I did, because Henry's smokes are invariably good.

"Now, what can I do for you?" he inquired. "Well," I modestly suggested, "you might give me a line on the educational situation as you see it and also tell me how you propose to get the right educational film into the hands of the right educator at the right time."

"Don't ask," said Henry. "Ask the boss. He can tell you all about it. Wait a minute an I'll introduce you to him." Which he did.

The boss was George A. Skinner, president of the Educational Films Corporation of America, who bears evidence of being an extremely live wire in a quiet, assured way.

"The trouble that has hampered the educational branch of the industry," said Mr. Skinner, "is the difficulty that educators have experienced in securing proper films with any degree of promptness and the lack of knowledge on the part of manufacturers and distributors regarding the needs, facilities and location of prospective purchasers and renters of such films among the educational institutions of this country.

Keeps Close Tabs on Field.

"This is where the Educational Film Corporation is particularly strong. We know accurately exactly which educational institutions are today in a position to utilize films advantageously in connection, with their curriculum and we know not only the nature of the subjects which they require but also their facilities for projecting and exhibiting them. Furthermore our records show what other institutions are contemplating courses of visual instruction and which of these would be liable to install proper apparatus if assured that their needs for the desired subjects could be supplied.

"On the other hand, we have accurate knowledge also of almost the entire available educational films already made, their makers, history and the net footage of each suitable for actual instructional work."

"The average educational, as shown in the picture theatre, is differently treated than it would be for pedagogical purposes. Still the real educational material is there and needs only to be edited and refilled to meet classroom requirements.

"We own outright the rights for post-theatre use of a large number of such subjects and these we are editing and titling in our own laboratory, as we recognize the importance of cutting out all extraneous matter and the necessity for self-explanatory titles in classroom work.

Specialists Do Editing and Titling.

"Our editing and titling is performed by scholars and scientific men whose viewpoint materially differs from that of the purveyor of amusement only, and who are in a position to meet the needs of educational institutions.

"At present we are particularly strong in natural history, physical geography, microscopy and biology. We have also acquired a rather comprehensive library of industrial and chemical subjects."

"And how about distribution?" I asked.

There was a twinkle in Mr. Skinner's eye. "I have been waiting for that question," he replied, "because on that rock most previous educational efforts have gone aground.

Educational Centers Represented.

"In the first place, we will utilize special departments installed by ourselves in suitable existing exchanges, and these departments will be in charge of competent educators who know the schoolman's needs and his language. Frankly, many of the difficulties in the past which existed between exchanges and the educational institution grew from the fact that the teacher did not understand the exchangman and the exchangman misunderstood the teacher.

"We have arranged for exchange representation in the following cities: Baltimore or Washington, Boston, Chicago, Cleveland, Dallas, Detroit, Indianapolis, Kansas City, New Orleans, Omaha, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh and San Francisco. This will bring our films into the educational centers of the country and permit the educators to inspect and order programs with the minimum of expense and delay.

"In addition our special representatives will call upon the various institutions of learning throughout the country, submitting subjects and assisting in the arrangement of special programs.

"And you might be interested in knowing that we pride ourselves on what we believe to be a somewhat novel policy in our endeavor to build for the future and our acceptance of the fact that there will be much work on our part and the lapse of a couple of years before we cash in on the enterprise." E. T. KEYSER.

Educational Campaign of Association Progressing

THE countrywide campaign of education instituted by the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry agitating in favor of keeping the motion picture theatres open as a means of combating the epidemic of influenza, the sustaining of public morale and the prevention of panic has been received with the greatest favor and enthusiasm by the exhibitors of the country.

The material sent out by the Association, consisting of a copy of a letter by Dr. Royal S. Copeland, Health Commissioner of New York City; a reprint of a long article in the New York Times; a chart and statistics provided by the United States Department of Commerce showing the comparatively small death rate of New York where the theatres remained open and the high death rate of the other first-class cities where the theatres were closed, filled the requirements of the exhibitors to impress their local health authorities with the futility of closing down the motion picture theatres as a means of combating the epidemic.

RUBBERNECKING IN FILMLAND

Los Angeles Correspondent Personally Conducts Our Readers Through the West Coast Studios

By Giebler

HERE we are, well over into the new year. Filmland has exchanged its Christmas presents, cashed its sock and glove coupons, made two or three entries in its new 1919 diaries and fallen off the water wagon.

Tom Ince has moved into his new studio; Harry Lehrman has a new press agent; Jim Corbett is in town, and Hollywood is full of tourists. And if it were not for the smudge pots we would be quite happy.

Smudge pots are used by orange growers in the battle with their ancient enemy, Jackson W. Frost, who comes along in the night and stings the little oranges and lemons.

A smudge pot is a cute little stove with a large open countenance, that burns crude oil. Twenty of the little stoves are used to an acre, and as there are several acres devoted to oranges, lemons and other citrus fruits hereabouts, the incense of these contrivances smells to heaven. The smoke dims the sunshine and makes our otherwise nice white cats look as though they had just stepped off the last train from Pittsburgh, and causes our Oriental population that is engaged in the laundry business to go mad with joy.

Sunshine Nothing; It's the Movies.

Speaking of tourists—the native sons and booster organizations would have the world believe that the tourists come to Southern California for the climate and the sunshine. Such is not the case; they come because of the movies.

Of course the sunshine and our well-known salubrious climate have something to do with the annual tourist crop, but the movies are the chief attraction.

The tourists wander around Hollywood in the neighborhood of the studios in bunches and family groups. Every time a girl with curls comes in or goes out of a studio, it is Mary Pickford; and no fat man dare show his head anywhere without having the words, "Hello, Roscoe," yelled at him in a dozen voices rich in Michigan and Iowa accents.

I talked to a tourist—a disappointed and disillusioned tourist who was standing in front of the Sunset studio.

"Is that a moving picture factory?'" he asked, pointing to the buildings.

"It is," I replied.

"Which one?" the tourist asked.

"This," I said, swelling with local pride, "is one of the famous places of Filmland. It is here that D. W. Griffith makes his movie masterpieces. It is here that Mary Pickford, Clara Kimball Young, Blanche Sweet and Dorothy Gish hold the mirror up to nature. It is here—"

The tourist interrupted me with a sigh.

Studios Damned Unimpressive!

"Brother," he said, "I'm what you'd call a movie fan. I go to the Bijoe Dream Theatre in Ypsilanti on the average of six nights a week, and I've seen so many fine scenes and fine houses, and parlors and drawing rooms and things, that I got the idea that the studios must be something grand. But—you'll excuse me," he said, "but everything is so damned unimpressive!"

Will the producers please take notice and spend some of the money they use on making their magnificent sets to embellish and adorn their studios for the benefit of these people who come all the way from Iowa and Michigan "for to admire and for to see"?

I visited the biggest star in Filmland this week. He was in his office at the studio, opening his mail, when I called. The most noticeable things about his attire were a tasty looking tie and a pair of heliotrope socks that looked new and Christmasy.

"Aha," I said, "Old Santa Claus has been here. Somebody's been giving you Christmas presents."

Why Roscoe Gets Handkerchiefs.

"Christmas presents nothing," said Fatty, modestly lowering the legs of his trousers. "Nobody gives me anything but handkerchiefs for Christmas, because handkerchiefs are the only ready-made things that fit me."

"How about mash notes?" I asked, indicating the letters on the desk. "Get many tender messages?"

"No. None of that, either," he said. "Comedians don't get that kind of stuff. It's the heroic boys who get the mushy missives."

Having no other opinion than that Roscoe was the soul of truth, I was getting ready to write a nice little piece about a star that does not get mash notes, but arouses only the emotion of laughter in his large following—when he opened a little package that spilled the beans.

The package came from Sacramento, or wherever automobile licenses come from, and contained the seals for 1919 license plates.

Fatty opened the package. The seals were wrapped in pale pink paper that emanated a delicate perfume. He looked at the paper, blushed and dropped it on the floor in a nonchalant manner.

I picked it up, and engrossed on the pale pink paper in deep purple ink, in feminine chirography, were the four letters "S. W. A. K."

And Why Kansans Are Heavy.

"Fatty," I said, "you can't put over this innocent stuff on me. You get 'em the same as the heroic boys! Let's look at some more."

He opened more letters. One said, "I like you and your acting fine. Please send pictures at once." Another wanted to know how much Arbuckle weighed, and did he think that being born in Kansas had anything to do with his averdupois, and didn't he think that all persons from Kansas were kind of solid so the cyclones wouldn't blow them away?

A lady from Arkansas was brief and to the point: "You are pleasing to the eye and interesting to all. Kindly send pictures of yourself and dog to myself and four for my cousins, Mary, Angeline, Betty and Josephine. Two of them to be of you with the dog, one of you without the dog and one of dog without you."

The next communication was from a florist—a bill. A letter from a chap in Texas said: "I am going to write some plays for you, not any Bo Brummel stuff, but just the stuff you want. Let me know at once if this is satisfactory. I mean business."

A damsel in Oregon said that a picture of Fatty that she had passepartouted and hung in an honored place on the parlor wall, had been stolen in the dead of night by a cousin. "To avoid family trouble will you send another picture with your name on the front and on the back?"

Four Thousand's a Lot of Money.

The next missive was of a financial nature and informed Fatty that a sum of money to the extent of four thousand dollars had been placed to his credit in the bank. A deep silence fell over the scene and the star exhibited more real emotion at the receipt of this news than any of the other communications had engendered.

When he recovered he opened another letter, which was in verse this time:

"That nobody loves a fat man,
"May, alas! be true.
"But these words, dear Roscoe,
"I'll never write of you."

"Touching stuff," he said, wiping away a hypocritical tear, then he picked up a regular billet doux that began "Dear Fattye" and wound up "Ever thine, Edythe."

After this we found a letter from a fellow in Ohio who said he weighed 412 pounds, was nineteen years old, and wanted a job working in the movies. "You'd be surprised to see how spry I am, and also how quick I can get over the ground. Saw you in The Cook and want to act with you. Also have a very funny face."

Luke Is NOT For Sale.

Another letter contained a little calendar about the size of a postage stamp—a fitting gift for a big chap like Fatty. Along with this came the tender sentiment "A little gift made large by love."

Luke, Fatty's dog, came in the office.

"I got a letter from a little girl in Texas yesterday," said Fatty, "offering me twenty-five dollars for Luke!"

"Think you'll take it?" I asked.

"Not twenty-five dollars," said Fatty emphatically, "nor twenty-five hundred dollars, unless I get so badly broke that I can't buy beans for myself and bones for Luke."

WHARTONS, OF ITHICA, REST ON OARS

Picture Production Plant Lying Idle Until Conditions in Industry Change for Better

ONE of the visitors at the office of Moving Picture World during the past week was Theodore Wharton, of Ithaca, who with his brother, Leopold, some years ago established the film producing establishment that has become so well known to the industry. Here numerous features and serials have been made, and the opinion of Mr. Wharton on the present and future of the industry is based upon years of practical experience as a director and producer of film attractions.

"Our plant is idle now," said Mr. Wharton in an interview. "We are not producing and don't intend to until conditions change in the industry. We don't know when that will be, but our plant is, meanwhile, ready and equipped to handle any kind of a picture that can be reduced to film. We have several of our productions going through the exchanges and are that much concerned in transient conditions—but that is all."

Asked what in his opinion was the general style of a picture that will longest endure, Mr. Wharton said:

"Pictures that appeal to the masses without insulting the classes. There is not enough of class population in this or any other country to get anywhere toward a profit for producer or exhibitor, but they must not be asked to look at pictures that insult their intelligence. There must be an appeal to the heart of the masses if a picture is going to get anywhere and pictures of that type must be made if moving picture conditions are going to improve. The pictures must be sensible and logical in theme, or else they will not reach the masses and they will insult the more intelligent element that looks to the screen for entertainment."

When he was asked why the Whartons had resigned from the National Association, Mr. Wharton said:

"Because the members of the association did not co-operate either with us or themselves. We were very much interested in the National Association and still believe that the proper organization would represent the salvation of the moving picture business. But there must be general co-operation among all the members for the greatest possible benefit to the entire organization and to the business in its entirety.

"The citizens of Ithaca," said Mr. Wharton at the conclusion of the interview, "the citizens of Ithaca have made the Whartons feel very much at home and very much a part of the city's progress as a commercial town as well as an educational center. Members of the profession are treated mighty fine by the people of Ithaca when they are making pictures at our plant, and everybody who has ever worked on a Wharton production wants to come back to Ithaca for that very reason. They are made welcome."

A. H. Brink has disposed of his interest in the Exhibitors-Mutual to H. C. Cromelius, C. C. Pettijohn and W. J. Clark. Mr. Brink found that to give his whole time to the Exhibitors-Mutual he would have to neglect his large insurance interests in Michigan. He was one of the original incorporators of the Exhibitors Affiliated and he thought as he was not a bona-fide exhibitor it would be best to transfer his holdings to those who were. Messrs. Cromelius, Pettijohn and Clark are part of the Consolidated Theatres Corporation of Detroit. Mr. Brink will be in consultation with the exhibitors for some time before leaving for his home at Grand Rapids.

CHICAGO OPERATORS MAKE NEW DEMAND

Peter J. Schaefer Thinks Matter Will Be Left to War Labor Board at Washington for Decision

THE original demand of the Chicago motion picture operators, made some time ago, was to break the agreement entered into in October, 1917, with the local organizations of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League and the American Exhibitors' Association. This agreement was known as the 75 cents an hour scale, and the operators demanded instead of $1.25 an hour and double time for Sundays and holidays.

After four conferences between the committee of the Allied Amusement Association and that of the operators' union no agreement was reached, and the spokesman for the operators' committee then served notice that if the committees could not agree quickly the officials of the operators' union would go out and sign up the exhibitors in Chicago individually to a new agreement.

At the time of writing it has been learned from a reliable source that the operators' union officials have drawn up a new agreement and have signed up over sixty Chicago exhibitors for the new scale of wages to be paid operators. This scale provides for 90 cents an hour straight, including both holidays and Sundays. It also provides that each operator shall be paid not less than for four hours a day for each day he works —that is, if he works less than four hours on any particular day he shall be paid for four hours.

Operators Sign Up Individuals.

The operators' union, in addition to the new scale of 90 cents an hour, demands that each operator employed in each house shall be paid 50 cents a week for each 100 seats in excess of 300. In other words, in a house of 1,000 seats each operator employed in that house, in addition to 90 cents an hour, will receive $3.50 extra.

Aside from the capacity tax, as above explained, the operators' present demand is as follows: A 33-hour a week shift would bring the operator $29.70 a week, the amount being reckoned on four hours a night and five hours extra for the matinee on Sunday. A house running evenings only and Saturday and Sunday matinees is figured as a total of 38 hours a week, which would bring the operator's pay to $34.20.

In a house working two shifts a day, on a five-hour basis each, the operators' pay would be $31.50 each, exclusive of the capacity tax.

The house running an eight-hour shift per day, or a total of 56 hours a week at 90 cents an hour, would make the operator's pay $50.40 a week, exclusive of the capacity tax.

There are two viewpoints to this proposed scale which demand special consideration. The exhibitor, for instance, is likely to be deterred under such conditions from building a large house with many seats owing to the fact that he will be taxed on his investment, which seems questionable legally. On the other hand, dissension and dissatisfaction will likely arise in the ranks of the operators, as the operators working in small houses, who are quite as competent as those who work in the large houses, are likely to be disinclined to accept a position in a small house while their more favored brethren are drawing down much larger wages in the large houses.

Schaefer Holds Daily Sessions.

Peter J. Schaefer, president of the Allied Amusement Association for some time past, has been holding daily conference with the committee appointed to represent the operators' union—Local 100, I. A. T. S. E. He states that it was shown by the operators' union that 60 per cent. of the operators in Chicago are employed in houses with only a seating capacity of 300, in which the operators can earn only $24.50 a week. It is the contention of the operators that a man cannot live at the present time on that amount and support his family.

When this view of conditions was presented to the Allied Amusement Association Mr. Schaefer states that it was the consensus of opinion of the members that these operators were entitled to a raise, and that the theatre owners were willing to give them a raise. It was then agreed that 10 cents an hour increase over the present scale should be paid.

Mr. Schaefer had called a meeting of the Allied Amusement Association for Monday, January 13, at Washington Hall, 19 West Adams street, when the whole question was to be reconsidered.

Mr. Schaefer believes that in all probability the matter will be referred to the War Labor Board at Washington for final adjustment.

Lieut. Victor Eubank.

Lieutenant Victor Eubank Is Back with Essanay

VICTOR EUBANK, who left the position of supervising director of the Essanay Film Manufacturing Company some months ago to enter the service of the United States as first lieutenant in the Signal Corps, has just returned to the Essanay Company in the same capacity, George K. Spoor, president of Essanay, having held the position open for him during his absence.

Mr. Eubank spent some time in the war college editing propaganda films and news releases from France. Later he was at Camp Meade, Maryland, and in the office of the chief signal officer in Washington, where he had supervision over all cameramen working on news pictures and propaganda films.

He was ordered to join the American Expeditionary Forces in France to take charge of photographic work abroad, and was at the port of embarkation at Hoboken awaiting transportation when the armistice was signed and he was recalled to Washington.

The war being virtually over he resigned and was made an officer in the reserve corps, returning to Chicago to take up his duties with the Essanay Film Company.

Mr. Eubank has been connected with Essanay for six years, first as business manager and later as supervising director.

Vod-a-Vil Movies Are to Be Latest Novelty on Screen

H. A. SPANUTH, president of the Commonwealth Pictures Corporation, has been working quietly and persistently for some time past on his latest idea, which is known to the trade as Spanuth's Original Vod-a-Vil Movies. The announcement that the First National Exhibitors' exchanges in Iowa, Kansas and Nebraska have already contracted for the output of this make for one year and that Sol Lesser has also contracted for the same period for his territory on the Pacific Coast is convincing evidence of the merit and popularity of these novelty pictures.

Mr. Spanuth tells me that he has now completed sufficient releases to supply exhibitors with one release a week for six consecutive months. He has arranged so that hundreds of the best current acts in vaudeville can be shown on the screen, with all the original artists appearing in their acts just as shown on the vaudeville stage.

Mr. Spanuth, who is personally handling this output from his Chicago office in the Consumers' Building, this city, in Indiana, Illinois and Wisconsin, states that Vod-a-Vil movies are proving very popular and that most of the better class houses are showing them. Present indications lead him to believe that exhibitors everywhere will demand his product just as soon as they learn their novelty and drawing value.

It is Mr. Spanuth's intention to open an exchange in New York for his product in the near future so as to meet the demand of exhibitors in New York and Eastern New Jersey. Soon afterward he will open offices in Pittsburgh and Philadelphia.

It will be remembered that Mr. Spanuth has the distinction of being the first producer who engaged a theatrical star to appear in moving pictures and that he also introduced five-reel features at a time when only two and three reels were being made. That he now brings to the screen nearly all the worthwhile acts in vaudeville is a further illustration of his original methods.

Mr. Spanuth is one of the pioneers in the business, having gained his first experience with the Niles Brothers in 1906. He was then about twenty-two years of age, so that he is still among the youngest men in the industry.

Famous Players-Lasky to Modernize Picture Reviews

THE Chicago exchange of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, 845 South Wabash avenue, gave the first of a series of "Smoker Reviews" for the special benefit of exhibitors at the "Little Artcraft Theatre" Tuesday, January 7, on the fifth floor of the building occupied by the company.

This, it must be understood distinctly, was not the customary trade showing of a number of new pictures for early release, but was intended also as an aid to exhibitors in the presentation possibilities of a picture subject in their theatres from the advertising standpoint.

The entire fifth floor of the big building was turned over to the trade, and displays of advertising matter of all kinds for the pictures shown were prominent. Among these were seen samples of various styles of lobby and theatre front frames, with photographs, paper, etc., got up for the pictures shown at the review.

W. L. Hill, manager of the publicity and service departments, was present everywhere on the occasion, offering suggestions and advice which have been made invaluable to customers from his long experience in the business.

Chicago exhibitors on this occasion thoroughly appreciated the new departure from old methods by overflowing the projection room. They expressed great satisfaction and much enthusiasm over Mr. Hill's innovation in the service work of his company, and its great success left no doubt of the wisdom of the move in the minds of the exchange officials.

Just before closing the review it was announced that Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew would be present at the next showing, Tuesday, January 14. On that occasion the new Paramount-Drew two-reel comedy, "Romance and Ring," by these popular comedians will be run off and a short address on Drew comedy work of the future will be made by Mr. Drew.

The Marquette, La Salle, Has Brainy Woman Owner

I HAD the pleasure of meeting last week Miss Olga Heilstedt, proprietor of the Marquette Theatre, La Salle, Ill., when she was paying a visit to the Universal exchange in the Consumers' Building. Miss Heilstedt purchased the Marquette about two years ago after it had proved a complete failure in the hands of two former owners.

Miss Heilstedt attributes her success chiefly to the care exercised in selecting programs, and she is largely guided by keeping in close touch with her patrons. She uses Universal, First National, Fox, Metro Classics and two International News Reels. Her program is changed daily excepting when Universal specials are run, and these are shown for two days.

The Marquette seats 440, and the admission is 15, 25 and 35 cents, according to the program. A large Seeburg organ and a four-piece orchestra plays the accompaniment to the pictures.

The competing houses are the La Salle and the Colonial, seating respectively 1,100 and 200 people. The Colonial is the leading house, but all three are showing to good business.

Miss Heilstedt is a constant reader of the Moving Picture World, which is her favorite trade paper.

To Call National Convention.

Peter J. Schaefer informed me Friday, January 10, that the reorganization of exhibitors throughout the country will be started with the material already at hand, and that the name of the amalgamated organization formed from the M. P. E. L. of A. and the A. E. A. will be the National Exhibitors' Association. Just as soon as the question between the Allied Amusement Association and the members of Local 110, I. A. T. S. E. is settled the work of reorganization will begin.

Mr. Schaefer intends to call a national convention of exhibitors in the near future, which will be held either in St. Louis or Chicago.

"Light of Western Stars" Draws Big.

"The Light of Western Stars," with Dustin Farnum and Kitty Gordon in the leading roles, showed to excellent business at the Ziegfeld Theatre during the week ending Friday, January 3. Manager I. E. Harmeyer of the Ziegfeld said to the writer concerning it: "One of the best western pictures ever put on at this house. It drew just about the same business as Griffith's 'The Greatest Thing in Life.'"

Vitagraph Exchange Notes.

E. F. Tarbell, formerly manager of Vitagraph's Pittsburgh office for one and a half years, was recently appointed manager of the Chicago office to succeed T. W. Chatburn, who is now division manager for Vitagraph in the west, with headquarters in Chicago.

F. W. Redfield, assistant manager of the Chicago office, was transferred to Pittsburgh to succeed Mr. Tarbell as manager there.

Mr. Tarbell, when seen last week, expressed himself as being very much satisfied with Chicago. He stated that the outlook is much brighter; in fact, it never looked brighter, and he is looking forward to the biggest year in the history of the Vitagraph company.

T. E. Delaney, formerly city salesman in the Vitagraph Chicago office, has been promoted to the position of assistant manager, and his place has been filled by H. A. Holah.

Genuine War Pictures in Big Demand, Says Sullivan

DENIS J. SULLIVAN, manager of the Department of Domestic Distribution of the Division of Films, is another of those who takes the position that there has been no lessening in the interest in war pictures. While Mr. Sullivan is not interested at this time in forming a prognosis of the popularity of fictional war dramas on the screen, he is in the best possible position to know the pulse of the public on real war action pictures such as those taken by the United States Signal Corps photographers in France, such pictures as "America's Answer" and "Under Four Flags."

On the subjects of war pictures, Mr. Sullivan writes: "I have noted that there has been much discussion in the industry on the subject of the popularity or non-popularity just at this time of war pictures. It might be worthy of comment, so far as war fictional dramas are concerned, that they are still being booked and still being shown to good business, so it would seem that they are still in demand and will be as long as the stories are good and the productions have the proper artistic merits.

Real War Films Still Go.

"And I can say positively from daily observation and close touch with the subject, that the real war pictures, those of the Government showing scenes in France and the participation of the United States in the war, the several pictures released by the Division of Films are still in great demand. This is evidenced every day by statistical reports on bookings. 'America's Answer,' the second Official War Picture has already hung up an enviable record for bookings and they are coming in now at the rate of one hundred and fifty a week.

"The Domestic Distribution Department of the Division of Films is much gratified with the manner in which bookings are coming in for the third Official War Picture, the Government's great victory film, "Under Four Flags." Although it was released only January 6, the bookings are coming in at a rapid rate.

"From present indications it is safe to say that "Under Four Flags" will outbook "America's Answer" by a large margin and will have a larger distribution and be witnessed by more people than any other production released by the Division of Films."

The motion picture theatre can be just as essential in peace as in war if you run the right sort of a house. Make it more than ever your community centre.

News of Los Angeles and Vicinity

By A. H. GIEBLER

Abrams and Schulberg Arrive.

IRAM ABRAMS and Benjamin Schulberg have arrived in Los Angeles after a most trying trip across the country on which they suffered from snowbound trains and various discomforts incidental to transcontinental travel in the winter time.

Mr. Abrams says that it is too early to make any definite statement of their plans, but admits that he and Mr. Schulberg are in Los Angeles for the purpose of perfecting the plans of an organization that will be operating shortly. He also declares that the prospects for the picture industry never looked brighter. "It is history-making time," he said. "Important factors are working, and combinations are forming and taking place that will mean much to the future of the industry in all its branches."

Giblyn Looking for Studio Space.

Charles Giblyn, formerly well known in both stage and screen circles in Los Angeles, has come from New York as vice president and director general of the new Selznick, Inc., of which Myron Selznick is president, and is looking about for studio space to begin production on the Olive Thomas vehicle, "Upstairs and Down," which will be one of of the first offerings of the new organization.

Miss Thomas and her company are expected in a few days, when Giblyn hopes to have everything ready to begin shooting without unnecessary delay.

Preview at Tally's.

A private showing of "Virtuous Wives" was given at Tally's Broadway Theatre before the feature was put on for a regular run to a number of invited guests, including Anita Stewart, star of the film, and all the members of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit who were in town.

Moving Day for Ince.

The Thomas H. Ince forces moved early in the new year from the old Biograph studio at Georgia and Girard streets in Los Angeles, to the handsome and up-to-date new plant just completed at Culver City.

The administration building of the new studio, which is built on the Colonial plan and closely resembles the home of George Washington at Mount Vernon, occupies a frontage of more than 250 feet, leaving a twenty-foot space of lawn at each side. The lawn is decorated with fruit trees and flowering foliage.

The street, which runs on the north side of the studio, has been officially named Ince Boulevard. The city already has passed an ordinance for paving and lighting the roadway.

From the street the place looks like the very handsome residence of a man of wealth, but out into the lot in the rear of the structure is seen the busy movie factory with its large stages, shops and other buildings.

The "mansion" houses all the offices and administration departments, and conveniently near are the dressing rooms, scene docks, property rooms, stages and wardrobe buildings.

Besides all the modern technical appliances for moving picture making the new Ince plant will have its own electric light plant, its own water works, and its own fire department.

Three companies are already at work at the new studio, Charles Ray's, Dorothy Dalton's and Snid Bennett's, and during the year Mr. Ince plans to complete some thirty-two Artcraft and Paramount productions, and perhaps a number of special features.

Noted Foreigners Visit U City.

Universal City was visited by two notable foreigners during the week of January 6. The first visitor was Sageru Numata, national photoplay censor of Japan and committee chief of the Imperial Japanese Government's Department of Education, who arrived in Los Angeles from San Francisco a few days before his visit to the photoplay city.

Mr. Numata was deeply interested in the American method of making photoplays, and he particularly wanted to meet Mary MacLaren, as her recent picture, "Shoes," made a decided hit in his country, each person seeing the picture at least six times, he said, because shoes, as worn by Americans, are mostly a novelty to his countrymen.

The other visitor of importance was the Hon. Frederic Oederlin, Swiss Charge d'Affaires in the United States. He was accompanied by Henri Junod, Swiss consul in New York, and by Sidney Grant, actor, a personal friend of M. Junod.

Harry Harvey, who was filming a scene while the visitors were there, persuaded them to pose for about a hundred feet of film, which will be sent to Switzerland to the Universal agents for that country.

Wife of Walter Long Dies.

Mrs. Walter Long, wife of the film actor of that name, died at her home in Los Angeles on January 6 of pneumonia, following an attack of influenza. Walter Long had obtained a captaincy in the army and had just recently returned from service in one of the western cantonments. Mrs. Long was an actress.

sacre" scene for the Selig production, "Ravished Armenia," now in course of filming at the Mission Road studio.

The scenes were filmed in the dry sand bed of the San Fernando River near Newhall, Cal., where the location was ideal for the ferocious Turks and Kurds to drive the ragged army of Armenians with their bundles, and some of them dragging small children, over the stony roads and byways of the desert.

Among the thousands of participating Armenians were many who had actually lived the scenes that were enacted before the camera that day. Several women whose relatives had perished under the sword of the Turk were overcome by the mimic spectacles of torture and infamy imposed upon their countrymen.

Colonel W. N. Selig furnished a picnic luncheon to all the people taking part in the picture. There was an audience of nearly two thousand persons who had come from the surrounding country when the news went forth that the Armenian scenes were to be made.

Metro Offices Moved to New Studio.

Although scenes were being shot on the lot of the new Metro studio several weeks ago, the administration building was not ready for occupancy until January 8, when a general exodus from the old headquarters on Lillian Way was made to the new offices a few blocks away. The heads of the various departments, from Maxwell Karger, director general, down to the least important office employe, are now all settled in the new studio buildings.

Meets "Her Regiment."

Mary Pickford walked about twelve miles through the streets of San Francisco on the day that "Her Regiment" came home from France. Miss Pickford kept pace with the hardy warriors from the time they left the train in Oakland and marched through the principal streets of that city to the ferry, and then when they reached San Francisco and marched again through the main thoroughfares, she still walked with them.

Moving pictures that were taken of the "welcome" and of the parade on Saturday were shown in Los Angeles the following Monday at the Orpheum and California theatres.

Miss Pickford, on her return from San Francisco, found the script of a propaganda picture which she had promised to make for the Government at the request of General Munson of the Morale Department of the army. Work on this picture will be commenced as soon as "Daddy Longlegs" is completed.

First National Stunt Wins Prize.

A nation-wide campaign that is being launched to put before the people the significance of First National attractions was started in Los Angeles on New Year's eve at the annual Ad masked ball held at Shrine Auditorium. Lawrence A. Weingarten, press agent for Tally's First National Exchange, put on a stunt in the way of a character representing Daddy Longlegs, Mary Pickford's first First National picture.

A man was put on stilts about eight feet from the ground, and a small black boy dressed as a page, carried a banner announcing the character. It won the first prize for the best male character.

Jack Pickford Undergoes Operation.

Jack Pickford, who has not been very well for the past few weeks, was taken suddenly ill on January 7 while at work at the Brunton studio upon his first picture for the First National Exhibitors, and was hurried to the California hospital, where he was at once put on the operation table. It had been the hope of his physician that Jack would pull through without the necessity of a surgical operation, but when the young man's suffering became acute, there was nothing to do but operate. Jack recovered from the influence of the anesthetic in fine shape, and at this writing is progressing rapidly.

Heroine Suffers, but Villain Escapes.

Ruth Roland is suffering from a severe case of poison oak as the result of being choked by the villain in the new Pathe serial now being filmed on the West Coast, when the company was out on location recently. The actor playing the villain had gathered a quantity of beautiful poison oak foliage, not knowing what it was, just before he was called upon to choke the heroine, and the venom from the vines was transferred to the neck and face of Miss Roland, causing such serious suffering that she was forced to go to a hospital for treatment. The villain escaped without the slightest discomfort.

Illness Delays Departure.

Winfield Sheehan, general manager of the Fox Corporation, has been confined to his room at the Alexandria Hotel for more than a week with an attack of rheumatism, which has delayed his departure for the East.

Ford to Make New Serial.

After he finishes "The Silent Mystery," Francis Ford has announced that he will make a "lost treasure" story of the South Sea Islands, and in order to get the correct atmosphere for exterio scenes, he will travel to locations south of the equator. Ford has acquired the yacht Visitor, formerly owned by a Pasadena man, on which he will take, besides the technical force of his studio, Mae Gaston, leading woman, and her mother, on the expedition.

The final work on "The Silent Mystery" will probably take six weeks to complete, and then all hands will get ready for the South Sea trip.

Film Plants Humming.

Willis & Inglis, managers of Los Angeles' Clearing House for photoplays and players, report that there is great activity in film circles since the first of the year. Besides a number of new companies that have started up, the old established studios have broken out with renewed vigor and have started things humming.

Henaberry Returns to Fairbanks.

Joseph Henaberry, former director for Douglas Fairbanks, was one of the first of the motion picture directors who enlisted to be discharged from the army. This was made possible through the intervention of General Munson of the Morale Squad, who recently requested Douglas Fairbanks to make six special pictures to stimulate and encourage morale in the army camps of this country and France. Henaberry is to direct the first of these Fairbanks pictures.

Suit for Patent Light Dissolver.

The Famous Players-Lasky Company has brought suit against Howard M. Ewing for the right to use a patent device, known as a "light dissolver," for controlling the volume of light emitted by an arc light in the making of moving pictures.

Ewing was an electrician for the Lasky Company at the time of perfecting the "dissolver" and according to the plaintiffs, who advanced the money to Ewing to work out his invention, they claim, there was an agreement to the effect that they were to have exclusive right to use the device. The suit has been instituted to prevent Ewing from disposing of the invention to others.

Corbett Now Film Star.

James J. Corbett came to town on January 4 to take part as "juvenile lead," as he calls it, in a serial to be entitled "Who Am I?" which is a story based on Corbett's own life, that is to be produced at Universal City within the next few weeks. Corbett was the guest of Jack Doyle at the Vernon boxing contests the week following his arrival, and during the same week the first scenes of the serial was filmed. Corbett intends to return to the vaudeville stage when his picture work is finished, with Jack Wilson as his partner.

Woman Director Dragged Through Street.

Elsie Jane Wilson, woman director at Universal City, was seriously injured a few days ago while out walking with Thor, a huge mastiff belonging to her husband, Rupert Julian. She had the dog on a leash, when he suddenly dashed after a cat, dragging Miss Wilson after him through the street.

Bessie Barriscale is attending to preliminaries prior to the filming of "Josselyn's Wife," a Kathleen Norris story.

The strange sounds issuing from Darrell Foss these days is what he calls a Chinese ditty that he learned while listening to the strains of the Chinese orchestra used as inspiration and atmosphere during the filming of the Nazimova feature, "The Red Lantern."

Neal Burns has been discharged from Camp Lewis and is back in Hollywood, ready to resume motion picture work.

J. R. Crone, general manager of the American studios at Santa Barbara for the past two years, has resigned from that office to devote his time to private business interests in the northern part of the state.

Pat O'Malley's home in Hollywood was robbed the day before Christmas of $250 in Liberty Bonds, $155 in cash, six pairs of silk stockings that Mrs. O'Malley had intended as presents to friends, Pat's present to Mrs. Pat, and her present for him!

Edwin Carewe has taken a company of Metro players to Truckee for snow scenes in "The Way of the Strong," with Anna Nilsson and Joe King.

Edith Wherry, author of "The Red Lantern," Nazimova's current production, was a visitor at the Metro studio a few days ago, and watched with interest the development of her story into a film play.

The house on the Chaplin estate, now occupied by the Syd Chaplins, is being remodeled for the use of the Charlie Chaplins when the lease on their present residence in Laughlin Park expires.

Mary MacLaren gave a dinner for Segeru Numata, chief film censor of Japan, and his party, on January 8. Mr. Numata is writing the synopsis of a play for Miss MacLaren, whom he says is one of the most popular of the American film stars in his country.

A magnificent oil painting that was presented to Thomas H. Ince by members of his studio staff adorns the wall of his office in the new studio at Culver City.

McClure's Names A. Warner As Sales Representative

Frederick L. Collins, producer of "The Fighting Roosevelts," the authorized picture based on the life and works of Theodore Roosevelt, announces that A. Warner has become associated with McClure Productions, Inc., and is now general sales representative for the Roosevelt picture. This is one more link in the chain of events that forms a parallel between this Roosevelt picture and the Gerard picture, "My Four Years in Germany," inasmuch as Mr. Warner acted in a similar capacity for the latter production and is credited with having organized and executed a service system for exhibitors throughout the United States which helped them to make a record-breaking success of the Gerard picture.

This arrangement with Mr. Warner is in no sense a deviation from the recently announced plan for the picture to be distributed through the First National Exhibitors' Circuit. Mr. Warner's work will supplement the energetic efforts of the sales force of the circuit, who are enthusiastic over the intense interest being shown throughout the nation in "The Fighting Roosevelts."

Harry M. Warner, one of the producers of "My Four Years in Germany," was Mr. Collins' manager of production for the Roosevelt picture. Mr. Warner made "his place in the sun" through the recent production "My Four Years in Germany." Both of these men are members of the firm of Warner Brothers, an organization responsible for many screen successes. Associated with them in the capacity of director was William Nigh, responsible for the direction of "My Four Years in Germany."

A. Blaikie Dick, treasurer of the McClure Productions, Inc., is in personal charge of the business details.

As usual in all McClure productions, Daniel Henderson has charge of the advertising campaign, which will be a large and inclusive one.

Miss Claire Wallace Flynn, associate editor of McClure's Magazine, assisted by Charles Wisner Barrell, were in charge of the research department, whose business it is to know anything that T. R. ever said or wrote or did.

Recovering from Wounds Maciste to Resume Work

SOME time ago a report was published that "Maciste," the giant Italian star of "The Warrior," "Cabiria" and "The Liberator," which is now being offered on the state rights market by Harry Raver, had been killed in action; as a consequence, Mr. Raver's office was besieged with inquiries as to its authenticity, and he was in suspense for several weeks until a cabled reply to his inquiries was received, reading "Maciste enjoying his usual appetite." Whereupon the story was published contradicting the report of his death.

As further evidence that "Maciste" is still alive and well, Mr. Raver recently received the following letter from the "Italian Douglas Fairbanks":

"Salutations and good wishes. I am resting for two weeks after the sensation of asphyxiation and several anatomical perforations which prevented me from enjoying my usual 'four portions' so long ago it seemed an age before they would give me enough food for a sparrow's nourishment, but I am fortunate and happy that all my eyes and bones will join me when I go to see my mother. As for yourself, please be content. I am well and you will soon have another cinema film of 'Little Maciste.' I tried in 'The Liberator' not to do what you call 'stunts,' but to use my good strength, thinking always the American people to be serious and not wishing to be deceived."

Maciste modestly forbade giving the details of his wounds, but further advices from his firm in Turin tell of his courage and patriotic fervor, his disregard for danger, and faith in an Italian victory, always spurred on by the influence of his friend Gabriele d'Annunzio. In the army he was the life of his regiment and a favorite with officers and men alike. He had frequently to be cautioned against undertaking hazardous exploits, and his only complaint was that too much of the fighting was done at long range.

Several of the same regiment of fighting Alpinos are prominent in the cast of "The Liberator," his newest picture.

PROTEST AGAINST SHOWING OF "SALOME"

Church Federations of St. Louis Raise Objection to Theda Bara's Dearth of Attire

PROTEST has been made to Prosecuting Attorney Sidener by representatives of the Church Federation of St. Louis, Catholic Church Federation and Lutheran Morals Committee against the exhibition in St. Louis of the film "Salome," in which Theda Bara is being featured at William Fox's Liberty Theatre, on the ground that Miss Bara's lack of attire is harmful to the morals of the community.

This action was decided on, said Edward V. B. Schneiderhahn, attorney, counsel for the Federated Catholic Societies, after several ministers, including the Rev. Howard Billman, associate secretary of the Church Federation, and Charles W. Trefny of the Catholic Federation, had viewed the film and pronounced it unfit for exhibition.

The Rev. Mr. Billman and Mr. Trefny talked with Prosecuting Attorney Sidener, who said he had seen the film and was impressed with its artistic qualities, but thought Theda Bara overbold and underclad. He added that, in his opinion, certain scenes, particularly where Salome is represented as declaring her love to John the Baptist, should be eliminated.

Story Misrepresents History.

The Rev. Mr. Billman asserted the story as embodied in the film was a gross misrepresentation of historical facts. He said John the Baptist was a rugged man who lived long in the wilderness and never had gone to Jerusalem to preach, as represented in the film. Furthermore, he declared, there is no historical authority that Salome tried to make love to John or personally conversed with him, as shown in the picture. He said John was not a type that possessed physical attractions for a woman, whereas in the picture he is represented as a comely youth.

The Rev. Mr. Billman and Mr. Trefny saw the film Sunday afternoon, January 5, and were caught in the rush of the crowd that attended the first performance. In the crowd, they said, they saw many girls and boys and young men and women, who they did not believe were present with the consent of their parents who had full knowledge of what was to be shown, and the two men heard "remarks, exclamations and giggles" during the exhibition of the film, they said, that did not indicate a great moral lesson, if any was intended by the producers, was having the desired effect.

The Rev. Mr. Billman next day directed the attention of ministers at meetings of the various denominations to Theda Bara's dearth of attire while portraying the character of the vampire of classic song, and suggested that some action be taken to renovate the production by having eliminated certain scenes where, he declared, a too seductive appeal to the senses is made.

Move to Suppress Picture.

Acting on this suggestion, a few Lutheran ministers attended the afternoon exhibition, and, Mr. Schneiderhahn stated, will join with others in a movement to have the picture suppressed in St. Louis.

The assistant prosecuting attorney gave Mr. Trefny a letter to the manager of the Liberty Theatre requesting the house to eliminate sections of the film that were objectionable.

Blanche Bates Pours Tea Following Screen Debut

M. KASHIN, whose unique methods of showmanship and exploitation have done much for the Broadway Theatre, signalized his assumption of the management of the Symphony, Ninety-fifth Street and Broadway, last week, by putting on for three days "The Border Legion," a Goldwyn special release, with the personal assistance on the first day of Blanche Bates, co-star with Hobart Bosworth in the production. Tremendous business at the box office testified to the excellence of the picture and to the worth of Mr. Kashin's methods.

A select mailing list of the theatre received three days before the showing of the picture a letter from Miss Bates reading in part: "I would greatly value your opinion of my first photoplay at the Symphony Theatre on Friday afternoon. Tea will be served in the Boudoir from 3 till 5, and you may then let me know what you think of 'The Border Legion,' which is my vehicle and is adapted from Zane Grey's novel of the same name. Incidentally, I might also say that I will address the audience from the stage in the evening at 8.30."

Hundreds of women were the guests of Miss Bates in the afternoon and over the tea cups she heard many nice things said of herself and the production. In the evening thousands packed the great theatre to see one of the most thrilling action-dramas ever presented on the screen.

World Realty Buys Omaha's Muse.

Announcement was made Saturday evening, January 11, that the Muse, big downtown theatre in Omaha, had been sold by Manager R. D. Shirley to the World Realty Company, which also owns the Sun Theatre. The company now controls two of Omaha's big downtown houses. It is building another house on Douglas street, between Fourteenth and Fifteenth, and alongside the big new Rialto, opening about next May. It is completing plans for a fourth house, seating not less than 2,500 people and outclassing any theatre in the middle west, on Fifteenth and Douglas streets, just across from the Rialto.

H. B. Watts, former manager of the Rohlff and Strand theatres, formerly identified with the motion picture departments of local newspapers and for five years prominent in Omaha film circles, has been named manager of the Muse Theatre. The same high policy established by Manager R. D. Shirley will be maintained, it is announced.

Stolte Entertains Wounded Men.

Manager Stolte of the Strand Theatre, Omaha, on ten minutes notice Saturday evening, January 11, threw open his theatre to fifty wounded soldiers stopping over between trains and being entertained by Red Cross canteen workers. He screened a special picture for them and distributed red roses among the wounded men.

About those seats you have stored away. Somebody needs them and you are likely to find the customer through an advertisement in The World's Classified.

"FANS" IN SING SING SEE "MICKEY"

Mabel Normand Makes Great Personal Hit with Inmates Who Enthuse Over the Picture in 300 Signed Opinions That Reflect the Human Touch

THE work of the Mutual Welfare League in making life a bit more endurable for guests at Sing Sing has been frequently commented on with a unanimous verdict of commendation; but there is at hand an unusual indorsement from the prisoners themselves, who witnessed a moving picture entertainment provided for them by W. H. Productions Company New Year's Eve. The men who are paying the penalty of folly have given personal testimony to the good the Mutual Welfare League is doing among them.

"Mickey" was the picture shown in the Chapel at Sing Sing, where picture entertainments are frequent. Four years ago the League started showing picture productions, and for the most part press agents of the firms sending the entertainments to Sing Sing have been the ones who loudly praised the merits of their showings as appropriate and satisfactory to the audience "Up the River." In the case of "Mickey" it was entirely different—more than three hundred inmates of the prison have written their enthusiastic opinion and signed with both their name and number.

H. J. Shepard, of W. H. Productions, made a sincere effort to make the "Watch Meeting" held at Sing Sing a great success. The song "Mickey," which constitutes an item of exploitation for the picture, was sung by one of the inmates; then everybody present joined in the chorus, and as often as the orchestra swung into the strains of the song the prisoners hummed or whistled with evident delight. Over and over again the chorus was sung while the reels were being changed. It was a great hit.

Strains of "Mickey" Are Hummed.

Louis Jacobs, Chairman of the Entertainment Committee, wrote to Mr. Shepard, especially commending the musical branch of the entertainment. "In addition to thanking you for the picture," wrote Mr. Jacobs, "we have also to thank you for a new sensation because we never knew how well we could sing as a body until we tried it with 'Mickey.' It went with vim and vigor because it is so singable and catchy." And for days afterward, said Mr. Jacobs, the prison walls echoed with strains of the chorus being hummed or whistled by the men who had discovered a new community interest through music at the picture show.

That "Mickey" had particular appeal to the inmates of Sing Sing would seem to indicate its versatility of construction and detail and would also evidence its desirability as a picture attraction for the free and unimprisoned public—for the inmates of Sing Sing are drawn from every class of people. This is proved by the reports prisoners themselves made on the showing of the picture. Cards were distributed at the New Year's party, with the request that those in the audience should write their opinions and sign name and number.

An examination of these cards (more than three hundred of them) reflects the varied mentality and calibre of the "critics" who had their "say." Many expressions go into critical detail. Whether they be long or short the indorsement of "Mickey" is emphatic. It might be added that "Mickey" is a picture of peculiar composition, in which Mabel Normand made her first dramatic essay for the screen. She had been a comedy star in very popular brands before she turned to "Mickey," and the picture was an immediate test of her versatility.

Practically "everything pictures have" is disclosed in "Mickey"—from wild chases and thrilling sensations to the most tender love scenes; from the excitement of a "serial" to the optical charm of a Kellerman exposition of diving and swimming; from pitched battles with clenched fists to a running race, with "Mickey" donning silk to save a situation.

All Kinds of Thrills for Prisoners.

So it happened that the men who are guests of the most famous penal institution in the country had opportunity to get every sort of "thrill" they had been accustomed to in outside existence and thus found something in "Mickey" or the work of Mabel Normand to delight them. It took several days to assemble the cards on which the prisoners had written their opinions, and these have finally been turned over to the Moving Picture World as exhibits of a remarkable nature, produced under intensely human circumstances as the opinions of an unusual type of motion picture audience.

No. 69209 was probably numbered among the throng that frequent the race tracks hereabouts, for he says: "Will put a bet on 'Mickey' every time she rides."

The beaches and swimming pools must have been the favorite resorts of No. 62609. "'Mickey' was great is the only comment any one can make. But if it was shown so as to see clearer when she was bathing I would have been more pleased." For all of which no man may justly be confined in prison.

"Great in swimming," says 68107. "Is she married? If not, why?" Proving that the fan temporarily removed from society is just the same sort of fan he was before.

Mabel a Real Benefactor.

No. 68607 declares: "Just before going to the show I had a terrible fit of the blues. After seeing this wonderful picture I fell in love with the whole world." Don't you think Mabel Normand should be happy when she reads that?

That the boys of the Mutual Welfare League are like the rest of us is demonstrated by No. 66898: "My eyesight was poor, but I could see 'Mickey' in bathing."

Here's a joyful note one might not expect from No. 68626: "I sure did like 'Mickey,' especially when she slid down the banister."

No. 67106 wrote a review of the picture that would make a trade-paper satellite jealous. It covered every important detail of the production, showed good showmanship judgment, and was composed by a man who will very likely have resumed his old hold upon life when the Mutual Welfare League bids him good-bye at Sing Sing gate.

No. 69375 took this view of it: "'Mickey'? Well, say, did anything you ever saw recur to you months later and hand you a hearty laugh? That's the way I'll feel about 'Mickey' for some time to come. Every time I think of 'Mickey' it hands me a laugh and brightens me up for a time."

Will Put His Dough on "Mickey."

If No. 62758 was incarcerated because he used strong talk there is still work ahead for the League. Listen: "Sure was a hell of a fine picture. 'Mickey' is a winner. Come again." And of similar mind is No. 69614, who declares: "A corking show. All laughs and full of pep. Come again."

"All my dough on 'Mickey' and her good little horse," writes No. 65436, who might have been seen in the crowd at Belmont Park while he was at liberty. And No. 69358 might have similarly disported himself, for he adds: "My last copper on 'Mickey' and her horse."

"Well," writes No. 68132, "believe me 'Mickey' was a good production. I hope we will see more of her in future. Give Mabel my best regards." And No. 69411 contributes: "'Mickey'—the picture I'll never forget. By far the best film screened since I've been here, and believe me I have been here some time."

As a Blues-Chaser Is a Wonder.

Miss Normand will be glad to know how she cheered No. 68565, who writes: "'Mickey' is a sure bet. As a blues-chaser she's a wonder. Give us more of her."

No. 5829 gets into dialect: "One grand-a pitch!" With the use of another dialect by No. 68841: "Dat am some good picture of 'Mickey.'"

Here's an enthusiast—No. 68987: "A rip-roaring success. 'Mickey' is the best that has been put over the top." And so they go, with no room to print them all, but all of them evidencing sincerity and appreciation for the star and her picture.

In his letter sending the cards to Mr. Shepard the chairman of the Welfare League entertainment committee added personal expressions of his own in commendation of the subject and in appreciation of the opportunity W. H. Productions had afforded the inmates of Sing Sing for an evening of genuine enjoyment. In referring to the individual expressions as noted on the opinion cards Chairman Jacobs said:

"The language is colloquial; the grammar very often bad, but at one glance through the cards you will not fail to be impressed with the earnestness of those signing them, and there is never any doubt about what they mean. They are all writing home to their folks about the fun and enjoyment they have received from her. Mabel Normand has often thrilled us, but from now on for us her name will be 'Mickey.'"

And for a final word let No. 60830 have it: "After seeing 'Mickey' I forgot where I was."

ALLENS TO IMPORT FILMS FROM ENGLAND

Prominent Canadian Picture Men Form British Films, Ltd.—May Manufacture in the Dominion

ONE of the most important film announcements for a long while in Canada is that of Jule and J. J. Allen of Toronto, Ontario, to proclaim the formation of British Films, Limited, with headquarters at Toronto. This corporation will be "under the direction of Jule and J. J. Allen," it is stated, and the step was taken because of the apparently sympathetic attitude of the people of the Dominion, generally speaking, toward English film productions. This feeling has become intensified since the cessation of hostilities, and the organization of the new company is considered timely.

The company is organized to import, distribute and exploit the leading photoplays of English producers, and there is also an intimation that the Allens will undertaken or encourage the making of Canadian pictures.

Included in the announcement is a list of several productions the rights of which for Canada have already been secured. It is also stated that certain companies affiliated and controlled by the Allens in Canada will curtail their importation of films from the United States immediately from 20 to 30 per cent. to make way for the films coming over from England.

The new company is characterized as "our New Year's Gift to the people of Canada" by the Allens. The latter also point out that they were instrumental in bringing into Canada a number of special productions with an English flavor during past years. These included "The Battle of the Somme," "The Battle of Waterloo," "Britain Prepared," "The Advance of the Tanks," "Ivanhoe," "Canadian Armies in Action," "Hearts of the World," "The Great Love" and "The Better 'Ole." Some of these, of course, were secured from United States sources. A recent importation is "Sporting Life," which opened at the Allen Theatre, Toronto, on January 6. "The Better 'Ole" has proved a sensation wherever it has played in the Dominion.

Coming Production.

Listed among the productions to come are "The Kiddies in the Ruins," which has already been linked up with "The Better 'Ole" in the advance advertising; "God Bless Our Red, White and Blue" is another special, while a third is "Tinker, Tailor, Soldier, Sailor." It is stated that "there will be imported from Britain many films dealing with the history of the past and the history that is in the making."

Incidentally, the Allen Theatre, Toronto, has been making a specialty of "Allen's All-British Weekly," consisting of English topical views, to cater to the theatre's patronage.

Bartlett Back in Pictures, Deserting Literary Work

RANDOLPH BARTLETT, who has been away from the picture business for a year and a half, has returned to take charge of the publicity for the new Selznick Pictures Corporation. Mr. Bartlett was the press agent who conducted the open booking campaign of Lewis J. Selznick two years ago, and who left the company at the time of the organization of the Select. Since then he has been engaged in magazine and newspaper work.

"I am back in the picture game," says Mr. Bartlett, "because it is the livest business I know. By nature I am a high-brow, and while I get a lot of satisfaction out of writing satirical essays and fiction, it is a curious fact that the magazines and editors whom you find constantly sneering at the movies have been unable to make their own style of literature profitable for the writer. The average annual earnings of a man who devotes his intelligence to high-brow work would hardly equal the price that Tony Kelly gets for one scenario.

"Of course it is a mistake to judge values entirely by financial returns. Still it is a pretty good rule that if there is not sufficient demand for a thing to make it profitable, there is a very grave question whether it is worth doing at all.

"Nobody claims that moving pictures, in their present development, are anywhere near perfect, but nobody but a fool would claim that they are not alive. The mere fact of being in touch intimately with the desires of millions of people gives to those who are working in the film business a feeling of providing the supply to satisfy a tremendous and vital demand."

The New York offices of the Selznick Pictures Corporation are being fitted up at 501 Fifth avenue, and Mr. Bartlett will be in charge. Production has been begun in Los Angeles, where Myron Selznick, president and general manager, is in charge, with Charles Giblyn as director-general and Olive Thomas as the first star under the new Selznick banner.

Independent Engages Penser for Laboratory

IT is announced by the Independent Sales Corporation that Charles Penser, one of the best known of the laboratory experts in the film industry, has been engaged to have special charge of all its laboratory work.

For over twelve years Mr. Penser acted in a like capacity for various companies, and during the past two years had charge of re-editing and laboratory work for the Whartons and Goldwyn.

All prints and negatives of the famous 10-20-30 series and the extra specials of the Independent Sales Corporation will have the personal attention of Mr. Penser, which means that exhibitors throughout the country will be assured of getting their prints in perfect condition.

Mr. Penser has inaugurated a system whereby each unit of the Film Clearing House, which company has the exclusive physical distribution of all pictures booked by the Independent Sales Corporation, will be supplied immediately with any scenes or parts that might be damaged or ripped out in the projection rooms of exhibitors, which means exhibitors will always get full reels on all the Independent pictures.

The acquisition of Mr. Penser by the Independent Sales Corporation is only another evidence of this concern's intention to give exhibitors of the country the very best service possible.

Fred Quimby Recovering from "Flu."

The many friends of Fred C. Quimby, sales manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., will be glad to hear he is rapidly recovering from the attack of influenza which has confined him to his home for the past week. Mr. Quimby has had more than his share of bad luck lately, as Mrs. Quimby was seriously ill from the same disease for some weeks, and just as she was able to be about he was stricken.

FOX WORKING OUT COMMUNITY BOOKING

Books "Salome" in Several Neighborhood Theatres to Get Best Advantages of Publicity for All

IN explaining a new plan for distributing features that are really out of the ordinary, Louis Rosenbluh, manager of the Fox New York Exchange, had this to say of a unique system that is being developed by the Fox organization for theatres of the larger and better picture class:

"We have tried out what might be called the concentrated booking plan in New York and Brooklyn, and it is working wonderfully," said Mr. Rosenbluh. "In Brooklyn seven houses in one neighborhood combined on a 'Salome' campaign that broke all records of attendance at the individual houses and secured for each hundreds of new patrons. Next week three of the best houses in Harlem, all on 116th street, will show 'Salome'—just released on an independent basis—at the same time. In the Bronx the important Burland, Spooner and Elsmere theatres all exploited 'Salome' during the same days, with overwhelming crowds as a result.

Laid Out City in Sections.

"To do this we laid out the city in sections," explained Mr. Rosenbluh, "and then put our plan and its reasons before the exhibitors in that section. The result has exceeded expectations. Apart from the profits to exhibitors on the 'Salome' showings and the new patrons won for the theatres, it has started a get-together spirit that is going to work out other problems of better showmanship.

"The Fox Corporation, or any other producer, can prosper only if all the first grade exhibitors prosper. We want to go on giving the exhibitor still bigger and finer features, and that will be one of the results of such showmanship as will get the full patronage from the public for the really great photoplay. In two ways it works out to the exhibitor's profit—more big features and more money to his bank account on each one."

Going further into the details of the new plan Mr. Rosenbluh continues:

"All great features should be shown at the same time in all the houses of a town or neighborhood where the admission price is the same. Think of the cumulative weight of the combined publicity of five or six houses—all their mailing lists, all their advertisements, all the word-of-mouth praise of their regular patrons! Not a person who could read or see or hear but would make an effort to see the feature thus exploited. The picture houses would reap its benefits for months to come.

New Angle in Showmanship.

"The nationally known feature photoplay has brought new elements into the show business. It should bring about a new angle in picture showmanship. In the production of such a feature as 'Salome,' for instance, sums of money are spent without any precedent in the amusement business. Before the advent of moving pictures no theatrical enterprise could spend hundreds of thousands on a single production and hope to get it back, much less show a profit. Now, it is not good showmanship to treat this expensive production just as if it were an ordinary release. If we do not realize this in booking as well as other matters, we are standing still while our directors have gone forward.

"I mean that in an attraction like 'Salome' old booking methods do not take advantage of the wonderful possibilities of cumulative publicity. Also the ordinary laws of competition are reversed—more people will want to see such a film than can possibly be crowded into one or two or three houses in any large town or city for the limited number of days of the usual picture showing. For a single house to meet the opportunity it would have to run the film indefinitely. Regular patrons of picture houses demand a change in the program at least once a week, in most houses every few days; long runs of a single play are not considered feasible.

"Consider, then, what happens under the customary plan, where a leading exhibitor demands an exclusive showing for his town or neighborhood, with the idea that he thus will secure the maximum box office returns. He runs the feature for three days, four days or a week. He gets his regular patrons and some of the general outside public—as many as his mailing list and individual billboards and advertising can reach. He does a good business, takes a good profit and sits back satisfied.

Whole Population Possible Patrons.

"But I say that the possibilities of his town have hardly been touched. For the great feature, as I view it, can get first the regular house patronage, and then hundreds from a big general public who are only occasional screen patrons or who may be first attracted to motion pictures by the unusual character of the feature. Because of the low admission price, practically the entire population of a town or a section are possible feature patrons. This single exhibitor, with his few days showing, hasn't found ten per cent. of them!

"It's not only a loss of possible added profits to this first exhibitor but a loss to the producer. Also it's an immense loss to the other exhibitors in the town with houses of similar standing, who now are afraid to book the feature, contending that the first exhibitor has taken the cream of the patronage and used up the value of the initial publicity. Initial publicity is absolutely all that has been used up. There are still the thousands of regular patrons of the other houses who did not see the feature. There are the thousands of the outside public not reached by the advertising efforts of the lone exhibitor.

"I repeat that the old booking methods won't do. With co-operation among local exhibitors and a realization of the added opportunities of this new large attraction element, we can put large profits into the exhibitors' pockets. We can justify the big expensive feature as a business proposition."

Takes World Home

THE secretary of the Exchange Managers' Association of Washington, D. C., in the course of a letter to this office concludes as follows:

"Let me take this opportunity, as a busy man, to advise you of how much enjoyment I get out of the Moving Picture World. I think if each exhibitor and each film executive had time to sit down and write the Moving Picture World and tell them how much they appreciated this publication, your concern would be exceptionally gratified. The Moving Picture World to me is just like a newspaper, in fact, only a thousand times more interesting.

"When it comes to this office I cannot resist putting it in my pocket and taking it home and spending an evening with it. If every film executive and every theatre man would take the Moving Picture World home with him as I do at night and spend an evening or possibly two evenings reading the whole thing from start to finish he would get out of it more than he ever realized. You people deserve a great deal of credit for putting together an ideal moving picture magazine.

"Personally, this is my first executive position in the film business. Previous to going into this work I had been a newspaper man and an advertising man in the amusement business for some years, and it is the newspaper aspect of your magazine that appeals to me particularly.

"OSCAR A. MORGAN."

Hunter Bennett with Independent.

Frank Hall, president of the Independent Sales Corporation, announces that Hunter Bennett, who is personally known to a great many exhibitors throughout the country, has become identified with his concern and the Film Clearing House, which has the physical distribution of all pictures booked by the Independent Sales Corporation.

Mr. Bennett will be special representative to all the units throughout the country, being well qualified for this important position. For a number of years he acted in a like capacity for the World Film Corporation and the Mutual, during which time he covered every section of the United States and came into intimate contact with a great majority of the exhibitors.

At present Mr. Bennett is on a trip covering the entire country, and besides visiting all the Film Clearing House units will drop in on many exhibitors.

San Francisco Wants Studios.

The determined campaign that has been launched to bring moving picture producing companies to San Francisco is being aided by Mayor Rolph, and some interesting developments along this line are expected in the spring. Fred Dahnken, Jr., president of the Turner & Dahnken Circuit, and Ralph Clark, manager of the New York branch of this concern, recently went to Los Angeles to attend a meeting of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit and took with them a message from the mayor to the film producers of the South. This message was prompted by the recent statement of Mary Pickford that she would like to have all her pictures made in San Francisco.

Division of Films Official R-C Co.'s Foreign Manager

The film activity of the Robertson-Cole Company took another stride forward with the announcement that the services of one of the Government's war film experts had been secured as European manager for the film branch of the Robertson-Cole Company, with headquarters in London. Marcus A. Beeman, former assistant director general of the Division of Films of the Committee of Public Information, is the man selected. He will leave for London January 29, and open the office early in February.

Robertson-Cole Company's imposing list of stars signed up for the last two months for distribution throughout the world, as well as in the United States and Canada through the Exhibitors' Mutual, has entailed such an increase in foreign business as to require the opening of the London office. For nearly a year the firm has marketed a large number of independent productions in foreign countries. An impetus to this opportunity comes with the addition to the offering of such names as Henry B. Walthall, Billie Rhodes, Bessie Barriscale, William Desmond, Sessue Hayakawa, Carter De Haven and H. B. Warner.

Mr. Beeman is peculiarly fitted for the work by his experience in the division of films, a large part of the activity of which centered in foreign educational work in support of our doughboys, especially in the two neutral countries, Holland and Switzerland, where the battle with the Hun for the winning of public opinion was waged with great success. Mr. Beeman, as first assistant to Charles S. Hart, who controlled the entire film effort, and later assuming his duties when Mr. Hart was called to Europe on official business, had been directly associated with this foreign activity.

"I am keenly interested in the work I am to undertake for Robertson-Cole Company in London," says Mr. Beeman. "I have had a chance to learn thoroughly the general background in Holland, Russia, Switzerland, Scandanavia, Spain and Italy. I have had an excellent opportunity to gauge the temper of the public mind in these lands and I am confident I can give them service as well as Robertson-Cole Company."

Farrar's Gowns Count Big in Her Play of "Shadows"

GERALDINE FARRAR'S reputation for sartorial splendor is such that she is at her wits' end to outdo herself in each succeeding Goldwyn Picture. For she contends that the first duty of a star is to interest her audience no less by her appearance than by her acting.

It is known that the international celebrity never wears the same gown in public twice. After a costume has served its purpose either in opera, on the concert stage or in Goldwyn Pictures, it is cast aside. What does Geraldine Farrar do with all the wraps, hats, dresses and accessories she uses once and no more? Everything goes to the Stage Women's War Relief at monthly intervals. Sold to actresses at a fraction of their cost, the proceeds are devoted to the work of the organization now that the war is over.

In "Shadows," newest of her series of Goldwyn Pictures, she wears magnificent apparel. At the time the play was produced Miss Farrar declared that her costumes were the richest she had ever worn. Thoroughly modern, they voice the last word in feminine fashions. The dresses cannot fail to hold unusual interest for every woman. The pity of it is that the colors of the fabrics cannot be shown.

The gown Miss Farrar wears in the Alaskan episode of "Shadows"—the one with the lavish grape ornamentations—is of cerise chiffon velvet, the garniture being of silver. The costume in which she first appears in the play is of cloth of gold and the draping is unique. At the waist is a cluster of ostrich tips in old blue and crimson. A succession of other striking frocks is seen throughout the play—wonderful laces, some of them of marvelous sheerness, others rich in their design and heavy with ornamentation. Miss Farrar's favorite among all the dresses she wears in this picture is an evening gown of claret velvet with the waist of glittering brilliants of intricate design. In fact it is expected always that her first appearance in a Goldwyn Picture is as much an event from a fashion standpoint as her presentation of a new role at the opera.

Los Angeles' Cinema Theatre To Be the Setting of the Spectacular Blanche Sweet Production

"THE Unpardonable Sin," Harry Garson and Marshall Neilan's big photoplay creation from Major Rupert Hughes' novel of the same title, is scheduled to be disclosed to public view at the Cinema Theatre, Los Angeles, February 3. It will remain at that well-known Coast playhouse for an indefinite run and will then be brought to New York City at a Broadway house. W. H. Rudolph, who is identified with the Garson and Clara Kimball Young interests in the East, left New York this week for Los Angeles to be present at the opening.

The premiere of "The Unpardonable Sin" is an event of considerable importance in the motion picture industry. The picture has been in the making for many months and many important things which may have a bearing upon its success have happened since the crank was turned on the first scene. Blanche Sweet is the star and this, in a role which in the story seemed admirably suited to her peculiar abilities, will make her "re-debut" to the screen after a long absence. Marshall Neilan, admittedly one of the ablest directors in the business, has had personal charge of the screening of the story. And the production—one of the most lavish given a photoplay—represents an unusual financial investment.

The Hughes story was chosen for Miss Sweet because of the draft it developed with the reading public the minute its initial installments began to appear in one of the important national magazines. That the choice was an exceptionally good one was evidenced later when the story appeared in book form and made a record as the fourth "best seller" of the year. The story proved a real sensation, exciting public comment in every important center in the country and calling forth the enthusiastic public approval of such men as the late Theodore Roosevelt.

While the star, the director, and the production are of unusual importance, "The Unpardonable Sin," it is conceded, will depend largely for its success upon the story. Motion picture men on the Coast who have been in touch with the Garson interests during the filming of the picture have sent East many words of praise for the manner in which the work was being done. With the subject matter which Major Hughes used in his novel dealing almost exclusively with events related to the World War, it would have been the most natural thing for "The Unpardonable Sin" in its finished picture state to stand out boldly as a "war picture"; that the story has not been handled in this way is a tribute to the ability and business judgment of Mr. Garson and Mr. Neilan. The background o fthe World War is an incident.

Before he left for the Coast, in discussing "The Unpardonable Sin," Mr. Rudolph had this to say: "'The Unpardonable Sin' has been in the making for some time. Within the past couple of months a considerable sum of money has been expended in announcing to the trade just what was being done and some of the reasons why the picture ought to prove one of the biggest box office attractions of the past decade. With other out-and-out 'war pictures' cleaning up there certainly was abundant temptation for us to change our original plan of production—and at least our advertising—and release a 'war picture' based upon a story which might easily be described as the most powerful 'war story' ever written. But we didn't start out to make a 'war picture' and we have remained steadfast in our purpose.

"We have made a 'picture which will appeal to the finest emotions of all classes of people. There are no wild battle scenes, no picturization of blood-curdling atrocities. 'The Unpardonable Sin' is merely a new treatment of a subject that has been of interest ever since modern civilization came into being—a subject that was discussed and was close to the heart of every father and mother and every son and daughter scores of years before some person tossed a lighted match into the over-dried tinder of European politics and set the world ablaze.

"Needless to say I am anxious to get to the Coast and see 'The Unpardonable Sin' in its finished state. I have been kept advised in detail as to just what was being done and I am sure that the production will be adjudged by the public as one of the finest.

"The clinching argument in my mind came not long ago when it was shown me that before the picture was finished there had been offered for it in outright sale about $50,000 more than the production cost. This, of course, was refused by Mr. Garson, who firmly believes, and is backing his belief, that this will be one of the biggest money winners in the history of motion pictures."

Mayer Goes West to Rest and to Visit His Company

LOUIS B. MAYER, producer exchangeman and theatre owner, who has set the motion picture world talking by the successful methods used in launching Anita Stewart in her first De Luxe production, "Virtuous Wives," is planning a trip to the Pacific Coast. The object of the journey is two-fold—first to rest up after a campaign which for strenuosity has hardly been equaled in the film industry; and, second, to get a close-up of Stewart's work under the masterly direction of Lois Weber.

Speaking of the proposed trip, Mr. Mayer declared he could ill afford the time such a trip would take just now, but there were impelling reasons why he should not delay it any longer. "Of course," he explained, "I really need a rest, for between my theatres, my exchanges and my producing I've clearly had to go some during the past few months. On top of that the old flu got me for a while, and it has left its effect on me. But I can frankly say that my real reason for making the trip at this time is to keep in touch with the production of the Stewart productions under the direction of Lois Weber. You know since arranging with Miss Weber to direct Anita Stewart, I have as yet had no opportunity of seeing her and expressing personally the satisfaction I feel in securing her to direct Miss Stewart's, and I might add my own, destinies in the producing field.

"I have given Miss Weber carte blanche to spend all the money necessary to make great productions, but I want to meet her personally and assure her that in this respect I mean just what I say. She already has a remarkable reputation to sustain, and with such a star as Stewart and the whole-hearted support she is receiving and will continue to receive from my whole organization, she cannot fail to enhance that reputation.

"I am also very anxious to see Miss Stewart. She has already told me she is perfectly happy at the Coast, and that she is enjoying the best of health. She is certainly a wonder to come back so strong after a year and a half's absence from the screen. I don't know of another star who could have done it. It simply shows the strong hold she must have had on the picture-going public."

Long Runs for "Virtuous Wives."

Manager Harry Scott of the Madison Film Exchange, Detroit, announces many long runs on "Virtuous Wives." Among them one week at the Madison, Detroit; one week at the Regent, Detroit; one week at the Majestic Garden, Grand Rapids; four days each at the Franklin, Saginaw; New Regent, Battle Creek, and Garden, Flint. Three days each at the Rex, Jackson; Fuller, Kalamazoo; Regent, Muskegon; and Majestic, Ann Arbor.

New Color Concern Starts Work on Commercial Lines

A NEW color process all in line for the treatment of feature productions has been projected by the Artcolor Pictures Company and has been found to contain values characterized by practicability as well as beauty. A demonstration of this process reveals not alone its capacity for projecting objects in natural color on the screen but also the distinguishing of the texture of fabrics.

This process, which was perfected by W. Francis Fox, of England, assisted by A. G. Waddington, also of England, and which is covered by six sets of patents in all civilized countries, is a development based on the Kinemacolor experiments of 1913. The Artcolor Company claims for the process under present conditions a capacity of ten thousand feet daily, to be rapidly increased.

The color in the Artcolor process is obtained by chemical action on emulsion, and it is claimed that no dye or coloring matter is used. The blacks are intense and the whites are of a purer quality than those in the ordinary black and white picture. The film turned out by the Artcolor Company does not have to depend on any special attachment for the projector and can be run on any standard machine with the best results.

Thus far a seven-reel feature and a two-reel comedy have been completed by the Artcolor Pictures Company, which is now in a position to produce on its own accord, or to co-operate with other concerns on a royalty basis. A series of educational films will also be issued shortly, many of which will be made from Kinemacolor negatives now in the possession of Artcolor.

L. J. Dittmar and Ed H. Philippi are the central figures in the Artcolor Pictures Company, with headquarters at 1600 Broadway, New York City.

STARTS YEAR BY BREAKING A RECORD

That's What Select Does When Exchanges' Post-Flu Impulse Gets Into Full Stride

UNUSUAL results have been attained by Select Pictures Corporation in the matter of business done by this company as a whole throughout the United States in the period extending from the last week in November until the week ending January 4, both inclusive. How satisfactory Select's business has been during this period is indicated by the significant statement that in five of the six weeks enumerated net film rentals broke all records previously established. In other words five out of the six weeks in the period were record-breaking weeks for Select. And this in face of the fact that during these six weeks approximately 1,200 towns having theatres were closed down on account of the epidemic.

Arthur S. Kane, general manager of Select, was ambitious that the sales force of his company should get on its toes quickly and during the entire closed period was bending every effort to this end, being enthusiastically backed by Select's branch managers in the twenty-one cities in which the company maintains exchanges. It has been already recorded how Select staged a "Reopen with Select" campaign and achieved splendid results in getting managers of houses everywhere to use some Select feature as the attraction with which to reopen their houses after the dark period.

Once In, Select Refused to Get Out.

The argument was used that managers could find no surer way of winning back their patrons after a long period during which they had got out of the habit of coming to the playhouses than by offering them Select Pictures. How well this argument succeeded is shown by the fact that the very first week after the general resumption of business, the week ending November 30, Select's net film rentals broke all records established prior to the shutdown.

But having got into the houses, Select was determined to stay in them, and efforts were concentrated to this end. And so the week ending December 7 broke the record established by the week ending November 30. And again for the third consecutive week, that ending December 14, broke the record of the prior week.

The week ending December 21 was the week before Christmas, and it was hardly to be expected that this would prove a record-breaking week. Nevertheless, the net film rentals secured by Select that week compared favorably in amount with some of the past weeks of the period prior to the shutdown.

Select Boosted Holiday Boom.

Taking advantage of the week of Christmas holidays, and with the fact in their minds that this was their very last chance to again break a record in 1918, Select's entire force, from branch manager to road salesman, concentrated upon doing an eye-opening business. And so the week ending December 28 broke all records previously established by Select, making a fitting and glorious wind-up for the closing year.

General Manager Kane sent congratulatory telegrams to the various branches, acknowledging the work done and voicing the home office's appreciation. A day or two later, however, Mr. Kane followed this with a letter to branches in which he said: "During the year we have got to do greatly increased hustling to keep out of our own way, or the shadow of the closing weeks of 1918 will envelope us."

Determined that 1919 should not be threatened in this manner, Select's twenty-one branches in another burst of speed shattered at once, in the first week of the new year, the record established with the last week of the old. Net film rentals for the week ending January 4 are best Select ever had.

Hyman Busy in Michigan Field.

Arthur S. Hyman, of Detroit, met a live newspaper man when he visited Ishpeming, Mich., the other day. The fact that this reporter carried almost a full column story on Mr. Hyman's moving picture activities demonstrates that the business has become recognized as of importance. The Hyman interview was carried just as though he were John Ringling or any of the biggest "legitimate" showmen in the business. In this story the reporter proved that he was in touch with moving picture conditions, going into the details of Mr. Hyman's purchases of state rights subjects in a most thorough and interesting manner. We are advised by Mr. Hyman that the interview was quite unsolicited, proving that they watch the hotel registers pretty closely in Ishpeming. Mr. Hyman was on the upper peninsula booking Maurice Tourneur's "Woman;" Florence Reed, in "Wives of Men," and one of the Jewel features starring Mary MacLaren, for which Mr. Hyman controls the Michigan state rights.

St. Louis' First National Expands.

Having outgrown its old location in the New Grand Central Theatre Building, the St. Louis branch of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit last month opened new offices at 617 North Grand Avenue in the heart of the "White Way." There are now ten persons attached to the office force and this will shortly be increased.

"An unprecedented increase in the volume of our business forced us to seek more spacious quarters," said S. J. Baker, manager of the St. Louis branch. "We outgrew the old location, and if we had not got out when we did we would have had desks located in the corridor."

IRVING CHOSEN HEAD OF M. P. D. A.

New Chief of New York Lodge Gives Interesting Interview on Organization's Achievements and Aims —Nearly All Feature Directors in Membership

NEW YORK LODGE, of the Motion Picture Directors' Association, held its annual meeting and election of officers in the clubrooms, at 234 West Fifty-fifth street, January 7. Of this association there are two lodges, New York and Los Angeles, the organization having been formed in Los Angeles in 1915. Moving Picture World is indebted to the new director, George Irving, for some interesting information concerning this influential and valued factor in the industry.

"An interview with me," said Director Irving, "could best take the form of an appreciation of the work of Searle Dawley, whom I have just succeeded in office. Allen Dwan (1916) and Gordon Edwards (1917) have occupied the position of director since New York Lodge was founded, and their efforts placed our organization on the firm foundation which the activities and interest manifested by Director Dawley has amplified.

"As our association is a secret fraternal organization I cannot disclose the actual results accomplished at our meetings nor the policy of the new officers, but I can say this; they both strive to attain the same objects—the welfare of moving pictures. Besides electing me director the meeting chose the other officers: Charles Miller, assistant director; James Vincent, technical director; George B. Seitz, inner guard; Wally Van, outer guard; Ashley Miller, scenarist; C. Jay Williams, treasurer, with Sidney Olcott, Travers Vale and Emil Chautaud, the board of trustees.

Close to 100 Per Cent. Organization.

"The combined membership of the Los Angeles Lodge and the New York Lodge of the M. P. D. A. now includes nearly every director of feature pictures in America and is perhaps closer to a hundred per cent. organization than any other in the industry. Whether this is due to the fraternal feeling or to the common desire to make motion pictures an art as well as a business I can't say, but I do know that every member is trying to dignify his calling to such an extent that it will receive the respect of a 'profession.'

"You know the outside world has an idea that a director is a man who tells actors what to do through a megaphone and for this slight service is paid a fancy salary—just as they think all the cameraman has to do is to turn the crank smoothly. They do not realize that a director must have some knowledge of a few things like architecture, interior decorating, lighting, dramatic construction, locations, cameras, cost, schedules, efficiency, executive ability, history, art, literature and above all—acting.

"He must be able to play all the tricks of a regular stage director in addition to a few dozen others which the camera and conditions develop; must be able to take a few hundred supers at 8 A. M. and before night fight the whole battle, having clothed them, drilled them, fed them, fought them, paid them, and demobilized them in nine hours. One of our directors had permission to photograph a squadron of aeroplanes at a big field. The commanding officer asked what he wished the ships to do.

"'Take off together and fly in battle formation like this.' 'We have never done that yet. I'd have to think it over for a few days,' said the C. O. (This, of course, was some time ago).

Thought Director Crazy, but Did It.

"The director knew that 'a few days' meant a large expense for salaries, etc., so he said to the C. O.: 'Well, I'll come down tomorrow for a few single shots, but if you can do what I would like it would be a great help. I'll bring my company on the chance that you can do it tomorrow.' The C. O. thought the director was crazy, but when he reached the field the next day twenty-eight machines were lined up ready for flight and for the first time in the history of that field all the ships were in the air at the same time.

"Each day brings new problems, for nothing can be done twice in the same way if we are going to keep the people interested. Under Mr. Dawley's direction the lodge has heard several addresses by experts in the various technical lines, and in the discussions which followed there was sure proof that each man approached the question from an individual angle which naturally gave different conclusions and results.

"The M. D. A. ball was a great success and we have been asked often when we will repeat it. This we hope to do when War and Flu are things of the past and the Coal Barons permit a few of the studios to have a full and sure supply of coal.

Thanks Division of Films.

"The Directors' Advisory Committee to the Committee on Public Information, Division of Films, would like to thank Charles S. Hart for his many courtesies and applaud his decision not to compete with the industry by making regular dramatic war productions. Director Calvert was appointed from this lodge to have charge, as Colonel Calvert, of the film activities of the Ordnance Department U. S. A. The memorial tablet in the lodgerooms contains the names of two of our most valued members, Joe Kaufman and Barry O'Neil. Our service flag shows seven men in uniform.

"All the Liberty Loans were heavily subscribed to. The third loan amounting to over $150,000 from the New York Lodge alone. The Red Cross and the War Drives were not forgotten.

Courtesies to Owners of "Locations."

"A subject that has received a good deal of attention is the lack of appreciation for the use of estates and locations. Cases have been reported where valuable permissions have been lost through lack of thoughtfulness and the lodge has brought this forcefully to every director's attention. There are many minor questions which simply need to be spoken of to quickly be remedied.

"Just as the frank expressions of the present Peace Commissioners in their world subjects must prepare the public mind, so our association hopes that by the mere showing of an abuse the remedy will naturally be found. The responsibility of the director's position is thus more forcibly brought home to us and the official action of the lodge in many cases makes a precedent.

"Many of the New York lodge are on the Coast, where they are welcomed to the Los Angeles lodge. The field is therefore well covered from both directions, and we have an active organization to take up any question which will enable the directors of this country to help the art.

Operators Get a Dollar Increase.

Motion picture operators of Kansas City, Kan., are to be given an increase of $1 a week in their pay. This announcement is made by the Information and Education Service of the Department of Labor.

"The controversy between the motion picture exhibitors and the operators in Kansas City, Kan., has been adjusted," the department states. "The men will receive $20 a week for three to three and one-half hours' work a day, an increase of $1 a week."

Mott Indorses Hancock Picture.

Herbert E. Hancock's two-reeler, "Bringing the Boys Back Home," prior to its release by Educational January 31, is receiving the greatest auxiliary exploitation ever given to an instructive film designed for picture theatres. The twelve hundred Young Men's Christian Association secretaries in the leading towns of the country have been constituted its active press agents and promoters. The secretaries are lined up solidly behind John R. Mott, the chief executive of the Y. M. C. A.

FACTS AND COMMENTS

Advertising Aids and the Exchanges

FORTIFYING the complaint voiced recently by Ralph Ruffner of Butte that there is lack of co-operation on the part of exchanges with exhibitors when the latter are seeking service accessories, word comes from Des Moines that the described condition prevails there. The Iowa story, which is printed on another page, sets forth that kicks to the exchanges bring the reply that they "haven't got 'em"—and the interest in the subject on the part of the exchange employe terminates.

In conversation this past week with two home office men the writer put the complaint—this was before the arrival of the letter from Des Moines—squarely before them. He was assured the trouble was with the exchange, not with headquarters. The important matter of seeing the exhibitors supplied with the complementary stuff they require was delegated to a shipper or booker, who looked upon the whole proceeding as an inconsequential detail the only purpose of which was to make life less worth living for him. Asked as to the way to remedy the situation, the answer was quickly given: "Put on salary in each exchange a man, a good man, whose sole duty will be to see that exhibitors get the accessories with which to put over their shows right. Give the exhibitors, within reason, these essentials and put the overhead on the price of the films."

He Seems to Be a Good Breed

CONGRATULATIONS to the Rev. Noel J. Breed of Grand Rapids, Wis.! When he found many of his flock were determined to go to picture performances on Sunday evenings he took counsel of wisdom and of courage and not of narrowness and of fear. He would provide a show of his own selection, and he would put it on at the local opera house. The results are told on another page. Among these may be noted that not only did the clergyman find in the auditorium his own parishioners, "en masse," but a goodly sprinkling of strangers. And the world over the sight of strangers in the congregation doeth the ministerial heart good. It would seem to be a safe assumption that a man of the breadth of the Rev. Mr. Breed would "hold" an audience once he had corralled it—that he would be an interesting person to sit under. And it is not improbable some of the strangers might have an irresistible desire to look in on him on a Sunday forenoon!

Here's Sympathy to a Fighter

THE sympathy of the men and women in the motion picture business will go out to Carl Laemmle and his daughter and son. Not all trade battles are fought solely within the hours governing the opening and closing of office doors. To a man who has so long been identified with the film trade and a participant in so many of the controversies inevitably associated with the stabilizing of a rapidly expanding industry the loss of his helpmate and adviser must be especially keen. Mrs. Laemmle's death will be mourned not only by her family and friends but the beneficiaries of her charities.

A New Angle to Showmanship

WHAT an upsetting indeed of a long prevailing notion is the action credited to the New York Fox exchange! Here we have always heard of an exhibitor seeking an exclusive booking of a desirable film for his own neighborhood. Apparently no one ever thought of the scheme of plastering with paper a community and telling the residents therein that at any one of an enumerated list of local houses they might see the subject advertised. It's a new angle in showmanship surely enough, as Manager Rosenbluh suggests. And we may well believe also that it has, as he says, started a get-together spirit that is going to work out other problems of showmanship.

The Message of the Poster

WELL worth consideration by exhibitors and distributors are the words of Albert De Montluzin, addressed to the members of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers at their second luncheon of the year. The value of the poster of whatever size is measured solely by the story placed upon it, he said. "The best location procurable is not worth a dollar if the message flared before the eye of the public is not one of commanding force," he added.

GLITTERING GENERALITIES

By Edward Weitzel

TIME was when the art of the playwright was not taught in the universities and books on the subject were practically nil so far as this country was concerned. Then, one day, about forty years ago, a book appeared which, its author fondly imagined, was a complete guide to the making of plays. It was written by a professor of French literature in a Middle West college, and was brought out by one of the representative publishing houses of New York. It made interesting reading. Some of the good professor's technical information came as a surprise to the expert in stagecraft; but every branch of the subject was covered and, the preface stated, there was really no reason why anyone with a good story could not put it into correct play form, after giving the work a reasonable amount of study. A famous French drama was taken apart by the professor, in order to show how it was built up by a renowned expert. Nothing could be easier than to achieve success along similar lines of construction!

Copies of the book were sent to the reviewers, and laudatory comments appeared in the public prints. Indorsements were received from noted personages in the theatrical world. The professor was distinctly It. As George Ade might have put it: "He Was the Wise Guy Who Knew the Game."

Then He Wrote a Play Himself.

ONE day the professor had an inspiration: Why not write a play himself? Mon Dieu! could anything be more stupid than not to have thought of this before? He, the author of an admirable treatise on the art of the drama, of all men who so well fitted to create a stage masterpiece? In his case to think was to act. In an incredibly short space of time the play was finished and forwarded to a prominent producer. It made the return trip with equal celerity.

Becoming weary of paying express charges to and from New York, the professor resolved to vindicate his ability as a working playwright and turn the laugh on the managers who had turned down his play by producing the piece at his own expense. He rented the leading theatre in the metropolis of the Middle Western state, hired a company, insisted upon conducting rehearsals himself, and sat in the first entrance on the opening night beaming with pride and joy. He was delighted with the play and the performance. But the audience went away from there marveling how a man who knew so much about the drama could have managed to keep even the slightest evidence of his knowledge out of his work. The play contained about every technical error committed by the most gifted of tyros. The professor dealt in nothing but glittering generalities. Only these and nothing more!

More Glittering Generalities.

WITHIN the last year a deal of discussion has appeared in public print, touching upon the financial condition of the moving picture and the men who run the screen theatres. The patronage in several parts of the country has indicated a falling off of interest in a class of pictures that once packed the theatres. The exhibitors claim that indifferent stories are the principal cause of lowered receipts, aided by the misapplied efforts of equally indifferent stars. Glittering generalities in generous quantities have been written on the same subject by men in other branches of the industry. Articles of the same nature have been printed in the editorial columns of the trade papers. Nothing specific has come out of the entire batch of generalities. Would-be guides to the always satisfied spectator and the correspondingly satisfying bank deposit would pass along the necessary concrete advice if they had it to give.

Poorly Made Scenarios Behind the Trouble.

THE men best qualified to speak on this matter of better pictures are the producers. All cannot voice their opinions with the same amount of authority, but the writer ventures the belief that the conviction is spreading among them that most of their troubles are born in their scenario departments. Stories reach the hands of the directors so faultily put together and so lacking in any relation to real drama that the men who superintend the transference of the scenarios to the film are forced to turn out nothing but patchwork.

Errors of construction are continually being made in scenarios, which betray an absolute want of even elemental knowledge of playwriting. Within the last three months a picture was shown on Broadway in which the fine acting of the star came to naught at the finish because a scene that was meant to be impressive became bathos and was laughed at openly by many of the spectators. No capable scenario writer would have supplied the situation. And the director is also to blame for having used it. Other pictures shown during the same time revealed a fine disregard for the practical demands of motion picture construction.

The continuity writer's responsibility is not limited to hitching one incident to another. It should be done so that the result makes drama. And this same drama is the strongest and surest means of giving a body of spectators what they want in return for the money left at the box-office.

THE LAW OF THE DRAMA

By Louis Reeves Harrison

VERY much absorbed by the business of life, we are singularly unappreciative of those whose talents make it more largely enjoyable. We of motion picture production are delighted with the new institution we have helped call into being, with its popularity, with its powerful influence upon playgoers. We know that it has a general appeal to the sympathies, to the imagination, to our sense of poetic justice, to the finer part of us that is often in revolt against the daily routine in which we make a living. We enter warmly into the spirit of this new institution, as though it was self-created, whereas it is really the outgrowth of occasional flames of talent among us, little sparks or steady glows, which illumine the screen and through it the progress and happiness we enjoy.

Such talent comes from modern Josephs.

They are primarily the interpreters of dreams.

A strange place is that dream world, one of vague longing for most of us, compelled as we are to deal with the rigid and unpoetic facts of existence, but it is a beautiful world, star-sown with inspiration and hope, and we deeply enjoy any clear interpretation of its hidden meanings. To very few is it given to do this. They are Josephs of keen susceptibilities, who have received inspiration and cultivation from some one or another's unusual environment. Their vigorous imaginative flow has been rightly directed by study, training and recognition of certain art principles.

The destiny of moving pictures is in their hands.

They have the saving insight of the splendid minority.

They alone can place our New Art among the honored.

Leaders of suggestive criticism, playwrights constructive as well as creative, directors who are instinctive dramatists, these are the Josephs, some of them cast into slavery; these are the shapers of a wondrous art just beginning to realize its own functions, just teething in power. They are subconsciously formulating our guiding laws for all time to come.

There shall be no limit to subject matter on the screen.

One first and foremost principle stands forth.

The manner, not the matter, is subject to regulation.

Between constructive methods, those of the stage and those of printed fiction, choice goes naturally to the medium interpreted by visible human beings. Then a novelist is never sure that a reader will understand a word the way he employs it, hence he uses a verbal amplification rejected in drama and unnecessary on the screen. The laws of modern drama, not its outworn conventions and ancient traditions, especially those governing methods of carrying audience interest and emotion from a low state to a much higher one, come close to embodying characteristics essential to success in screen products.

Remarkably applicable are the three unities.

They were propounded by Aristotle, 400 B. C.

Unity of time, of place and of action.

For swift and powerful dramatic effect, one line of action from start to finish is essential; few lapses of time should be permitted, and best results come from the least number of locations. These are very simple principles in themselves, but the problem of smoothly applying them is one to call forth an author's highest powers of concentration. These will do for a start—they are liable to strain the average editorial brain—and they are guides, not exactions, intended to help determine what standing moving pictures shall have with the intelligent public.

On our intelligent people our future depends.

No lantern of Diogenes is need to show where they will go.

The light of high quality always attracts a following.

Every man who expects to amount to anything sets his eyes on the top range of his possibilities. Every audience sets its eyes on the top range of performance. Every producer is playing for stakes—that adds to the sporting nature of business—but just now he is furnishing plays first and then trying to find out how they take. It should not be a mere matter of chance, for every art is founded on principles worth providing for in advance. What is most needed is appreciation of the laws of drama and of those who enjoy drama and not a tangle of nothing in particular.

ON PROPER PROPORTIONS

By Robert C. McElravy.

IN the making of a photoplay, a legitimate drama or a novel, or for that matter any form of story, whether short or long, it would seem that the author in a way sets out to prove a certain case. He takes a set of characters and undertakes to move them toward a specific climax, and his success in manipulating them, or in permitting them to manipulate themselves, is the measure of his success as a story teller.

These characters the author tries to make as lifelike as possible, since it is always his purpose to hold up the illusion of life to his audience. They move from one situation to another, but always with a definite end in view, and it is a nice question for the author or director to determine just how long they should remain in a particular place. It gets down to a question of proper proportions, one of the most important things to be considered in putting the story together.

Certain writers, among them Stevenson and Poe, have held that nothing should go into a story that did not have some direct bearing upon the outcome. This is undoubtedly true, particularly of the short story, and in our day it even applies to the novel and the longer screen stories. A certain amount of rambling about may seem to intrude itself in the longer forms occasionally, but even this will generally be found to have some purpose, usually for necessary characterization or atmosphere.

In the judgment of this writer more feature stories are weakened through lack of proper proportion than from any other reason. A director makes the mistake of playing up the crime interest too realistically and at too great a length. This often send an audience away denouncing the story as mere sensation when as a matter of fact it was not so intended. Or perhaps the sex interest is dealt with too freely. In such a case the audience is prone to forget the good features of the story and condemn it as indecent and immoral. Just a few scenes too many and one or two exaggerated situations and the whole story topples to a fall.

It is the special task of the story-teller, by the demands of human interest, to peer over the precipice without falling and to skate over thin ice without breaking through. If he tries to avoid this entirely his story becomes dull and uninteresting, or, what is worse, a mere moral preachment. But if his foot slips in his hazardous occupation he may be sure that the merest dolt in the audience will see it and be a witness to his disaster.

We saw a feature picture not long ago which was a brilliant success in every respect except for one trace of false logic, conveyed in a single sub-title, and a failure to adjust the proportions properly. In this story the heroine, a pretty working girl, dined sumptuously with a designing male. She discovered after this one dainty meal, so the sub-title relates, that her constitution could no longer stand coarse home food. This one sub-title immediately weakened the whole argument of the story. It suffered later through a too sudden reformation of the man, who was pictured as a villain and a cad of the worst description in the beginning, and was later supposed to be reformed through a few weeks of life in the pure air of the country. A little less about the weakness of the girl and a few scenes more justifying the man's change of heart would have made this a much more convincing and acceptable feature.

It is no easy thing to gauge the proportions of a story correctly, and a reviewer cannot tell whether this has been accomplished until the scenes and subtitles have had their final editing; and the better a subject is as a whole the more important it is that the details should be accurately harmonized. It was a wise man who said that "Art is long."

William J. Clark Honored by Home Town Associates

IGNAL honor was paid William J. Clark, president of Exhibitors' Mutual Distributing Corporation, on a holiday visit to Grand Rapids, Mich., during which he closed his business affairs in the Michigan city to come to New York to direct actively the affairs of the company.

Mr. Clark resigned as president of the municipal commission of Grand Rapids on December 1 to take up his duties as president of Exhibitors' Mutual and returned to Grand Rapids at Christmas time to move his home to New York City.

Seventy-five leading men of Grand Rapids gave a banquet in his honor on the evening of January 3 at the Pantlind hotel at which his public activities were extolled and sincere regret expressed at his departure from the community. Fred H. Locke, city manager, presided, and the principal address was delivered by Judge Brown.

On his visit Mr. Clark was presented with a beautifully engrossed memorial, adopted by the city commission of Grand Rapids and presented at a formal session of the city commission by Commissioner Gallmeyer, the mayor.

1919 Finds Increase in Film Magazines—Opening Numbers of Pathe Review Good

THE year 1919 promises to be a record year in educational developments of the screen. The readjustment period which is bound to follow in the wake of the world war is already in active session, and one of the most auspicious of its revelations points to a stronger development of the screen magazine form of feeding education to the public. The Pathe Exchange, Inc., figures in the first of the newer developments along this line and will place on the market, commencing January 19, a nicely balanced fortnightly screen magazine known as the Pathe Review.

Pathe has one of the finest libraries of educational negatives in existence; and from this library as well as from other sources will be drawn material of varied interests for the compilation of the Pathe Review. Among the other sources of extraction will be the genius of Raymond L. Ditmars in photographing successfully different species of the animal kingdom.

The first of these magazines will contain an unusually interesting study, showing how music affects animals, a slow motion picture, "An Analysis of Baseball," "Picturesque Brittany" and "Bees and Butterflies."

No. 2 opens with "France—the Picturesque," which contains hand-colored scenes in and about the town of Le Puy en Velay. Spots of great beauty, including gardens and river scenes, with a rural snap or two, are mingled with scenes from the streets of the town. Special points of interest include the Rock of Corneille, the Church of St. Michel and the Door of the Penitents. Women making lace are also shown. "Wading Birds" from the Ditmars camera mixes comedy with information concerning the crane, the Bahaman flamingo, the heron and the stork. An amusing incident of the picture shows a group of cranes and storks going to dinner in parade formation. A slow motion picture presents male and female exponents of diving, and "Sunny Spain," a colored picture brings us in touch with some of the types and amusements of that country.

No. 3 opens with the best illustration of the action of the heart that has been made, we venture to say. The heart of a tortoise is used in describing the pulsations of this most important organ of the body and the manner in which the blood is pumped through the arteries. The heart of a mammal is also shown including a closeup illustrating the effect which alcohol has on the human heart. A slow motion picture of boxing is of special interest, and with various species of the porcupine family including the Canadian, Himalayian, the Brazilian and the Australian, which is known as the duck-billed ant eater, from the Ditmars series, form an attractive group of scenes.

These magazines are being edited, and it is a noticable fact that no waste material is being forced into it.

Goldwyn's Ford Numbers Stirringly Modern in Type

GOLDWYN'S first step forward with Ford Weeklies tells "What Uncle Sam Will Do for Two Cents." We have had the story of the postage stamp in film before, but never before has it been given such a careful definition with regard to its carrying capacity as in the first issue of the Ford Weekly through the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation. In it we learn all about the work of the various departments of the modern post office; we see the cancellation machine at work, the sorting of the outgoing mail for its different points of destination, and also the sorting of the incoming mail into alloted districts. The postmen on their rounds are introduced, and also the more modern innovation the postwoman. The mail wagons and their uses, the parcel post department, and finally the overland route which takes our mail all the way from coast to coast for two cents for actual postage, and an extra cent to help lick the Kaiser are shown. The old pony express for which rural postmen with their various kinds of vehicles have been substituted is also represented in the picture. Scenes of the air mail route are also shown. Monday, Jan. 13, was the release daet set for it.

No. 2 tells "The Truth About the Liberty Motor." Starting in the forest from whence come the logs to make the planes, we see the making of the planes, and learn that yard after yard of the best quality linen is used in the manufacture of these. Scenes at the works of the Fisher Body Company are shown and also in the Ford cylinder department where the actual molding of the cylinders is seen. The putting of machine guns in place, the finished product ready to be shipped out after being thoroughly tested and the assembled aeroplane in flight close the picture.

No. 3 entitled "Hang it All!" gives a full illustration of the manufacture of wall paper. It opens with the gathering of the dye stuffs, and the filtering and mixing of them. We learn from the picture that twelve colors can be printed at the same time, and that they are applied to rolls which have been stamped with designs which have been made by artists. The design is fixed in place, or rather strengthened by pieces of brass, and when the colors have been set in place, and the surface of the paper covered with a kind of glue and passed through the rollers, finished wall paper is the result. Embossing which is still done by the old-fashioned method, and the manufacture of paper with leather and velvet finishes are included as a most interesting part of the picture.

Each of these numbers, which are stirringly modern in type and arrangement, closes with a patriotic cartoon.

Big Hog Island Ship Yards in Moving Y. M. C. A. Film

A TWO-REEL picture of the activities at the Hog Island ship yards entitled "Bringing the Boys Back Home" is being released by the Educational Films Corporation of America, Jan. 31. The picture was directed by Herbert E. Hancock, and the chief mover in the picture, she who is represented as journeying from the city to the Hog Island ship yards to make personal investigation is Mineta Timayo, a young woman of charming personality. She tells you the story of the yards as she passes from one place of interest to another with a clever combination of subtitle and photographic illustration, and thrills you immensely when she rides over the yards in a derrick bucket.

The story, after a picture of the waste stretch of land represented by Hog Island in 1917 has been shown, takes us in at the gate where we have to show our pass. We then see the baggage of new arrivals being searched for whiskey, and one man (impersonated by Johnny Mack) getting into trouble. The school of ship building, in which one is paid to learn a vocation is a revelation of American efficiency, and the view of the vast stretch of shipways is a fitting answer to the bridge of ships that did so much toward helping to win the war. The installation of a huge propeller, girls doing electrical welding, the fire department of the island in action, and views of the pretty homes renting at $26 a month that have been built for the employes of the ship yard are seen. The employes filing into the office for their pay, a closeup of a pay envelope showing a $5.00 deduction from a $50 wage for the Liberty Bond Club, and scenes in the Y. M. C. A. hut are all of interest.

The picture is being given a pre-release at the Strand Theatre, New York City, and deserves to be exhibited in every community throughout the country.

"The Land of the Great Spirit."

A Prizma natural color presentation of the Blackfoot country was used as a corelative educational in the Rivoli program for the week of Jan. 5, "The Heart of Wetona," a story of an Indian girl being the featured production of the week. This picture gives considerable rein to the Prizma method, presents some fine types of the Blackfoot tribe, and also enhances through this beautiful color method the otherwise black and white landscapes of the film. Prizma films are being released through the World Film Corporation.

"With the Boy Scouts in Camp."

The Universal Screen Magazine No. 101 shows how the Boy Scouts spend their time at their winter camp in the mountains. In the opening scene a boy is pictured at the camp writing a letter to his mother. The film then takes up the incidents mentioned in the letter when we see exactly what the boys do at their mountain camp, from the time they get up in the morning until they go to bed. The scenes showing them at drill, cutting down a tree, peeling potatoes or doing a dance before retiring are all interesting.

Universal Films Buffalo Ranch.

One of the most interesting subjects in the 101st issue of the Universal Screen Magazine gives a good idea of how Indians on a Government reservation operate a buffalo ranch for the purpose of keeping this fast disappearing American animal from becoming extinct. The opening scene shows the herd in the background. This is followed by others showing the herd being driven into the corral by Indians on horseback. Fine specimens of buffalo are shown, and altogether the subject is a most acceptable and interesting one.

"Sugar Growing in the West Indies."

One of Pictograph's choice bits for the week of Jan. 5 covers the sugar industry of the West Indies. The scenes of the picture introduce beauty of landscape as well as giving a full and clear description of the planting of the budded cane, its growth and harvest, and finally its milling and preparation for the refinery. Many interesting types of the native population are shown in the picture, to which considerable footage is allowed. An interesting part of the picture shows the small train of cars with its miniature engine operating on a narrow gauge railroad, bringing the sugar cane to the mills. Arrived at the mills and the grinding of the cane and the clarifying of the syrup at the end, the centrifugal crystallization machines are put to work converting the syrup into sugar.

"California Oil Gardens."

In No. 6099 of the Paramount-Bray Pictograph we get a new angle on Los Angeles. The natural oil supply which lies below a portion of the city was brought to mind when the war's big demand for this commodity displayed itself, and in the back yards and gardens of Los Angeles citizens, oil pumps took the place of flowers. It was a conservation measure on the part of these good people, and with the power contributed by neighboring power plants they pumped oil for their own uses. The Pictograph has an excellent series of views of the pumps in action and other scenes of interest in that immediate neighborhood.

"Official War Review, No. 29."

The chief subject of this number, and in fact the only one, is the trip of President Wilson to France on the George Washington. It begins with the departure from the dock in this country and shows many scenes taken en route, including President and Mrs. Wilson wearing life belts, and some special demonstrations of depth bomb explosions. The arrival in France is also pictured. The number is naturally one of wide appeal.

"Japan of Today, No. 1."

Students of Japanese life and customs, and they are innumerable in this country, will be particularly pleased with this opening number treating of Japan. It gives a map of the various islands at the beginning and then takes the observer on a tour of several cities, where processions, religious rites, sports and industrial pursuits are pictured. There is also a close study of the work of school children.

Patriotism in Hebrew Infant Asylum.

How some of the babies whose fathers "gave their last full measure of devotion" are being cared for at the New York Hebrew Infant Asylum is shown in the Universal Screen Magazine No. 101. The subject "Better Babies" appears under the main title "Unheraided Patriots of America," and presents some interesting types of babyhood. It also shows the filling of milk bottles for a possible thousand little ones, and other scenes which are reassuring to those interested in the welfare of war orphans.

Short Items of Interest.

One of the new concerns that are preparing to augment the output of the educational market is the Howell Pictures Company. This concern has offices at 110 West 40th street, New York City, and will be heard from more definitely in the near future when the plans of the company are fully formulated.

A moving picture showing how babies adopted by the Spence Alumnae Society are cared for was exhibited at the Garden Theatre, New York City, on the evening of Jan. 9, and the afternoon and evening of Jan. 10. The picture entitled "Home Fires" shows the life of a baby from the time it enters the Spence Home and Nursery until it is taken by foster parents.

Chautauqua Picture Bureau Aids Kansas City Exhibitors

THE Chautauqua Motion Picture Bureau at Kansas City has got on a basis whereby co-operation is aimed at—and effected—with local exhibitors. The possibility of such a harmonious situation is suggestive. In most cases, a local exhibitor, especially in a town where there are shows only two or three nights a week, has the opportunity of hooking up with the local church or school which plans to put on a Chautauqua of pictures for a series of once a week shows for six weeks.

The exhibitor profits by the use of his house—and the patronage of people who previously had not been in the habit of going to shows. Where there is no local exhibitor with whom to make such an arrangement the church or school either hires its machines or, as in many cases, has its own equipment. The resumption of schools in the territory and the lifting of the ban have caused the announcement of many of these Chautauquas that had previously been planned for December. They will help to get the public back into the habit of going to the theatres.

Former Employe of Arrow Writes from Firing Line

AMONG the interesting letters from members of the motion picture industry who have seen service in France is one just received by W. E. Shallenberger, president of the Arrow Film Corporation, from John Harrington, who was formerly in the employ of that corporation and now with Company K, 113th Infantry, 29th Division, A. E. F., which we quote in part:

"Well, it will soon be six months since we came over here and it seems like that many years. I consider myself fortunate as I have not been sick or wounded. I have seen great sights and active service, having had four tricks at the front line. The last was the most severe, yet the most successful. This was north of Verdun about twenty-five miles and just across the Meuse River. We took over this sector on the 8th of October, being opposed by Austrians until we captured about 1,500 of them. They were relieved by the Saxon guard, considered as next to the Prussian guard, and we had it hot and heavy for ten days. During this time it was almost constant artillery and machine gun fire from both sides. Oh, yes, I forgot the perpetual shelling of gas, of which I still feel the effects.

"Zero hour for my company was 11 o'clock October 10, with a two-kilometre objective through woods filled with the Boche and machine guns in concrete emplacements, back of trees and up in them. After a fifteen-minute artillery preparation we went after them. We hadn't gone far before we were held up by terrific artillery and machine gun fire. A little later we continued the advance, and they began to come out with their hands up, yelling "Kamerad." Some would do this and then when we would rush for them they would lay down their machine guns and commence firing. The battle continued until we reached our objective at about five o'clock. Here during the night they counter-attacked three times, but were driven off with heavy losses. Two days later they tried to dislodge us with a perfect hail of artillery for nearly ten hours. It is estimated by our intelligence department that 50,000 shells, ranging from one-pounders to twelve-inch 'ash cans,' fell on our ridge.

"During the nineteen days we held this sector the division drove them thirteen kilometers nearer Germany, capturing nearly 2,300 prisoners, 300 machine guns, a battery of artillery and tons of ammunition. When the armistice was signed we were again packed up ready to go to the sector north of Nancy. When we heard the great news maybe we weren't happy!

Crandall Company Declares Dividend.

Harry M. Crandall has announced that the board of directors of the Crandall Theatre Company, Washington, D. C., operating the Metropolitan Theatre, has declared a 7 per cent. dividend on all preferred stock for the period ending December 31, 1918. This dividend is payable January 15.

The annual meeting of the stockholders of the company was scheduled to be held in the general offices at 926 F street northwest, January 16, at three o'clock.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Dead Ones.

WHENEVER you have a film you know is not up to the average, don't help it to damage your business by seeking to make business through special advertising. Let come and go as softly as possible. It might even pay to tell your patrons that the offering is not up to the mark. Your house and the reputation of your house is of infinitely greater value than the box office receipts for any one day. If you are so fixed that you cannot avoid playing an undesirable film, sacrifice your receipts for that day rather than hurt the reputation of your house for some time to come. This may hurt at the moment, but it will not hurt half as much as having to close down because your business is dead. Have the nerve to spoil one day and it will come back to you in greater returns later on. The better plan, of course, is to try and avoid the dead ones, but this cannot always be done.

Here's Program Stuff.

Here is an enclosure card from the Celebrated Players Film Corp., of Chicago. It was gotten out for Christie comedies, but it can be adapted for general program pictures, changing the wording to suit pictures in general, instead of merely the Christies.

A WAR LESSON FOR PEACE TIMES

WAR has taught us to save; to get the most out of things; to get things; to get things that have "most" in them.

THAT'S A GREAT LESSON FOR EXHIBITORS

The card is a pretty piece of work, done in red and blue on a brown mottled stock, but it will not reproduce.

Bleich, New Style.

Here is Mr. Bleich's newest idea in a weekly program for the Sunday issue. It is a good idea, except that the days might be dated. The chat to the right of the formal program is in Mr. Bleich's usual breezy style and he is as free to critize as to commend, which is why people take his word for it and crowd the house when he says a play is good. He speaks first of the feature with a second paragraph for the fillers. He does not think that the Normand picture is up to standard and he prepares his audience against some disappointment, and when he gets her in later and better plays he will still be able to sell her. It takes a little nerve to work along these lines, but it brings more real money in the long run. We like that new house signature. It is strong, dignified and simple. This is a better layout than many with much more ornamentation. The rule work here is twelve point newspaper border with mortises to prevent an abrupt ending of the line. We like, too, a strip of six threes. This is a characteristic Bleich display. He knows he has a good comedy and that box on the right. Better still, he knows too much to tag the Chaplin with a heavy feature, and he knows, too, that he will either have to race the feature or lose business, so he couples the Chaplin with a Sennett two-reeler, runs a show every hour, and runs it right. He tells that the show will be only one hour long, and there is no room for a kick on the part of any patron. One hour of fast comedy is plenty enough for anyone, and a lot better than forty minutes of comedy and an hour of drama. He is right from every angle. It will be noticed that he has the film two days, at different houses. He owns all the show shops in town and can move a film around to suit his plans. It is seldom that you catch Mr. Bleich doing what is not just right. He knows how to do things, and he does them.

Here's Mr. Brooks.

It has been rather a long time since Walter Brooks, of the Auditorium, Coatesville, Pa., came in for a visit, but here he is, and all the more welcome because of his long absence, but we hope that he comes more often in future. His program is pretty much the same as ever, though we note that he has dropped the time table from his days. His sheet is still a

6 by 12-inch, folded into a six-page railroad style. It will be noted that he gives the names of the comedies he is showing as well as the main titles. He knows that even a one-reel comedy will sometimes sell a show where the longer features do not, and so he tells all about his program instead of merely "a good comedy," which tells nothing. Mr. Brooks seems to go in more for superlatives than he used to, for the Talmadge is "the most exquisite Oriental production," and "Sporting Life" is "One of the greatest melodramas of the age." Both subjects will make good for the billing, but it is a bit extreme, though "Sporting Life" is really out of the ordinary. Mr. Brooks keeps his coming and current shows well apart. In a five tens he uses three-fifths for the coming attraction and employs rule to keep the two apart. This seems does not bury one below the other, as is too often the case with underline. Of course, 50 inches is a pretty generous space for some houses to buy, but the same idea can be carried out in three fives, if that is all the space the house can afford. It is not so much a matter of space as of planning. The last example is a three fours. The cut did not come up well because of poor press work, but the idea is good, and to some extent poor press work helps to puzzle the reader.

McCormick's "Four Flags."

S. Barrett McCormick made an unusual display for "Under Four Flags." He used three and four fifteens for the advance, using the statue of the Allies, which was originally made for a chain of cigar stores, and which has come into general use. It is particularly appropriate to this film, and is used in most of the official advertising. The cut was reproduced in both three and four-column meaure and was used both with solid type as shown in the two illustrations above and with short liners as shown in the larger of the second reproductions. The four fifteens was also used, along with text, for a three-color and black display in the Sunday issue, the effect being unusually good. In the color reproduction the flags of the Allies are all done in proper colors, the green of the Italian flag being gained through overprinting blue on yellow. The effect can be imagined. Even a black and one color attracts attention in newspaper work, and here five colors are used through combination. The large type displays are used for the advance. The recapitulation is used for a running advertisement. The advance work has been done through the use of banks of solid type. Now it is necessary only to keep hammering. The three seven and a halfs shown at the right take up the features singly and illustrate them. Practically all of the displays use cuts. The third reproduction shows a pair of three elevens, that on the right running white space above and below to gain the length. These are for current advertisements, and pick up a single incident while listing all of the big features. All of the copy has been space and copy preparation, than the average play feature, for Mr. McCormick knows that the best way to clean up on one of these Government features is to circus it, and even toward the end of the run he kept up the drive.

Ruff Meets His Waterloo.

As an advertiser Ralph Ruffner stands second to none, but as a champion oyster eater he is a rank and dismal failure. When Ruff happened in New York lately, he was promptly led out to lunch, and his first demand was for oysters—"great big ones"—to quote his very words. Ruff is used to the tiny Pacific Coast oysters and he had heard of the Atlantic brand. The uptown restaurants do not carry the largest oysters and arrangements were promptly made to take him downtown to the sole survivor of the once innumerable "oyster bays," and the order was put in for a broil and a dozen of the largest in the house on the half shell. Ruff was interested until the platter was shoved under his nose. There wasn't an oyster in the dozen that was not three and a half inches long, and they ran all the way up to four inches. As usual with dozens, there were thirteen of them. Ruff started in bravely enough, though he did look around for a knife until it was explained that it was not etiquette to make two bites to an oyster, but to let them trickle down the gullet like spaghetti. The first four went pretty fairly well, but he slowed on the fifth and used a dash of catsup to give added flavor. He took the next seven straight, but with increasing slowness, and then came that terrible last. It was one of the largest, because, after the first flush of enthusiasm he picked on the smaller ones first. It was suggested that he cut out the last few to make room for the broil, but he wanted to be game and finish the round, but he did more taking that eating for a long time. Then he got desperate. Clutching the catsup bottle by the throat he deluged that unfortunate oyster until it was coated an inch thick. Then he shut his eyes, gave one gulp, and the agony was over. He even recovered to the extent of eating three small broiled oysters, but he admitted that he had had his fill of oysters, and it certainly looked as though he had.

McCormick and the Smilers.

S. Barret McCormick has been holding a smile festival at the Circle, Indianapolis, recently. He started with Chaplin's "Shoulder Arms," and followed with Douglas Fairbanks in "He Comes Up Smiling," booing Chaplin back to run with Will Rogers. It was just after the "flu," and McCormick figured that it would help make business—and it certainly did. One three elevens for Fairbanks runs the arbor design at the top, down the sides and around the bottom to form the frame. Plain rule is used to frame the other display, both in this and the three-fifteens used in another advertisement for the "tomorrow." But in this latter example the rope is worked into the design to give it character. The Chaplin display is held down because he enjoyed a full week of starring, and it needs only the mention of a return date to keep him over. There are nineteen lines of solid eight point in this display, just below the title. Such an employment of eight point would give many advertisers a shock, but McCormick gets away with it right along, and he is not paying for the space just to waste it. He makes it readable and knows that people read it on that account, just as the greeting in the John Wanamaker advertisements are read by many men who are not in the least interested in dry goods. They enjoy them. The Fairbanks bank is a ten and twelve point. Either advertisement is a good display without this small type. It will probably sell if the patron does not read the finer print, but it will sell more if they do—and they must, for the house plays capacity with this standard form of advertising.

Here's Another.

The Palace, Orange, N. J., also offers a children's matinee each Saturday, running a special bill from 2 until 4 with the regular program, at no extra charge, from then until 5.30. This makes rather too long a show for children. It would be better to give a special morning performance, and make a special admission price, running, if possible, a war-news picture in addition to some specially selected reels of photoplay. It is as a special event that the Children's Matinee works best. If they want to see the regular show they can come again in the afternoon. One good feature in a recent Palace program is the devotion of an entire page to the Official War Review for that week. It takes up the week's offerings in detail and makes the reader realize how important this contribution from the Division of Films really is. The Review has the material, but you must play it up to make all patrons realize that it is more important than the average five-reel feature. Ten years from now it is probable that these same reels will be made features in the schools for the education of the new generation. We stand too close to the war to realize their wonderful value.

Mailing Lists.

Here is the rather curt notice from a recent program:

OUR MAILING LIST.

After this issue of your "HILL" News we will discontinue our old mailing list. If you want it to come to you every week drop us a "postal" with your name and address—it's worth it.

It is necessary to keep a mailing list up to date by some means, but we think that the summary abandonment of the old list is too sweeping. There are better schemes which can be made to work. Perhaps the best is to stamp or print on the envelope the notice to the postmaster that stamps will be sent for the return of any undelivered piece. Your local postmaster can give you the exact wording. If this notice is used, any matter not delivered will be returned to you on a receipt of postage. In this way you can keep your list clear of dead addresses. If you want the new address, you cannot obtain this from your postoffice, but you can send a sealed letter to the last known address and it will be forwarded. Enclose a card to read:

The programs which we have been sending you at your request have been returned by the postoffice as not claimed because of removal. If you desire us to continue the program to your new address, please fill in the blanks below and return to us.

Name.....

Present Address.....

This should be on a private mailing card with your address on the other side. This will keep your list up to date without the necessity for periodical weeding. If you desire to make a fresh start on a list, instead of killing the entire list, send a somewhat similar card reading:

We are revising our mailing list to remove therefrom those who for any reason no longer desire to receive our weekly program. If you wish your name continued upon this list, please fill in the blanks below, and either mail to us or hand to the doorkeeper.

Name .....

Address .....

This should also be on a mailing card. Most persons who really want the program will ask for it if you make it convenient for them to do so. Many may not go to the trouble of writing a letter where they will readily fill in a card, any many of these very persons will be good patrons if they are retained on the list. It is foolish to argue that people who want the program will be willing to go to the trouble of writing. They will not. This has been proven time and again. The easier you make it for a prospect, the more likely you are to land that prospect, and it seems a shame to tear down an entire list for the sake of the comparatively small percentage of dead names to be eliminated. A good mailing list is worth a lot of money to a house. It is too valuable to be thrown away. Go to some pains to keep it live and let every envelope work for you. It can be done with very little trouble through the use of the return card.

halfs and shows up nicely except for the name of the star at the top. Here an effort to get a tint seems to have gone wrong. It always will; what is not black must be white in a reverse cut. There can be no half tones except in a larger mass than can be gained with a letter. Even the figure cut does not show as well as it would had the background been routed to throw the figure into relief. The text is rather misleading. The suggestion that the play is indicent is too strongly made. The line, "There are some things that nice people do not discuss, but such things don't bother Miss Phillips," will both repel those who might come and disappoint those who do. The lines are well written, but they create a false impression.

Make Lent Pay.

The Lenten season is generally supposed to be a poor time for amusements. Usually it is. But why not capitalize Lent this year? Why not run a series of morning lectures, with motion picture illustrations? You can get some local lecturer, a minister or school teacher, form your program from the large library of travel pictures, and not only make some real money, but gain a new dignity for your house and the pictures. In the large cities the Lenten lectures are big money-makers. Even the small town can get the same stuff and show it as well. Start now to form your plans. Work on the schools and literary societies, and sell course tickets for one or two morning lectures each week.

It is interesting to note that the same display advertises the seventh week of "Shoulder Arms"; perhaps the longest Broadway run for a short subject.

Manufacturers' Notice.

IT IS an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be indorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication, it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second sets of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Square Pegs in Round Holes.

That excellent publication, "The American Pressman," recently remarked in course of an editorial:

"One of the greatest wastes of modern industry is the haphazard manner in which men are selected and trained (?) for the work they perform. Thousands of men and women are doing common labor who should be performing the work of skilled workmen, while, on the other hand, many thousands are trying to do skilled labor and failing because they are not fitted for this task. They either lack natural ability, ambition or proper training. The trouble is that we too often try to squeeze square pegs into round holes, and in so doing very naturally meet resistance.

"Intensified technical training, along with practical experience, will go a long way towards eliminating this waste, in that those who possess the other qualifications may be made more efficient through a properly applied course of training."

The angels in Heaven could have spoken nothing more true, and certainly the quotations tells a long tale in few words as applied to the projection field. In the projections rooms of this country are heaven only knows how many men who have absolutely no natural aptitude for the profession of projection. They are failing because they are attempting to perform a task requiring skill of high degree, as well as a certain natural aptiture, without having had any real training to speak of and without being fitted by nature for the work. They are the very squarest kind of square pegs trying to force themselves into perfectly round holes. There are other men, in large numbers, who are perhaps well enough fitted to the work, but who have no adequate technical training therein. Practical experience is either all, or very nearly all, they have. Of technical training, intensified or otherwise, they are absolutely devoid. They have not even so much as a single text-book, or, having one, do not study it except in a sort of desultory way.

And all this, of course, makes for waste, and enormous waste, which must be and is absorbed in the "overhead expense of the industry." This overburdened overhead is every cent paid by theatre managers in increased film rentals. It is really amusing to hear theatre managers howl about "imposition," "ruin," and "going to the everlasting bowwows," because of a few cents a day increase in pay to the projectionists, when you well know they are, without even a word of protest, shouldering a few dollars a day added overhead expense through lack of accurate knowledge and its practical application in the projection room.

Extends Greetings to Comrades of North America.

Down in Argentine Republic, South America, the projectionists' union has commenced publication of an official paper. The editor of this department was complimented by an invitation to contribute a first-page article for the initial number, which privilege he, of course, gladly availed himself of. The first issue is before us. It is small, but neatly gotten up. In its editorial column we find the following:

"At the beginning of our journalistic life we believe ourselves to be but fulfilling the duties of true comradeship by addressing most hearty and sincere greeting to our colleagues forming the union of biograph operators in that great Republic of the North, to whom we feel ourselves closely united by both identity of ideals and by material interests. Neither time nor distance can destroy this bond which exists between us. In the constant struggle the Union of Biograph Operators of Argentine Republic has passed through and is still passing through, the same being the struggle for advancement, it has had for a model in all its undertakings the example of its valiant comrades of the North American Union. It is for this reason that, in the very initial number of the organ we are establishing to defend our rights and interests, we feel especial satisfaction in sending to our North American brothers a warm and affectionate greeting."

As Honorary General Director of the Argentine Republic Union the editor takes the privilege of saying that the greeting of our body will be deeply appreciated by the men of the North. As an active member of the Union here we take the liberty of extending, on its behalf, to our brothers of the South every good wish. May our struggle bring to us that justice which is our due, and may our ideals be worthy of that great art with which we are allied. Set your aims high, brothers, but remember that the struggle which brings advancement in material things only is a struggle but half won. Make your advancement in knowledge and efficiency keep full pace with material advancement, and all will be well with our Union.

Cannock Out Again.

Frank Cannock, inventor and all 'round mechanical wizard, is out again, after a long spell of sickness. Glad of it. The industry cannot spare such men as Frank, even temporarily.

Sees Nothing Impossible In It.

Recently the suggestion was made to this department by the officials of one Canadian province that an organization of Theatre Inspectors would be a most desirable thing, and request was in fact made that the editor assist in the formation of such an organization. It was also suggested that a standard examination be evolved and that men passing such examination be permitted to work anywhere in Canada or the U. S. In correspondence with Mr. Howard Douglass, Chief Censor of Moving Pictures for the Province of Alberta, we laid the matter before him and here is his reply:

"Referring to the suggestion made by Mr. Oswald for an Association of Theatre Inspectors, there does not seem to be any impossibility about forming such a body, at least so far as the Canadian Provinces west of the Great Lakes be concerned. There might, however, be some difficulty in compiling a set of examination questions which could be used indescriminately throughout Canada. While first class projectionists are doubtless able to pass any examination arranged by any board of examiners, either in the United States or Canada, still there are many others who could not, so that in order to be practical the questions would have to cover a very wide field. The following is submitted to your judgment as a possible basis from which to begin. If a standard examination be arranged for the four western provinces of Canada, viz.: Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia, it could first be for the purpose of classifying the men in each province. This classification would then enable the various boards to begin a system of education, by means of which the low grade man could be encouraged to climb up to a first class rating. Of course how far this would succeed would depend on the personal efforts of the men concerned, but suggestions could be offered from time to time, publications suitable for study by the men could be brought to their attention and the men gradually inspired to a deeper interest in their work. It is understood that this education would be helped along by the best brains in the industry and that the examining boards would have the close co-operation of those who get the very latest information first hand, including 'that body of which you are yourself a member, viz: the Society of Motion Picture Engineers.'"

In the organization of Theatre Inspectors we do not feel able to offer much effective assistance except to help start the ball rolling, and that we have now done. Both British Columbia and Alberta are willing; surely there will be no doubt but that Saskatchewan and Manitoba will be glad to fall into line. It would appear that such an organization could not do other than result in good. As for the examination standard, we do not think it should be a set of standard questions, but an examination covering certain stipulated matters, which could readily be agreed upon between the various boards. The manner of making the examination, however, being left to the discretion of the examiners. For instance, we will suppose the standard to require competent knowledge of motor generators, resistance, transformers, mercury arc rectifiers, projection room wiring (including insulation, conduit, etc., etc.), projector lamp, machanism, etc., and optical train of projector. It would then be up to the examiner to, in his own way, ascertain the competency of the man in the matter of knowledge of these various matters. A standard set of questions would hardly work, because very soon every one would know exactly what they were and be prepared with a stereotyped answer. The inspiration of low grade men to study could be helped along amazingly by informing them that they must qualify for first class license within a stated period or not be eligible to license at all. Under that condition leave it to them to "scratch gravel."

The standard examination, or an examination which will set up a standard for knowledge requirement before eligibility to first class license, is a thing to be much desired. Probably, the right way to go about it would be to first get together as examiners or inspectors, in an organization if possible, adopt a standard of knowledge requirement and make that the basis for issuance of a first class license, a first class license to be good anywhere in the province or provinces agreeing.

As a basis this department suggests the following: (A) Accurate knowledge of electrical action, from its generation to the terminals of the projection room feed wires. This would include a knowledge of dynamo action, switchboards, transformers, meter action and wire resistance, the latter including practical effect of excessive resistance in wires and method of calculating wire resistances and how to figure allowable voltage drop in wires from the practical commercial standpoint. Knowledge of motors and dynamos as to their electrical action, adjustments and lubrication. Knowledge of testing for grounds and of rheostatic resistance, including resistance obtained from various combinations of same and amperage resulting therefrom. Knowledge of projection room wiring, conduit and insulation required therefor. Knowledge of proper location and construction of projection room and the location and size of the various necessary openings. Knowledge of proper ventilation for projection room and the various things having to do with fire risk. Knowledge of projector mechanism, its care, adjustment and proper lubrication. Knowledge of the optical train of projector, which must include at least elementary knowledge of lens action, lining up optical train to meet local condition and reducing revolving shutter blades to their lowest possible width.

There are other things. The foregoing list is merely set down as fast as we could write them out. We would be glad to give our Canadian friends any assistance possible in working out a standard examination, if it is, after due consideration by the various boards, thought to be feasible.

The question of classification would be a matter for consideration by the various Canadian theatre inspectors or examining officials to talk over among themselves and decide. This department is open to you to discuss the matter, gentlemen, if you care so to do.

Argus Lamp and Appliance Co. Plant.

While in Cleveland recently I had the pleasure of visiting the new quarters of the Argus Lamp and Appliance Company, 815 Prospect avenue. In connection with my visit there was one unfortunate incident, namely, its president, Mr. H. H. Cudmore, showed a party of us around the place, and during the process his already somewhat generous chest line expanded by a good four inches. Don't blame him, for the Argus has some considerable classy quarters, occupying as it does the greater part of the second floor in the Sloan Building, one of Cleveland's most modern skyscrapers, and, mind you, the foregoing is no jolly, just a plain statement of fact.

The Argus Lamp and Appliance Company, which began operations about one year ago as the manufacturers of and sellers of the Sheck Mazda Adapter, has enlarged its scope of operations to include the establishment of the Argus Theatre Supply Division, which will handle a full line of motion picture supplies and will act as local agents in Northeastern Ohio for Simplex projectors. It has consolidated its quarters with that of the Argus Motion Picture Company, who manufacture the Cleveland Plain Dealer Screen Magazine and distribute the product of the Educational Films Corporation of America in Ohio. This company has established one of the best equipped public projection rooms between New York and Chicago, in which we were able to witness a very interesting and rather convincing comparison of screen surfaces.

President Cudmore has had a projection room installed in one end of the exhibition room, and at the other end has working-size screen of the various surfaces now on the market, including Alabastine. I do not care to describe the experiments that were made, because I am not yet quite certain that they were entirely fair exhibitions of the peculiarities of the surfaces involved, but both the editor and the assembled company, which included Mr. DeVry, of the DeVry Corporation; Will C. Smith, General Manager Nicholas Power Company; W. K. Gillette, Motion Picture News; W. C. Kunzman, the National Carbon Company; W. M. States, of the Edison Lamp Works and others were very much interested in what was shown as the various screen surfaces were swung to an angle with the light.

We did, however, see the Argus Crystal Bead Screen, and made experiments therewith. This screen consists of a heavy canvas backing, upon which is spread crystal beads, afterwards treated in such a way that the screen can be cleaned and, in fact, washed with soap and water. This surface gives a brilliant white light and has very little if any tendency to fade away, even at a heavy angle. I am not, personally, prepared to speak as to the lasting qualities of the surface, though I am assured by Mr. Cudmore that it will stand up as well as any other of the various ones now on the market. But, anyhow, its durability is fully guaranteed by the Argus Company.

I also examined the new Argus-Sheck Universal Adapter, which is a very greatly improved apparatus as against the first type put out by the company. This adapter is substantially made, and seems to have all the necessary adjustments in excellent form, so that it can be handled with ease by any projectionist of even ordinary intelligence. The instruction pamphlet put out with the adapter is unique in that the instructions are mostly given photographically—an excellent idea indeed. The dark rooms and chemical laboratories of the Argus Motion Picture Company are located in the basement, and it is seldom one sees a better arranged establishment. The plant is very compact, being intended as a foot-step saver. The title-making machine, which was constructed by Mr. Lustig, is indeed a clever piece of mechanism. Space forbids a detailed description thereof in this department. In its present form this department takes pleasure in recommending the Sheck Adapter as a practical, well-made piece of apparatus, fully capable of doing the work for which it is intended.

Baltimore Union After New Schedule.

Baltimore Union No. 181 sends us copy of new wage schedule it is presenting to the managers of the city. The schedule makes $39.90 per week the maximum wage for that city, except where overtime is paid for. This sum is for a one-man house running nine hours daily, without supper relief. Overtime is charged for at the rate of $1.05 per hour and any time over eight hours is to be counted as overtime; also all time between midnight and 8 a. m., all supper hour time and time carrying reels is overtime. The only thing excepted is time spent in cleaning the projection room. Some of the clauses of the proposed contract deserve comment. Clause 11 says: "Carrying reels is at overtime rates. The members of this organization do not wish to carry film at all and believe this service can be performed better by any other employe." Right you are, say I. The projectionist is not an errand boy and should not permit himself to be used as one. Clauses 12 and 13 say respectively that the management must give the projectionist a week's notice before discharge and the projectionist must give the management a week's notice before quitting. Don't believe in that. A week is entirely too long for a projectionist and theatre manager to work together on bad terms. A manager should not be permitted to discharge a man overnight without a bit of warning, save in very exceptional cases, nor should a projectionist be permitted to leave without giving ample time for his replacement, but a week is entirely too long. In a large city two days is ample on either side. Clause 14 says that managers who insist on less than five minutes between shows must supply a boy for rewinding. It also says projectionists shall not rewind film while projecting pictures, unless projector be motor-driven. Um, bad, gentlemen! Bad clear through! In the first place you tacticly admit you will permit the rewinding of an entire show in five minutes, and that is less time than should be consumed in the rewinding of one thousand feet of film. With the average rewinder (more or less out of line) and the average reels (ranging from crooked to physical wrecks) and first-run films I venture the assertion that the rewinding of 8,000 feet of film in five minutes will do at the very least calculation ten dollars' damage to the films, though it is true it may be largely, or even wholly invisible at the time. Then, too, you propose to allow your men to rewind while the projectors are running if they are motor-driven. Shame on you, gentlemen! In plain words you propose to place the rendition of the productions entrusted to the care of your members at the mercy of an inanimate iron motor while they "save" the price of a rewind man. Is that good business? Is that working in the interest of the manager? Because the manager hasn't the gumption to see and know that your business is to render the silent drama on the screen, and that anything which detracts the projectionist's attention from the screen is going to injure his box office receipts, to say nothing of the injustice to the artists and to the audience, it is no sign you need also be that dense. If Baltimore had said: "No rewinding except where a motor-driven rewinder geared down to rewind a thousand feet of film in six minutes (ten is very much better, but I say six to get by the seven-minutes-to-the-reel cheerful idiot), it might be allowed, because at that speed it is not necessary to watch the rewinder. It is really a sad commentary on the lack of intelligence in projection room procedure that whereas the average projectionist insists on watching the process of rewinding, which if done properly (slowly) needs no watching, he calmly lets the screen action gallop along entirely unobserved for minutes at a time.

Clause 17 says: "The union agrees to furnish sober, competent and reliable men." That is fine! It is as it should be! Demand justice from the powers that be, but give justice by supplying sober, competent, reliable men.

There, now, Baltimore, don't you get all het up under the collar. I've a lot of friends down there and havn't forgotten the royal reception you gave me when I visited your fair city. As contracts go yours is a good one. Certainly no manager can, under present conditions, offer serious objection to your demands. Seems to me they are indeed quite moderate. Overtime may seem a bit high, but the idea plainly is to discourage the use of that commodity. My criticisms are made in good humor, brothers. They are designed to make you think on the points that I have raised.

Later: The Baltimore managers have all signed up, the union first having modified clause 11 so that carrying reels is optional with the projectionist at $2 per week and car fare for one way and $3 and car fare for both ways. The contract automatically renews itself at expiration unless fifteen days' notice of cancellation be given by either party.

New Wage Scale Submitted.

Hudson County projectionists, Local Union 384, of which the editor has the honor to be an honorary member, has submitted a new wage scale to friend boss. Its main provisions are (A) per day $5.50; (B) Sundays or holiday time and a half, or $8.25; (C) supper hour or overtime, per hour $1.50; (D) club or school jobs, one show $6, two shows $9. Setting up machines $3. Taking same down $3. Shift jobs, 1 to 11 p. m., or continuous, two men, first to receive not less than $24,, and second man $18. When one man works alone on continuous it is not less than $42. Night shows, 7 to 10.45, not less than $3, with time and a half for Sundays. A day's work shall, in all cases, not exceed eight hours, with one hour for supper.

One item seems to me to be excessive, viz: club and school jobs. As it stands it would cost $18 to set up, run two shows and take down, and if but one show it would cost $15. In my humble opinion that is a bit out of reason. Seems to me $10 for setting up, taking down and running a show, or even two of them, should be enough. Must also criticise the provision which seems to permit of one man working continuous shows. In my opinion this should not be permitted, except in a strictly temporary emergency. No man can do justice to the kind of work the projectionist handles if he works continuously for more than six to eight hours. As a matter of fact six hours should be pretty nearly the limit. Seems to me $18 for second man on shift jobs is altogether too low in a large city, or even in territory surrounding same. Under present conditions just show me the photograph of the man who can support a family in decency on that and I'll give it to the museum. He would be a genuine curio. Why, the street sweeper gets that much! Well, good luck to you, brothers. Except for the school item the scale most certainly cannot be objected to as excessive, always provided you give high class service in return.

December 23, 1918.

Mr. F. H. Richardson,
Moving Picture World,
New York City.

Dear Friend and Brother: The projectionists of Duluth have been slow to acknowledge the debt they owe you, not that we have sought to evade the same, but due to procrastination on the part of our secretary many things due you have been neglected. We are pleased to say that your visit to us last year has resulted in untold good, both in and out of the projection rooms. Conditions are much improved in places where improvement was needed, though our "Old Curiosity Shop" still persists in retaining its antiquated collection of equipment. We are, however, in hopes that Santa Claus will bring to it something new in the way of machines.

The writer's spotlamp, which seemed to impress you favorably, has been entirely rebuilt, along altogether new lines, with result that we now are able to offer something in the way of a distinct innovation. It surely does the work of two lamps and about three pairs of hands.

We started out to draft a Christmas greeting. Unless a halt is called it will be a book instead. We want you to know that we are heartily in favor of a name more in keeping with the dignity of the profession. We stand pledged to support you in any consistent effort to that end, and will, both individually and collectively, endeavor to merit the title, whatever it may be.

The approaching holiday season prompts us to be mindful of the untiring efforts expended on our behalf, and we count it both a duty and a pleasure to extend to you our hearty wishes for a MERRY CHRISTMAS AND A HAPPY AND PROSPEROUS NEW YEAR.

Cordially and fraternally yours,

DULUTH OPERATORS, NO. 509,
By RAY L, BRAINERD,
Secretary.

Tips for the House Manager

Conducted by E. T. LEYSER

To the House Manager.

THIS department is yours. In it from time to time will appear descriptions of accessories and equipment—outside the projection field—which will interest you and save you time and money.

When you put over a stunt in house arrangement or furnishing that would help the other fellow, tell us about it and we'll publish it.

When you are pleased with any particular line of theatre supplies, tell us so that we may pass the tip along.

When you are puzzled as where to procure any equipment for your house, write this department and we will dig it up for you—if it is made.

How to Draw the Crowd.

One of the important problems every new moving picture house has to face—and the old ones, too, for the matter of that—is the sign question.

Every owner and every manager knows that it is the signs outside the house which bring a large part of the money into the box office. People will come because they have read about the picture, but there is a big percentage who simply drop in when the bright lights beckon.

There are certain points which every movie sign must possess to be successful.

First it must be brilliant. Each letter must stand out clear-cut, distinct with lots of light behind it. The greater the reading distance the more valuable the sign is to its owner.

Next in importance is the ease with the reading of the sign can be altered to meet the needs of the changing bill.

These two requirements are well cared for in the Oplex interchangeable signs made by the Flexlume Sign Company, Buffalo, N. Y., and in addition, these signs have a great outstanding advantage other illuminated signs lack—they are splendid day signs as well as night signs.

This daytime value is brought about by the use of Oplex letters made only by the Flexlume Sign Company. These letters are of raised snow-white glass, and they stand out from the dark background of the sign's body clear-cut and distinct at all times. Please bear in mind that these letters are not at all like the letters of the ordinary transparency. They stand out in strong relief from the dark background, and thus have a prominence that cannot be obtained in any other way. Leaving their illuminated value out of the count there will be no more forceful day sign on the street than the one in which these Oplex letters are used.

For brilliance when illuminated these signs are unsurpassed. The lights are placed inside the steel frame directly behind each letter in such a way that practically none of the light is lost. It all shines through the raised glass letters, making each one a solid blaze of light. While the candle power used can be as much or as little as you like, there is a great saving in lamps as compared to the ordinary type of exposed bulb sign, and replacements are much less, for there is no danger of the lamps being broken.

To meet the particular needs of the moving picture house the Flexlume Sign Co. has brought out the Oplex Interchangeable sign. In this the same Oplex letters are used, but each letter is set in a metal panel of standard size, and these panels in turn fit into the frame. As a result the reading of the sign can be changed in a few minutes by simply taking out one set of letters and replacing it with another. There is no wiring to be changed, for the lights remain stationary behind the letters. Ask your electrician how he would like a sign where there is no wiring to be changed, where there is no lamp breakage, and where the reading can be changed in minutes instead of hours.

Many of the best known moving picture houses in the country are now using Oplex interchangeable signs. The Flexlume Sign Company will gladly refer you to their owners and send you full information concerning Oplex signs with a sketch designed to meet the needs of your own particular house.

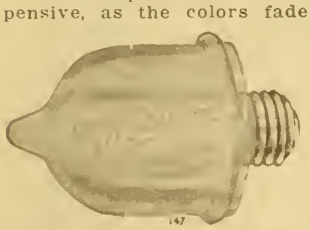
Color Effects in the Theatre.

There are several methods of coloring lamps; first, painting; second, buying natural colored bulbs; third, color hoods.

The first plan is unsatisfactory and expensive, as the colors fade after a few days' usage besides attracting dust particles, which dull the colors. Painted lamps, therefore, must be frequently taken down, cleaned and re-dipped, with resulting breakage.



The use of natural colored bulbs is almost impractical, on account of the cost; and delay in procuring same.

The third method, color hoods, has been evolved by the Reynolds Electric Company of 422 South Tallman avenue, Chicago, Ill., as a most practical solution of the difficulty.

These slide over the clear lamp bulb and show brilliant, pronounced and beautiful colors. They are made of natural colored blown glass and equipped with a simple spring fastener, which securely holds the hood on the lamp. They never fade or wear out, are easily cleaned and have proven a comfort to the house electrician.

They are made in two sizes to fit 40 W., 25 W., 10 W. or 5 W. lamps and are used on signs, canopy lights, exits or in decorative or other lighting inside or out.

The Theatre Tool-Kit.

With all the repair work and improvements that are constantly under way in a picture theatre a work bench, equipped with a kit of tools, constitutes a useful accessory of the up-to-date house.

Here is a list of tools that one theatre manager recommends as a "starter":

Three oil cans, 11 pairs of pliers, 6 small punches, 6 small cold chisels, 1 awl, 8 screw-drivers, 1 jeweler's vise (very small), 1 jeweler's vise (medium), 1 hand drill (8 drill points), 1 pipe wrench, 1 adjustable "S" wrench, 1 carbon file, 3 flat files, 3 round files, 3 triangular files, 1 5-inch vise, 1 6-inch emery wheel, 1 oil stone, 1 breast drill, 40 drills for above, 1 set (6) punches, 1 set (6) chisels, 1 quart blow torch, 1 oil gun, 1 50-foot steel tape, 1 60-inch steel tape, 1 2-foot brass bound rule, 1 6-inch steel rule, 2 monkey wrenches, 1 wire gage, 1 thickness gage, 1 screw pitch gage, 4 calipers, 2 automatic screw-drivers, 3 ball pein hammers, 1 hack saw, 1 pair tin snips, 1 rip saw, 1 cross-cut saw, 2 hammers, 1 hatchet, 1 brace with set of bits, 2 planes, 1 drawknife.

It looks like a pretty fair sized layout. Does anyone wish to contribute information regarding a better assortment?

Questions relating to the writing of photoplays and photoplay synopses will be replied to by mail where a return envelope, properly stamped, accompanies the inquiry. No attention will be paid to questions relating to the market, nor can manuscripts or parts of manuscripts be criticized.

Production Conditions.

APPARENTLY 1919 is going to see some radical changes in production methods, and it would not be surprising if it were found that Chaplin was responsible for a new condition that will make for better plays. Under his contract with the First National he is paid by the job and not by the week. He can make his pictures as quickly as he wishes, or he can take his own time. But if his picture does not come up to the mark, he will not be paid for the product. Because of this, and also because he is really an artist though he plays the clown, he is taking time to get a perfect result, and his first two pictures under the new arrangement have been so much in advance of his earlier work that the same scheme is being put into execution with Mary Pickford and other stars.

The program and the fixed release dates have always been the curse of the business. Working to a schedule cannot bring the best results. It is not possible to follow a time limit and always produce artistic plays. They must be released whether they are good or not if they are scheduled for release at a certain time, and this accounts for many of the poor productions we see on the screen. Pictures are sold in series to be delivered at specified intervals. They are already sold. The intervals are fixed. If they do not come up to standard, they must be sent out anyway to meet the release date. As a result we get an inferior product. The new scheme will, in time, change all this. It may not come for several years yet, but the start has been made, and the progress will all be in that direction.

For another thing, the practise of giving any story to the star will be abandoned. It must be star plus play under the new scheme of things, for it is being discovered that not even Mary Pickford can carry a succession of poor plays. She can get away with an occasional one, but not even she can keep it up, and that she realizes this is shown by the announcement recently made.

It will take longer to get really good original plays. It will not be easy to break away from tradition and make producers realize that the successful story is not always the successful play. It will be more difficult still to persuade really competent authors to accept seriously this new medium. They have gotten "easy money" too long to be willing to work hard to turn out screen stories, but if the demand comes and the makers of pictures insist that authors study the camera, then even the best of them will come to make a study of the screen and to write plays that can be made into films without the elaborate revision which takes from the play all the flavor of the author. In this respect England is ahead of America, for some of the best British authors and dramatists have become interested and write directly for the screen, though little of their work has as yet been shown.

The influenza quarantine was a blow to many concerns. Some will not recover from the enforced idleness. Others will have to make greater effort to make good with their clients. It will all lead inevitably in a single direction—better plays, and better plays alone can make for better business and a steady patronage. It is bound to come, and it looks as though much of it might come this year.

Revising Shakspeare.

Some one writes in to know how he can get the rights to screen Hamlet, and if he "can enter scenes and throw out scenes" as he sees fit. In other words, he wants to fix up Shakspeare. And he writes in all seriousness. He does not realize, apparently, that the studios have men in their employ more competent than he to dramatize standard works. He does not know that the synopsis—the idea—is alone demanded. He does not know that manufacturers are searching only for original themes. All he knows is that there must be a lot of money in writing plays, and, since he has no ideas of his own, he wants to make a living off the brains of others. There is nothing whatever to prevent the inquirer from making a new version of Hamlet or of any other uncopyrighted work, but after he dies he wants to keep away from the particular section of Heaven Bill Shakspeare inhabits or they both will be sent to hell for creating a disturbance.

Meantime, please remember that the original idea and the original idea only is what there is any demand for, and it is pretty hard to find an original idea these days. That's why they bring more than the five and ten dollars paid for suggestions ten years ago.

Static.

Some one complains that his paper sticks together as he takes it from his machine, and he wants to know what he can do to stop it. He uses a couple of backing sheets, and says that the sticking interrupts and annoys him.

It's a funny sort of kick, but if the writer will hold his palms over the paper, one hand front and back, for a moment after he takes the sheets from the machine he will find that his troubles will vanish. The sticking is due to the generation of frictional electricity, just as you "make electricity" by rubbing a cat's fur in the dark. It is generally most noticeable on cold, dry days, and some papers are worse than others. Holding the hands on the paper so as to get as much contact as possible draws off the electricity and permits the sheets to be handled with the usual ease.

How Much Detail?

Once the standard question seemed to be "How many scenes make a reel?" Today the favorite is "How much detail should I write into my script?" It is not possible to give any hard and fast rule. Some writers have the trick of saying much in a few words. Others are long-winded and require much space for little action.

The one rule is to tell fully the plot ingredients. You must learn for yourself just what that "fully" connotes. One man, for example, asks: "Shall I say that John meets Mary and falls in love at first sight, or shall I say that John sees Mary walk past as he is standing by the gate, he follows her, Mary hears him coming, hides, and he catches her?" A great deal depends upon what value the action has. If there is no particular reason why John should first see Mary at the gate, there is no vital reason why the meeting should be written as happening there. It is sufficient to say that John meets Mary and let it be decided by the continuity writer whether Mary and John meet at the gate or she sees him first as she comes from church. On the other hand, if the gate is to be used in later scenes; if, perhaps, she comes back to the gate after they have been married and have separated and the action recalls to John the happy past, then the meeting at the gate is essential and should be written in. If it does not affect the story, it is not essential and need not be written in, but there is no good reason why it should not be written that way. It might give the continuity writer a good lead. It is all a matter of judgment, and judgment is merely common sense cultivated by experience and practice.

Study Hearts.

"Hearts of Humanity" supplies an unusually good study in continuity writing and it will pay the writer of photoplays to see this more than once. It is that most desirable thing, an action story, and the pictured action is not loaded down with printed matter. See the story and see how it is done. See if you can catch the trick.

Tricks.

When you study plays, study plot construction and not trick work. Do not study to learn how to set in close-ups. See how the writer has told his story. The director will take care of the backlighted close-ups, and ten chances to one he will have more than are needed without your telling him anything about it. It's your part to learn how to put the story together.

Perhaps This Is It.

The Palmer school has added a selling department. Mr. Palmer is so closely connected with the studios that if the sales department is run along the right lines it might be what we have been looking for. We know nothing of their system, but it certainly looks promising.

More and more important is becoming the musical aspect of the exhibitors' performances. They realize that patrons love good music and fully appreciate the atmospheric touches brought forth by the picture. This subject is close to our heart, and we feel that every manager of a picture house should know of the benefits to be derived from a program which holds a continuity of one idea.

During the week of January 5th, the Rivoli Theatre, of New York, offered an Indian bill, which transcended any performance hitherto seen by us. We submit the following program for analysis:

1. RIVOLI PICTORIAL
   Edited by Rothapfel
2. OVERTURE
   Selections from "Natoma,"
   Victor Herbert
   Hugo Reisenfeld and Erne Rapee Conducting
3. SCENIC
   "The Land of the Great Spirit"
   Prizma Color Pictures of the Blackfoot Country
4. "INVOCATION OF THE GREAT SPIRIT"
   By Chief Red Eagle of the Blackfeet
5. FEATURE
   Norma Talmadge in "The Heart of Wetona"
6. COMEDY—"QUANNAH'S FAMILY TREE"
   Cartoonist Felton reports on Wetona's family
7. ORGAN SOLO
   "Marche Triumpale,"
   By Joseph Callaerts

The Pictorial Review opened the show, which is unusual in the extreme; but there was no other logical position for it if the Indian atmosphere was to be held throughout.

The Overture, selections from "Natoma," by Victor Herbert, provided a splendid introduction to what might be called the show proper. Although not decidedly primitive, except in the "Dagger Dance," and more reminiscent of Herbert than of Indian, it served its purpose. The Rivoli orchestra, under the baton of Joseph Klein, gave it a careful reading.

Without a pause, the music broke into the accompaniment for "The Land of the Great Spirit," a prizma color picture, depicting Indian life and the haunts of the aborigine. It was a pretty picture, well handled musically.

Then followed an incantation, proclaimed by a real Indian, a chief among the Blackfeet. It was short and well intoned by the customed chief. Standing upon a rock he called to Gitchi Manitou, the Great Spirit:

Called Him from the West a-glowing,
Called Him from darkened East;
From the North, its winds a-blowing;
From the south while slowly turning;
Bared his heart in all its yearning—
Called Him loudly as to a feast.

"The Heart of Wetona," with Norma Talmadge, was the feature presented. The music continued to be atmospheric and well suited to the scenes.

Even the comedy dealt with the stoical humor of the Indians, and when the curtain fell one felt thoroughly permeated with weird melodies.

What wonderful possibilities are to be found in pictures! When carefully collated they may take you into Japan, and for two hours you revel in the gaiety of the Orient and listen to the peculiar musical modes of the Land of the Setting Sun. All climes are at our door, and the educational value cannot be overestimated. The day is coming when picture theatres will offer a program that will enlist the appreciation of patrons of the highest intelligence, culture and refinement. It has been the "Poor Man's Pleasure," but if the producers, exhibitors and musicians put into it the best effort, the deepest thought and co-operation for the greatest result no form of amusement will equal its universal popularity.

Music Service Requires Attention from Exchanges

ALTHOUGH we failed to hear Ralph Ruffner from Butte, Montana, which was distinctly our loss, but which on the other hand was unavoidable through lack of invitation, we are glad that he came East. His timely appearance, his frank talks, and his pertinent disclosures, have put into the fourth industry a momentum that is sure to be productive of great results before the velocity is spent.

The exchangemen have come in for a quiet rebuke. It has been shown that they are negligent and slipshod in the treatment of exhibitors. Especially strong was the arraignment against their system—or lack of it—in handling accessories.

We know that Mr. Ruffner did not mean all exchange men and our sense of honor will not permit us to add another kick at the fellow who is down, but we believe that this is the psychological moment to bring up the matter of music service.

From actual statistics this department has learned that very few of the orchestra leaders receive the cue sheets sent to the exchange by the producing company. If the music service be sandwiched into the press sheet it will in all probability reach the exhibitor. The desk of the exhibitor is a long way from the music stand of the orchestra leader. Mr. Exhibitor has little time to clip the cue-sheets for the leader. This fault cannot be charged to the exchange, for the producer is the guilty party.

How many exchanges will put the name of the orchestra leader, or the pianist, or the organist upon their mailing lists? Not 1 per cent. They claim that their postage bill is high enough without increasing it for the benefit of art.

To be absolutely certain of acquiring the cue sheets, the musical director must go in person to the exchange, if possible, and ask for them. Then more trouble begins. He is referred to many people, who refer him to others, and eventually, if he be lucky, he will meet some one in the exchange who knows what he is talking about. In one case, an exhibitor was forced to go to one of the biggest producing companies in America and give a receipt to its president before he could obtain a little slip of paper called a cue sheet. This seems incredible, but the fact remained that the president knew that his company had cue sheets. He did not know what they were for, and thinking that there was an intrinsic value attached to them he played safe by getting the exhibitor's receipt.

When the writer was putting out scores for a certain company, one of its exchanges wired in, asking why its weekly quota had not been received. We answered that six scores a week had been delivered. An angry wire of denial came back in reply, and thoroughly satisfied that our duty had been done we closed the issue by sending four words, more in the spirit of fun than from any accurate knowledge: "Look in the cellar." Our instructions were followed and half the basement was found filled with perfectly good orchestral scores, worth ten dollars a piece.

There are two forms of music service now being issued by producers to the exchanges. Both cost money and are provided for the purpose of proper picture presentation. Whether it be cue sheets or scores, the exchange should put a man in charge of that service department if results are to be obtained from dollars spent. We have always felt that all branches of the producing and distributing organizations are anxious and willing to please the exhibitor. They want to please, but in many cases are ignorant of the value of many of the accessories which they handle. Don't overlook music, for it is one of the biggest factors in the exhibition of features. Systematize the music service in the exchanges and the orchestra leader will praise the efficiency to his employer. This means a satisfied customer on long contracts.

The Flute Descends from the Stone Age.

Musical instruments resembling the flute, in which a column of air is set vibrating by the lips, are of very ancient origin. The Japanese, Chinese and Hindus maintain that these modes of musical expression have been in use among their people from time primordial. Indeed, according to authentic records, a primitive form of flute is the most ancient musical instrument in the world's history. The most complete and remarkable examples of the stone age are the Egyptian flutes which are capable of a complete diatonic scale. Bronze relics of a somewhat later period have been discovered in Belgium.

Undoubtedly, the great antiquity of the flute is due to its simplicity of construction and the availability of materials. Bones, bamboo or reed were the three substances universally used, and one of them was always procurable everywhere. Even today the Caribs in Guiana make their flutes from bones. Previously they used the bones of the jaguar but, as the animals became more scarce, they resorted to human bones; appropriating for the purpose those of their enemies. With this evidence at hand, it is not difficult to understand how the flute was formerly more associated with war than with peace.

Flute playing was so highly favored in ancient Greece that the art was made a part of the curriculum of the Athenian schools. And there were times when the instrument was so greatly in demand that it was sold for a sum of money equivalent to three thousand dollars in our coin.

This inflated popularity received an inconsiderable check about 400 B. C. At that time, Alcibiades pertinaciously refused to play the flute, affirming that the large mouthpiece would mar the contour of his lips. As he was pre-eminent in the political and fashionable world of the day, his decision was universally accepted and all the influential people thrust the flute into the discard. However, an ingenious worker surmounted the objection by making a smaller mouthpiece, causing Alcibiades to lift his ban and the popular favor was resumed where it had been so summarily broken off.

In Sparta, the flute led the chorus and was a military instrument, although, naturally, these people did not take kindly to the study of music as an art. In some Ionian cities, the human victims were led to the sacrifice or to execution accompanied by the strains of the flute. This dead march, known as "Nome of Keadias," was peculiarly weird and depressing in effect, thus being singularly appropriate to the occasion. In Rome, however, the instrument became a favorite, being known as the "Tibia," deriving its name from that of the shin bone from which it was constructed.

The ancients were handicapped for want of an invention which has been of inestimable value to us—keys. These are primarily a simple system of leverage making it possible to bring under control holes in the instrument quite out of reach of the average five fingers. This noteworthy improvement was due to the skill of Theobald Boehm, who worked untiringly between 1832 and 1847, until he had developed and perfected his clever invention.

The flute found small favor with the older composers. Doubtless this was due to the fact that they did not have the modern Boehm flute. They were annoyed to find that the performer on the flute was frequently playing in a different key from the orchestra. Cherubini voices his rancor against the instrument by saying: "The only thing in the world that is worse than one flute is two." But it is fortunate that the more modern masters did not share his aversion. A solo passage in Beethoven's "Leonora Overture" is especially beautiful and famed everywhere. Mendelssohn looked upon the flute and its possibilities with an appreciation little short of adoration, and introduced it with prodigal profusion throughout his music. His obligato in the quartet, "O Rest in the Lord," from the oratorio of Elijah is exquisite. Berlioz and Tschaikowsky both played the flute and their compositions are enriched by many melodies for this instrument.

From its earliest inception, there have been two varieties of the flute; one played by blowing into one end, consequently held directly in front of the musician, and the other made to sound by blowing into holes in one side. The former is known as the "Flute à bec," meaning "Flute with a beak"; while the latter is called the "Flauto Tranverso" or "Flute played crossways."

A good embouchure is absolutely essential to artistic flute playing. Also, the fingers must be raised at equal height and not be elevated above a certain point. The practical range of the instrument is from middle D up to C in alt, but occasionally Wagner has written for Db and Eb.

At the present time, the flute is in constant demand in orchestras, one of its functions being to double with the first violins in playing the melody. It also serves as a soprano instrument of the wood-wind group. But, as it possesses far more agility than its wood-wind relatives, it is much more adaptable than they for solo purposes.

Votichenko at Maxine Elliott Theatre.

Sacha Votichenko, the Russian composer and virtuoso of the tympanon, introduced a new type of entertainment when he presented intimate concerts of unusual music in his beautiful studio at the Hotel des Artistes. But, owing to the lack of space, many have been unable to gain admittance to the studio concerts in times past. To obviate this, Votichenko will give a recital of old and modern music at the Maxine Elliott Theatre on February 23. Several of his own compositions will be played for the first time upon this occasion. Eva Gauthier and other prominent artists will also be heard.

Sacha Votichenko.

Sol Klein Is Leader for Marcus Loew.

Marcus Loew has taken over the Burland Theatre in the Bronx, formerly operated and owned by D. V. Picker. This theatre is the largest in that part of New York and draws a fine clientele.

Mr. Loew evidently found the musical programs to be satisfactory, for he took over the orchestra with the theatre. Mr. Sol Klein is in charge and has demonstrated his efficiency many times when difficult musical situations have arisen in the features.

For four years, Mr. Klein has had the responsibility of the musicians in the various theatres controlled by Mr. Picker. At one time, the musical programs for five theatres were his to arrange. His music has always pleased his public and he has become a prime favorite in the Bronx. We extend our congratulations upon his new appointment and our best wishes for success.

"When I Come Back to You" Timely.

This popular song by Frank H. Grey and J. Will Callahan is the leading ballad of the day, and is now being featured in vaudeville. It has been recently accepted as one of the official songs of the Y. M. C. A. The Y. M. C. A. musical director, Marshall Bartholomew, recently sailed for France with two hundred slides and copies of the song, to be taught to the boys in the American army still "Over There." This song has been accepted by every leading talking machine company, and will soon be on the market in record form.

A special orchestral arrangement is being isued by the publishers, Huntzinger & Dilnorth.

New Atmospherically Japanese Music.

"Nipponese," the Japanese Dramatic Themes, written for Sessue Hayakawa by Joseph O'Sullivan, Director of Music Service for Mutual, is being published by the Carl Fischer Music Publishing Co. of New York. Orchestrations, both full and small, will be available at an early date.

The piano transcription of two movements of this theme was used as a special insert with the press-book issued by Mutual on "His Birthright," the first Hayakawa production released through Mutual. That this service was appreciated by exhibitors throughout the country was evidenced by the numerous letters received by Mutual requesting that orchestrations of the theme be sent.

On account of the lack of characteristic Japanese music of dramatic mood, these themes should be a welcome addition to the library of every orchestra leader making a sincere effort to interpret motion pictures.

Mr. O'Sullivan has just completed a "Japanese Elegy," scored for full orchestra, which will soon be off the press.

A Few Words From US.

Are you aware that "Music for the Pictures" is a department devoted to the artistic side of your program? Don't pass it by because it is in the center of the book. Its preferred position should indicate its relative importance.

Nothing is more talked about by your patrons than music. Nothing is more appreciated if good, reviled if it be poor. "Music for the Pictures" is devoted to the interests of all exhibitors and musical directors. It aims to help both and its mission is one of service. If we can help you make money by suggesting a musical program, the pleasure will be a gratifying reward.

Don't take our word for everything. We are not infallible. Give us an argument once in awhile. Hit hard and from the shoulder. We court constructive criticisms and promise that we won't strike back.

Myron Selznick.

"Upstairs and Down" Is Initial Selznick Subject

WORK has been started in the Pacific Coast studio of the Selznick Pictures Corporation on the first of a series of eight productions featuring Olive Thomas. Charles Giblyn, director general of the company, is in personal charge of the production, and Myron Selznick, president and general manager of the company, arrived in Los Angeles this week, where he will remain for some months.

The first of the Olive Thomas Selznick pictures will be "Upstairs and Down," based upon the play of the same name by Frederic and Fanny Hatton. This play was produced by Oliver Morosco in New York last season and was one of the hits of the theatrical year. It is a society comedy-drama, and, as its name implies, deals with the ever present romance that exists everywhere above and below stairs.

This production will be the keynote of the Selznick Pictures policy starring Miss Thomas. This star has shown her talent many times in society roles for which she is ideally fitted by her chic personality. Believing that the widest appeal is to be found in stories which have a great deal of dramatic emotion, lightened by frequent comedy incidents, Director Giblyn is securing a number of stories along this line.

"Upstairs and Down" will be ready in time for a March release, and there will be one picture every six weeks thereafter, until the year's output of eight is completed. Selznick Pictures Corporation is already receiving applications for franchise for the series, although the distributing system through which these productions will be marketed has not yet been announced.

House Record Broken.

The breaking of records for attendance is a rare occurrence these days, but L. C. Johnson, of the Verdi Theatre, San Francisco, turned the trick recently with the Famous Players-Lasky production, "'Till I Come Back to You." With a small house he took in $268 matinee and $448.68 evening.

Conferees Agree on Admissions.

At his conference with newspapermen at the Capitol January 14, Senator Simmons, chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, on behalf of the conferees of the Senate and the House of Representatives announced that in the settlement of the differences arising between the two bodies in respect to the pending revenue bill the House conferees agreed to recede from their objection to the Senate amendments as to admissions of not to exceed 30 cents, while the Senate conferees returned the compliment by accepting the House provisions on admissions above that amount.

The statement of Senator Simmons was very brief. He said also that the House conferees had agreed to many of the Senate amendments with respect to the so-called excise taxes (which would include the rental tax on motion picture films), but he declined to go into details.

New York Greets the Drews.

A four weeks' advance showing of "Romance and Rings," the first of the series of two-reel Drew comedies released on the Paramount program was shown at the Rialto Theatre, New York, for the week commencing January 5, and the Drews were welcomed back to the screen by an audience that demonstrated the popularity of the Drews by a reception that has been seldom accorded the return to the screen of any film favorites.

During the week preceding the opening of "Romance and Rings" Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew were filling an engagement at Baltimore in the stage production "Keep Her Smiling," and in order to make a personal appearance at the Rialto Theatre a special trip to New York was made Sunday morning, and at the conclusion of the appearance Mr. and Mrs Drew took a train for Buffalo, where "Keep Her Smiling" opened up the following Monday.

At the end of the picture Mr. and Mrs. Drew appeared on the stage and the applause that followed was timed to seven and one-quarter minutes.

Red Cross Inaugurates Its ARC Special Series

WITH a news beat which placed its first special offering in the Rivoli and the Palace theatres, New York, for a first run, the new releases of the Bureau of Pictures, American Red Cross, have been inaugurated. Since the termination of the war a changed policy has been adopted by the Bureau of Pictures, which now will adhere to special releases of exclusive entertainment value.

Its own cameramen in Europe and Asia at the many centers of current world events give the bureau every facility for securing screen material of worth. Only the best and most timely of this material will be released—and that in the form of special subjects. They will be put under the brand of "The ARC Review," and offered strictly upon their exhibition merit.

This constitutes the future policy of the Bureau of Pictures, as announced by W. E. Waddell, director. The first ARC Review special release is "Belgium's Day of Days," a reel devoted entirely to the remarkably dramatic reentry of the King and Queen of Belgium to their restored capital city of Brussels.

Meighan Goes Back to Coast.

Thomas Meighan, who has been appearing opposite Norma Talmadge in her last three or four pictures and who will also be seen as leading man in "The Probation Wife," the picture to follow "The Heart of Wetona," has gone to the Coast to be featured in a series of productions. Conway Tearle has been engaged as leading man for Miss Talmadge's next picture.

Building of Moss Theatre Delayed.

Operations on the construction of the B. S. Moss Theatre, at Broadway and 181st street, will be resumed with the first warm days of 1919. Release of building material by the War Industries Board has made the filling of contracts possible, but the impending frost makes it expedient to delay work for the time being.

THEATRES PLAY BIG PART IN BUSINESS

Full Realization of Importance of Picture Houses Comes to Texas Merchants

By Phil Fox, Times-Herald, Dallas, Texas.

FROM all parts of Texas, film men and exhibitors are now pointing to one good thing which was established during the recent influenza outbreaks. They declare that for the first time the merchants and business men of a city fully realize the important part which the moving picture theatre plays in aiding business in general.

During the first influenza outbreak the consensus of business opinion was that all shows should be closed. All over the state the lid went on tight. The business of department stores, millinery stores, specialty stores, the street car company and every other line of industrial endeavor took an acute downward slump. People no longer came downtown to see a moving picture show and do their shopping. Everybody suffered. Card clubs were organized by the hundred in the suburban districts and women stayed at home for their recreation.

When closing was threatened again merchants threw the weight of their influence into the balance against any such official order.

In San Antonio a petition signed by every leading merchant in the city demanded that the shows be opened at once, when the lid went on for a second time. The crowbar was put to the closing order by the injunction route and everyone was happy again. This San Antonio case practically insures that no Texas theatres will ever be closed again under health officials' directions.

In Dallas business men and merchants, realizing what closing of theatres meant to them owing to their first lesson in the matter, used their full influence to avoid a repetition of the mistake. Their efforts were successful, the Dallas health authorities declaring that a quarantine would do no possible good.

Moving picture men declare that their friendly relations with other legitimate business in their home cities have now been cemented and are optimistic over prospects for future harmony and progress.

Levy to Retain Theatrical Interests.

Pierre Levy, owner of the Strand and Hippodrome theatres in Fort Worth, will still retain his theatrical interests and supervise their active management despite the fact that he has recently cleaned up a fortune running into six figures in oil investments in the new West Texas fields. Mr. Levy is an official in many large oil companies, his latest position being as trustee with the Duke Extension Company which has a string of gushers.

Texas Operators Get Increase.

Operators of moving picture machines at Houston, through a threatened strike, gained large increases in their salary schedule, effective January 1. By agreement with the managers the operators are to be paid $25 a week for assistant operator and $35 a week for a chief operator. The former schedule was $15 and $25.

In the face of an operators' strike the Houston exhibitors held a meeting and attempted to organize a local managers' association. The organization did not hold together and the operators won their point.

Capps Buys Queen Theatre Building.

William Capps, Fort Worth capitalist, has bought the Queen Theatre Building, in a choice position in the Fort Worth business district, and proposes to erect a modern office building there. Andrew Zuccaro, proprietor of the Queen Theatre, one of the pioneer moving picture show men of Fort Worth, holds a four-year lease on the theatre.

Pathe Manager Visits Dallas.

Walter S. Wessling, district manager for Pathe, is visiting the new Pathe Exchange Building, Dallas, and will remain for a week or two. Mr. Wessling has many friends in Dallas, especially among the newspaper fraternity.

Operators Hold Dance.

Mr. Walthall says, "Exhibitors here are eager for the very best stuff they can buy. Their theatres are crowded, and the men owning and operating them are generally of a high type of business men. There is a great deal of room for more theatre buildings in Texas, and now the war is over they are bound to come, since they will undoubtedly prove big money-making propositions."

INAUGURATE SUNDAY MORNING CONCERTS

By T. A. Church, 1507 North Street, Berke ley, Cal.

A MERRY race is on between several San Francisco moving picture houses in the matter of musical superiority and never before have theatregoers been given such treats as during the past two months. Two of the largest downtown houses have announced Sunday morning symphony concerts and their efforts along this line will be watched with much interest by music lovers and moving picture fans, as well as by the owners of other houses. The T. & D. Tivoli Theatre will inaugurate its concerts on the last Sunday in January when it will present Dr. Carlos de Mandil and an orchestra of fifty, in addition to Uda Waldrop at the pipe organ.

The California Theatre has already inaugurated its series of concerts and is presenting Herman Heller with a symphony orchestra of fifty-five pieces, most of the musicians being members of the famed San Francisco Symphony Orchestra. Edward Benedict, organist of the California, takes a prominent part in the programs.

Spectacular Film Fire.

The first film fire that has occurred in this city in many years took place on the fifteenth floor of the David Hewes Building at Sixth and Market streets, on the night of December 29, attracting a huge crowd by the novelty of a blaze on top of a skyscraper. The fire broke out at eleven o'clock in the rooms occupied by the Tam Slide & Film Company and was caused by the breaking of a large incandescent light bulb, according to G. McElwain, the only man working in the place at the time. The damage to the stock and equipment of the film company, which manufactures animated cartoons on a large scale, is estimated at $25,000, but the damage to the building is not large, as the fire was confined to the superstructure on the roof.

Film Trade Celebrated Birth of New Year.

The recent New Year Eve celebration at San Francisco broke all former records for crowds and for jollity and film folks from all over the Pacific Coast gathered here to celebrate in the good old-fashioned way, this city being an oasis in a desert. Among the visitors who came especially for this occasion were Al Eden, the new manager for Select at Seattle, Wash.; Sol. Record Time for News Service.

Three operators covered the event and the one who secured the pictures of the start had his negatives developed before the third cameraman had covered the finish. When the latter arrived at the laboratory with the film showing the winners it required but a short time to complete the release and get it on the projection machines. Within less than three hours of the end of the race the completed film was being shown. Eugene W. Castle, Pacific Coast editor of the Gaumont News, had charge of the filming of this event and was assisted by Charles Harris and Blaine Walker.

KANSAS CITY CONDITIONS BRIGHTEN

Car Strike Ended—Influenza Bans Removed and Public Is Again Returning to Theatres

Kansas City News Service, 115 Railway Exchange, Kansas City, Mo.

KANSAS CITY exhibitors are getting some of their good spirits back since the first of the year. Gradually the many troubles that have obsessed them are passing away. The influenza bans are all off; the severe winter weather, lasting through the holiday season, and cutting down business just when the chance seemed at hand to recoup losses, has given way to pleasant temperatures and clear skies. And—the street car service is getting back to normal. That street car strike was about as hard a blow as any the theatres endured.

The public is not taking full advantages of its opportunities to go to moving pictures yet—but they are coming back. The resumption of public schools, December 31, has got the children into the habit of leaving home, and they are gradually resuming their former moving picture habits, too. So things look much brighter in Kansas City.

Business Picking Up with Fite.

W. D. Fite of the Holland and Novelty theatres, Wichita, Kan., reports that his theatres began on January 4 to look like old times. All the seats were full that night, and the very atmosphere seemed to promise that the former good trade was coming back after the numerous restrictions and handicaps. For three weeks theatres were permitted only ten patrons for every one hundred square feet; then full operation was permitted, on condition that children under sixteen years be excluded. This rule was applied to stores, also—and not being enforced against the stores, was not observed by the moving picture theatres. Since December 28 the theatres have been operating without any restrictions.

Ford Fought Influenza Order.

Arthur M. Ford, owner of the Marple Theatre at Wichita, is one of the "goats" of the influenza battle in that city. Mr. Ford took the onus of openly disregarding restrictions as to admitting children, and was twice arrested on charges of disobeying orders of the board of health. The board couldn't make the charges stick, however. Mr. Ford on one occasion of arrest piloted a board of health officials through one of the department stores, pointing out the large number of children in it. He offered to have the children lined up, counted, their ages recorded, for the benefit of the official—but the offer was declined. The exhibitors could take their stand against the orders because the public itself did not take the orders seriously.

Dodson Joins Independent Sales.

Irwin Dodson, formerly traveling Missouri for the Universal, is now on that territory for the Independent Sales Corporation. Francis Kelly, formerly with the Universal as shipper, has become booker for the Indepcndent.

Yale and Chautauqua Combine.

C. D. Struble, manager of the Yale Theatre Supply Company, and W. N. Gehret, manager of the Chautauqua Motion Picture Bureau, have combined their establishments, and are at 201 Sheidley Building, 901 Main street, Kansas City. Both offices were formerly at 922 Oak street. They have the agency in this territory for the Simplex, and their sales the past few weeks indicate that moving picture business in this territory is getting mighty good.

Mulholland Gets the Farmers Coming.

Old-timers in small towns of Missouri and Kansas seem to have especially good success in the moving picture business. There's James Mulholland of Stanberry, Mo., for instance—he's been in that town nearly thirty years, and knows pretty nearly everybody. Nearly everybody knows him, anyway—and his Princess Theatre which he has been operating six years. Mr. Mulholland was in Kansas City recently arranging for pictures. "How do you yet the farmers to come in?" he was asked. "I give them a cracking good show," he said. His is the only show in the town—but the farmers, it is to be noted, go to Stanberry rather than to other towns quite as available because they know they will see something good.

What Canaries do for the Isis.

The Isis Theatre, Kansas City, has several canaries in its foyer—canaries that really sing. At first they were considered by the management as merely an artistic touch—and they did add much to the attractiveness of the foyer. But they have proved a factor of some importance in establishing friendships for the house with patrons. Many of the patrons have learned to know the birds by name, and spend much time visiting them. One man who had a canary that wouldn't sing has brought his bird and left it in the foyer near a singer—and it has developed musical talent also. The birds provide a wonderful musical program of their own, while the organ is playing—for the first notes of the big organ start them into song.

Frisch Ill with Influenza.

M. J. FRISCH, manager of the local Universal office, is the first Des Moines film manager to be attacked by the influenza. After ardent participation in the anti-closing campaign on account of the epidemic, Frisch came down and has been confined to his apartment for a week. Extends Run on "Virtuous Wives."

So successful was the run of "Virtuous Wives" at the Garden that the original five-day booking was turned into a week's showing. Backed by a big publicity campaign the picture opened to overflow attendance, and capacity has been the rule throughout the week. The A. H. Blank Enterprises have been compelled to order a fourth print of the subject to take care of bookings in Iowa, Nebraska and Kansas.

No Complaint on Admission Increase.

A raise in admission prices from fifteen cents to twenty is working out satisfactorily in Fort Dodge, Waterloo and Cedar Rapids. Managers were somewhat dubious about raising the ante when it was first tried out three or four weeks ago, but the plan has worked out nicely and patrons seem willing to pay the added nickel cheerfully. In most cases a news or comedy reel has been added.

Temple-Grand Doing Good Business

Hal Kelly is meeting with success in Creston with the Temple-Grand which he recently took over. Kelly owned the house some years ago and returned to Creston with many friends. His good judgment in booking and the cordial welcome extended by every employe of the house has made big business the rule.

How Myers Advertised "Kaiser's Finish."

W. L. (Morris) Myers, veteran picture house manager and one "fox" on publicity, put over another of his sure-fire stunts during the run of "The Kaiser's Finish" at Cedar Falls. Myers got out a special edition of the Record, the daily paper, with screaming headlines about the downfall of the Hohenzollern and saw that a copy was put into every home and business house in the town. The result was packed business for two days at twenty-five cents admission. Myers had grabbed the best billboards around the State Teachers' College, and other points of interest and is using a liberal billing campaign for his Regent Theatre.

Two Grinell Houses Same Management.

The Lyric and Colonial theatres at Grinnell are now under the same management and switch bookings on the big shows to the latter theatre which has a large seating capacity.

Des Moines Rialto Very Popular.

The Rialto Theatre, open since last May, has won a lasting place in the affections of local theatregoers and is doing a splendid business at twenty cents admission. It has a seating capacity of 1,000, with about 350 seats in the balcony. The aisles are wide and the house is roomy and cozy. Construction throughout is of steel and concrete.

The color scheme of the house is an artistic blending of blue, rose and ivory, high-lighted, with gold. The high prosenium wall carries an art panel and the stage is artistically draped with the curtain in a shadow box. Draperies and carpets are old rose and the seats of blue velour.

A kiddies' play room, luxurious retiring rooms and a men's smoking room add to the comfort of patrons. Girl ushers are employed, and courtesy and efficiency have been instilled into the entire staff from box office to balcony.

The policy of the house varies as to the length of runs. "The Eyes of the World" ran ten days and the Nazimova pictures a week. "Hearts of the World" ran three weeks at $1.50 top to but fair returns, the management having found that the twenty-cent price is the most consistent money maker.

Sirignano and his symphony orchestra of twelve provide the music, which is excellent and featured in the house's billing. A Robert Morton Symphony orchestral organ is used in conjunction.

Abe Frankle, controlling the Majestic and Casino, is managing director, and E. Metzger, formerly house manager at the Casino, occupies a like position at the Rialto. Performances are continuous from eleven to eleven.

To Produce Film in Cleveland.

WORK of producing the moving picture play "The House Without Children," which will be made in Cleveland, by the Argus Motion Picture Company, was started the week of January 6.

This project is financed by Clevelanders and the play was written by Robert H. McLaughlin, a Cleveland man. Almost all of the scenes are interior and the Argus Company has leased the old Tom L. Johnson home on Euclid avenue which will be fitted out with electrical apparatus and additional furniture and properties. The owner, M. A. Glauber, has loaned the picture men the use of his expensive collection of art treasures and tapestries which he bought during various trips through Europe.

"The House Without Children" will mark the return to the screen of Richard Travers, who has been in the army and was only recently honorably discharged. The picture will be directed by S. A. Brodsky, and the technical director is George Fox. Mr. McLaughlin will also give his personal attention to the work.

J. P. Lynch, formerly with the Schade Theatre in Sandusky, is now on the road for the General Film Company, making northwestern Ohio. He recently was honorably discharged from the army.

Peter G. Stockey, Cleveland film man, was one of the victims of the recent fire in a film building in Pittsburgh.

His body was identified a few days after the fire and brought to Cleveland for burial. He leaves a wife and three children.

Mr. Stockey was an independent producer, having made several pictures in Cleveland and New York. His latest picture was "Fighting for Eternal Peace."

The film exchange shippers of Cleveland were given a talk on parcel post shipping recently by C. J. Boutall, of the Cleveland post office, who told of many experiences of the postoffice employes in handling films which were calculated to increase the efficiency of film shipping.

The meeting, under the auspices of the Exchange Managers Board of the Chamber of Commerce, was held in the Chamber of Commerce building.

The Bijou Dream, one of the oldest and best known small theatres in Cleveland, was obliged to close down indefinitely last week because of the fire which damaged the Euclid Block, on Euclid avenue, in the downtown section.

The theatre was more damaged by water than by fire. Manager Nolan expects to reopen before February 1.

St. Louis News Letter

By Richard D. Howe, 914 Star Building, St. Louis, Mo.

Business Increasing with Exhibitors.

MOVING picture houses throughout St. Louis reported a considerable increase in business since the influenza ban has been lifted permitting children under sixteen years to attend the theatres. A large amount of the afternoon audiences are made up of children and some attend the evening, so that the ban which was on for several weeks caused a great falling off in patronage and consequently a falling off in the day's receipts.

Film Men Celebrate.

St. Louis exhibitors and film exchangemen spent several hundred dollars in a wild celebration of New Year's Eve. Caffaretta's, Ciccardi's, the Hamilton Hotel, the American Annex, the Jefferson Hotel and other places were filled with moving picture people and one glorious celebration was held.

It would be hardly fair to tell what time many of the film men arrived home New Year's morning—some didn't arrive home until afternoon—but it was certainly fortunate for all that New Year's Day was a holiday, as the aftermath was hard on all of the celebrators.

Scherrer Brothers, owners of the Mikado Theatre, one of the finest moving picture houses in St. Louis, did a record business last week, when they played The Million Dollar Dollies," a Metro production. Metro Manager on Business Trip.

The Orpheum has a seating capacity of 800 and does a good business. Mrs. Kamp, wife of the manager of the Lafayette, will take charge of the Orpheum.

DIGEST OF WEEK'S NEWS FROM DETROIT

Majestic Signs for Six Goldwyn Star Series—Kunsky Plans for New Theatres

By Jacob Smith, 719 Free Press Building, Detroit, Mich.

Detroit Practically Free of Influenza.

THE influenza apparently has lost its sting in Michigan because there is very little of it in the state, and only a few towns are closed—and these by the local health boards. The Governor and the State Board has no idea of further ordering a state-wide closing, realizing that more good can be accomplished through education and with the assistance of the theatres, churches, etc. In Detroit there is practically no influenza.

Majestic Signs for Goldwyn Star Series.

The Majestic Theatre, Detroit, one of the largest and most beautiful of the first-run playhouses, has signed a contract for six Goldwyn stars series productions—Geraldine Farrar, Mae March, Madge Kennedy, Tom Moore, Pauline Frederick and Mabel Normand. The deal was closed by J. E. Flynn, representing Goldwyn, and Henry J. Guthard, representing the Majestic. The first picture was played the week of January 5—"The Hell Cat," with Geraldine Farrar, and the Majestic put out over 50 twenty-four sheets, and plans to billboard the town on every Goldwyn picture. While the Majestic gets nearly 38 pictures under the new contract, it still leaves them with open time to book in other high-grade pictures. John H. Kunsky continues to control the first-run franchise on the Goldwyn Rex Beach pictures, and the Adams Theatre, a Kunsky house, has first-run on the Smiling Bill Parsons Capital Comedies through Goldwyn.

Branham Succeeds McGee at Majestic.

McGee, after four and one-half years, who resigned to manage one of Detroit's leading summer amusement parks. Mr. Branham comes from the Strand Theatre, Minneapolis, and took charge January 5. He seems like a live-wire and already has made a favorable impression locally.

John H. Kunsky, president of the John H. Kunsky Enterprises, who is spending a few weeks in California, announces that plans are under way for building three, and possibly four, more theatres in Detroit. At present the Kunsky interests operate ten houses, besides the Madison Film Exchange, the Madison Sign Shop and other businesses.

Later a lunch was served by the local Red Cross. There were many special features and considerable talent was presented by the film men, Harry Abbott acting as chairman of the entertainment committee. It was the first time that the film men in a body participated in an out-of-town event of this kind. J. R. Denniston, proprietor of the Family Theatre, is popular with the film men.

PITTSBURGH'S FIRST NATIONAL MOVES

Takes Entire Third Floor of Building at 414 Ferry Street to Combine Offices and Shipping Rooms

By Elmer H. Mayer, 231 Collins Avenue, Pittsburgh, Pa.

FOR the purpose of combining its office and shipping rooms in the one building the First National Exhibitors' Exchange, of Pittsburgh, will move from its present quarters in the Westinghouse Building to 414 Ferry street February 1. The Rowland & Clark Theatres, whose offices are at present in the Westinghouse Building also, will move to the same building at the same time.

Ever since the First National was organized the offices have been in the Westinghouse Building, and the film and shipping rooms were at the Metro Exchange, a considerable distance away. This resulted in a lot of unnecessary work, and for some time Mr. Skirboll, manager of the exchange, and Mr. Clark have been on the lookout for a suitable location. They have signed a lease for the second and third floors of the building at 414 Ferry street. The R. & C. Theatres' offices will be located on the second floor, and the First National offices will use the entire third floor.

The new location is part of the new film building that was completed last spring, and quite a number of exchanges are located therein. The building itself is fireproof, and meets every requirement of the city authorities.

Dailies Cut Size of Reading Notices.

THE Utica newspapers have again cut down the size of the reading notice which is given with a one-inch advertisement which is placed on the classified page, each theatre being represented by an ad in this column. The rates are $1.50 per inch each insertion, and now each theatre gets but fifteen lines. In the good old days each house used to get between twenty or twenty-five lines. It's hard sledding in Utica to get any decent sort of co-operation from the newspapers.

Dayton News Letter

By Paul Gray, Dayton Theatre Building, Dayton, Ohio.

Miller Assistant Manager of Columbia.

ANNOUNCEMENT was made last week that Frank Miller, formerly treasurer of the Victoria Theatre in Dayton, was made assistant manager of the Columbia here, managed by Charles Gross. Although born in a purely "legitimate" atmosphere, Frank seems to have absorbed the "movie fever" quite well, and he should receive much valuable experience under the direction of Charley Gross, who has demonstrated his ability as a manager time and again, as witness the large crowds that pack the Columbia daily. A special feature of the programs at the Columbia is the orchestra under the direction of Professor H. A. Krell.

Pieffer Makes Good at the Edgemont.

Charles Pieffer's first managerial experience took place at the Edgemont Theatre several weeks ago, when he took over that house from "Doc" Alexander, who went South for the winter because of his health. Business is very good at the Edgemont, so states Charley with a broad grin. He was at one time with Bert Fiala at the Alhambra, and gained much valuable experience at that house under the "old master."

This is a new venture for Ruben & Finklestein, one of the largest moving picture exhibitors in the Northwest. It is understood upon reliable authority that R. & F. are taking steps to enter the producing and distributing field as well as engaging in this stock company enterprise.

Perry Succeeds Branham at Strand.

Charles C. Perry, former assistant manager of the New Garrick Theatre in St. Paul, will be the new manager of the Minneapolis Strand, succeeding Charles G. Branham, who has resigned to accept the management of the Majestic Theatre, Detroit.

Mr. Perry comes to Minneapolis direct from Camp Cody, New Mexico, where he had charge of the Liberty Theatre, a Government owned and operated institution for officers and enlisted men at the Camp. Mr. Perry, who was manager of the Strand Theatre at Milwaukee at the time he entered the army, was first assigned to Camp Upton, Long Island, where he had charge of the Liberty Theatre.

Mile of Smiles Seen Christmas by Yanks.

The "Mile of Smiles" film, the Christmas gift from Minneapolis to Minneapolis soldiers in service in France, arrived in time for a Yuletide showing. Charles C. Bovey received a cablegram from his son, Martin Bovey, of Base Hospital 26, at Allerey, which read "Am leaving today for St. Michiel with Dick Hankinson. Are taking 'Miles of Smiles." Dick Hankinson is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Hankinson. He also is stationed with Base Hospital 26. DE HOFF OF BALTIMORE A BENEDICT

Price Entertains Newsboys—Drews Receive—Louis O. Maas Now Vitagraph Representative

By J. M. Shellman, 1902 Mt. Royal Terrace, Baltimore, Md.

One of the greatest surprises that has come to the Baltimore film fraternity in recent years happened on Friday, Jan. 3, when the announcement was made by Col. and Mrs. Stephen Penniman Heath of 604 Lyndhurst avenue of the marriage of their daughter, Miss Mary Ethel Heath, to Louis A. DeHoff, of Arlington, Md., who for many years has successfully managed the New Theatre, 210 West Lexington street. The ceremony was performed at the parsonage of the Eighteenth Street Methodist Church, in New York, by the pastor, Rev. Dr. B. C. Warren, on December 4.

Miss Heath is also well known in film circles in Baltimore and for several years acted as a valuable assistant to Mr. DeHoff at the New Theatre. Mr. DeHoff stated he was going out of town on a business trip on December 4, and the fact that he had been married to Miss Heath came as a distinct surprise.

Mr. and Mrs. DeHoff spent three days in New York and then returned to Baltimore. They will make their home at 604 Lyndhurst avenue, Baltimore.

Price Entertains Newsboys.

Through the courtesy of Arthur B. Price, manager of the Blue Mouse, 28 West Lexington street, and other theatres of Baltimore over a hundred newsboys of the Sun were entertained on Friday morning, January 3, at a showing of Gaby Deslys in "Infatuation." Mr. Price also screened an entertaining comedy for the lads.

Drews Hold Reception.

An informal reception at which Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew, playing in Paramount comedies, met several of the exhibitors of Baltimore, was held in the ballroom of the Hotel Belvedere on Friday afternoon, January 3. Arrangements were made for the affair by Mr. Morgan, manager of the Washington exchange of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, and their Baltimore representative, Lester Rosenthal.

Invitations to the reception, which is understood to have been hastily planned, were given over the telephone. Mr. and Mrs. Drew were playing at the Auditorium Theatre, in this city, that week, in "Keep Her Smiling," and his entire company was present. Mr. Morgan and Mr. Rosenthal introduced Mr. and Mrs. Drew. Two of the latest comedies in which the Drews appear were shown, and Mr. Drew said that it was the first time he had seen his comedies on the screen.

Among those present of Baltimore were Arthur B. Price, manager of the Rialto, Blue Mouse and Aurora theatres; Guy L. Wonders, manager of the Wilson Theatre, and his wife; Louis Schlichter, of the Edmondson Amusement Company; Frederick Clement Weber, of the Gertrude McCoy; Myer Fox, president of the Linden Company, operating the Rialto Theatre; George A. McDermitt, manager of Loew's Hippodrome Theatre, and Dr. A. H. Rolnick, the personal representative of Dr. H. J. Haiselden, who directed "Are You Fit to Marry?" the moral uplift picture.

New Vitagraph Representative.

Louis O. Maas is now in Baltimore as the representative of Vitagraph in the Monumental City. He was in Boston, Mass., for one year as the Pathe representative prior to becoming associated with Vitagraph and handled the Boston and Rhode Island territory. For five years he has been associated with the film business and in that time his activities have taken him to Cleveland, Chicago, Denver, Minneapolis, Kansas City and other cities. Most of the five years has been spent with Pathe.

Kingston, Howard, president of the Operators' Union, Local No. 181, sent the letter to several members on December 26.

Spokane News Letter

From S. C. Patchin, Spokesman-Review, Spokane, Wash.

Allender Opposes Refund.

WHILE J. W. Allender of the Majestic and Lyric theatres opposes accepting any refund from the city on the license for the time the houses were run under influenza quarantine, C. E. Stilwell of the Rex, Casino, Unique and Class A, favors it and says the Liberty, Clemmer and Pantages also favor the refund.

Mr. Allender's statement follows:

"While I question the advisability of closing any line of business during an epidemic wherein a strict quarantine would have brought quicker results, I believe the loss should be borne by the business houses as evidence of their faith in the community and support of constituted authority.

"The loss from license fees is so trivial in comparison with the amount of total business lost that the granting of refunds opens a serious financial question when you stop to think that Spokane lost approximately $3,000,000 as a result of the epidemic.

"I earnestly request that all refunds be denied. The Lyric and Majestic theatres will shoulder their share of the loss for the public good."

Mr. Allender's communication was referred to Commissioner J. H. Tilsley, to whom has been left also the request of the Hippodrome Theatre for a refund of part of its license money.

QUEBEC THEATRES GROWING ELABORATE

Store Shows Being Replaced by Large Houses with Programs Well Rounded Out by Music

THE number of moving picture releases for presentation in the Province of Quebec has been increasing, while there is also a slight increase in the number of large moving picture theatres in and around the City of Montreal, according to a report issued at Montreal on January 9.

Although the fiscal year of the Board of Moving Picture Censors of Quebec does not end until May 1, an interim statement has been published as a review of the calendar year 1918.

The statement is made that the small store shows are dropping out of sight and in their place have come the great structures with a program that is rounded out with orchestral music and songs. Information gathered from various sources indicates that since the start of the war in 1914, over thirty per cent. of the small picture houses have passed out.

An average of 15,000 reels of moving picture films per year is now being presented in theatres of Quebec as compared with 8,000 reels during each of the first three years of the war. The increase is due to the fact that a number of houses have lengthened their programs, it is said, while the bookings of each indivdiual release are fewer, it is declared.

Quebec Censor Board Active.

Six years ago, when the Quebec Board was established at Montreal, only 5,000 reels of pictures were examined the first year. The Quebec Board of Censors, incidentally, takes credit for assisting in the improvement in moving pictures since that time because of the manner in which it censored the pictures and because of suggestions which it offered.

"So rigorous a test has been applied by the censors in the matter of morality, good taste and decency in the pictures which pass before them that the Quebec Board of Censors has achieved the reputation of being the standard authority on such matters throughout the whole American continent," is an interesting statement in the announcement.

It is also pointed out that two American boards, those of Pennsylvania and Ohio, have adopted practically the same policy as the Quebec censors, while all other Provinces of Canada and many of the States have accepted our standard in part.

That the line is drawn rather sharply by the Quebec Board is indicated by the eliminations made during the year. According to the details made public, approximately twenty per cent. of all the films submitted for approval are rejected by the board and fifty-six per cent. of the total require cutting in some parts at least. Therefore only twenty-four per cent. of all films examined are passed in their entirety.

Announcement is made that over 50,000 fect of film were cut during the past year and this matteris "preserved" in the office of the Censor Board.

With regard to the agitation for more British releases, the Quebec Board announces that it has nothing to do with the point of origin of a film so long as it conforms to the standard of morality and good taste prescribed by the board. American and British films must comply equally with these rules, it is stated.

The board used its good judgment recently in connection with the presentation of the picture showing the surrender of the German fleet. The film arrived in Montreal late on a Saturday night and the censor board gave permission for it to be shown publicly on the following day and thereafter without censoring. Within twenty-four hours of the picture had been recalled for the elimination of the title which read "Surrender of the German Fleet to American and British Fleets." The board would have been in hot water continuously if it had permitted this title to have passed, it is declared.

Paramount Acquires the St. Julien.

The Paramount Theatres Company, Limited, of Toronto, which is a subsidiary of Regal Films, Limited, has taken over another Toronto moving picture theatre. This is the St. Julien Theatre on Bloor street. Announcement is made that the name of the theatre is to be changed and structural alterations will also be made.

William Elliott, formerly of Detroit, manager of the Regent Theatre, Toronto, has been appointed general manager for three of the Toronto houses controlled by Regal interests; namely, the Regent, Strand and St. Julien theatres. The first two named are large downtown theatres.

"Better 'Ole" Goes Big in Ottawa.

"The Better 'Ole" took Ottawa, the Canadian capitol, by storm during the week of January 6. The feature opened at the Regent Theatre on the Feast of Epiphany, which is observed as a public holiday in Ottawa, and traffic on Spark street, the main thoroughfare of the city, was blocked during the afternoon and at night by the waiting crowds. The throng actually extended clear across the street.

Manager Moxley announced that all records for matinee attendance at the Regent had been smashed on Monday afternoon. Prices were raised for the occasion, top price being 50 cents. Special advertising was placed in the two local newspapers, the Ottawa Journal of January 4 carrying 1,700 lines of display. The paper also published a special feature page of reading matter and illustrations about the picture.

Toronto Theatres Do Heavy Advertising.

The Daily News, of Toronto, Ontario, broke its record for the number of local theatres using space in its amusement section on Saturday, January 4, when fifty-six houses used forty lines of space each in the Photoplay Calendar. The calendar broke into a second page for the occasion. This does not include the several local vaudeville theatres which also used individual space.

Imperial Holds a "Repeat Week."

Finding that a number of local moving picture enthusiasts desired to see several special pictures after they had been presented, the Imperial Theatre, Ottawa, Ontario, decided to conduct a "Repeat Week" during the week of January 20. Three productions have been rebooked for the occasion, including "My Four Years in Germany," "The Passing of the Third Floor Back" and "Masks and Faces." Each of the three releases were booked for two days of the week.

Roberts Made Music Director at Opera House.

Roland Roberts, one of the best known men in moving picture circles in Eastern Canada, has gone back to his musical career. Mr. Roberts has been appointed director of the concert orchestra of the Grand Opera House, London, Ontario, by Manager J. R. Minhinnick. This house specializes with pictures.

Roberts has been manager of both the Regent Theatre in Toronto and the St. Denis Theatre, Montreal. He was formerly first violinist of the Toronto Symphony Orchestra.

Must Have Banners in Fixed Frames.

Toronto theatre managers were ordered to remove streamers or hanging signs from their lobby displays after a sign in front of a downtown store was brought down by a gust of wind, thus endangering the lives of a number of pedestrians. Several years ago a by-law was passed prohibiting the use of overhanging signs or banners, but the law had been forgotten. Exhibitors have been instructed to place their banners or posters in fixed frames.

Crawford Returns to Canada.

Carl M. Crawford, formerly with the Fox interests in Canada, has returned to the Dominion after serving in the United States Naval Service. He has gone to Ottawa, where he is shortly to be married. Before enlistment he was associated with Fox branches in Toronto, Montreal and St. John for a number of years.

Grossman Resigns from the Coliseum.

Announcement is made that C. Grossman is no longer associated with the Coliseum Theatre, Kew Beach, Toronto. The management of the theatre remains vested with Mr. Coulson, formerly manager of the Photodrome Theatre, Toronto.

55 Stars in Allen's Service Flag.

A complete compilation of the number of employes of Jule and J. J. Allen, Toronto, who served with the colors in the recent war has been made, with the result that the service flag on the screen curtain of the Allen Theatre, Toronto, bears fifty-five stars.

Unique Lobby Display.

As a lobby display for the presentation of Mae Murray in "Danger—Go Slow!" at the Holman Theatre, Montreal, early in January, Manager Harry Pomeroy depicted a railway crossing with large railway danger signs, which bore the name of the attraction.

Flooded Roof Keeps House Cool.

A novel structural feature of the new Allen Theatre at Edmonton, Alberta, is that arrangements have been provided for the flooding of the roof of the house in the summer to help keep the temperature of the theatre at a low mark.

Appointed Manager Pro Tem of Exhibitors'

W. A. Sault has been appointed manager pro tem of the Montreal branch of the Exhibitors' Mutual Distributing Corporation by James Travis, of Toronto, Eastern Canadian manager of the company, in succession to Ray Peck, resigned.

Sault has had considerable experience in the management of exchanges in Canada, having been in charge of the Toronto office of the General Film Company, after which he had the Triangle office at Toronto until it was taken over by Regal Films, Limited.

Scott Ill with Pneumonia.

Thomas Scott, secretary of the Moving Picture Exhibitors' Protective Association, of Ontario, has been confined to his bed for several weeks with pneumonia, but he was able to attend the regular January meeting of the organization at Toronto on Tuesday, January 7.

The exhibitors of Montreal and other centres in Quebec have reorganized their association, and an invitation has been extended to Secretary Scott to attend a meeting of the exhibitors at Montreal for the purpose of securing closer co-operation between the two organizations.

Gets Canadian Rights on Italian War Film.

The Canadian rights for "Italy's Flaming Front" have been acquired by Regal Films, Limited, the large Canadian film distributors.

Wants Gauze Mask Restored.

The influenza situation in the San Francisco territory is almost without change and many theatres in the smaller communities are still closed. Houses at Fresno and San Jose have been reopened, but the outlook is that not a few theatres will be closed throughout the winter. In San Francisco there is a demand for the re-enactment of the gauze mask ordinance and some theatre owners have gone on record as favoring this step, expressing the belief that this is the only positive method of checking the epidemic and that more people would visit theatres masked than at present. The closing of theatres as a preventative measure is not being considered.

INFLUENZA STILL TROUBLES NORTHWEST

Sayre Now Advertising Manager of Jensen and von Herberg Houses—Centralia Liberty Opened

By S. J. Anderson, 807 Leary Building, Seattle, Wash.

THE influenza epidemic is still causing trouble in the Pacific Northwest. Some Seattle exchanges estimate that about 50 per cent. of the small towns in the territory are closed. Southwestern Oregon, in particular, is very hard hit, one of its best towns, The Dalles, having just been closed. Independence, in southeastern Oregon, is also closed.

Many Idaho towns have been closed within the last ten days, Wallace being among these.

The most important closing in Washington this past week was Olympia, the state capital. The mayor has even threatened to put a ban on the meeting of the state Legislature, while a number of small towns in the eastern section have also been placed under the ban.

Miss Grace Marbury Sanderson, author of "The Finger of Justice" or "The Fall of the Barbary Coast," is arranging for the immediate production of her next big picture, which she will produce herself. She will leave Seattle for Los Angeles within a month.

J. Willis Sayre, who has been on the advertising staff of the Seattle Times for several years, accepted the advertising management of the four Jensen and von Herberg houses in Seattle.

Centralia Liberty Opened.

Joe Lucas, who opened his fine new Liberty Theatre in Centralia, Washington, a few weeks ago, is to play "The Fall of the Barbary Coast" there next week, and has engaged Miss Grace Marbury Sanderson, the author of the scenario, to appear personally all week. Mr. Lucas is getting out special advertising and will charge 50 cents admission.

Notes of Interest.

B. H. Collier, Portland manager of the United Picture Theatres of America, Inc., is organizing a circuit of 14 theatres in central Montana. These houses are all owned by different parties, but will be booked through one house.

A. W. Eden, the new manager of the Seattle Select office, and all of his salesmen are out on the road this week.

R. O. Clayton, formerly cashier in the Seattle Fox office, has resigned to take a similar position with Select. The position of shipper in the Select office has also been filled by a former Fox employe, Headley Noncarrow.

Helen Ogden, who left Seattle film row to locate in San Diego, California, has returned and gone to work for Harry Arthurs, Jr., manager of the Seattle office of United Picture Theatres of America as bookkeeper. She is taking the place of Mrs. Burdick, who is leaving for Los Angeles.

H. W. Bruen, manager of the Majestic theatre, Ballard, has a new heir in the family.

Denver News Letter

By Lee T. Casey, Denver Times, Denver, Colo.

DENVER'S first symphony orchestra will be conducted at the new Rivoli Theatre by Signor Raffealo Cavallo, starting January 19. George Megahan, who is associated with L. B. Brown in the management of the Rivoli, Isis and Strand theatres, declares the orchestra will be the finest in this section of the country. It will be of forty pieces.

Signor Cavallo has been municipal musical director for the last year, having succeeded Frederick Neil Innes in that position. His contract with the city will expire January 15, and Messrs. Brown and Megahan have obtained his signature on a year's contract, with an option on his services for two more years.

Henri Keates has been made organist of the Isis. Franz Rath, Jr., is assistant organist.

Control Five of Denver's Principal Houses.

With the sale of the Isis Theatre by S. L. Baxter to L. B. Brown and George Megahan, four men—Mr. Brown, Mr. Megahan and George Greaves and H. E. Ellison of Greaves & Ellison—are in control of five of the six principal motion picture houses of Denver. Mr. Brown and Mr. Megahan operate the Isis and Strand, and are associated with the other members of the "big four" in the operation of the Rivoli. Mr. Greaves and Mr. Ellison are in full control of the Princess and Rialto. The America, which is controlled by the Bishop-Cass Investment Company, is under the management of George Talbott.

Curtis Street Houses on 15 and 20 Cent Basis.

With the first of the year all the houses on Curtis street are on a basis of fifteen cents matinees and twenty cents for night performances, including war tax, except the Rialto, where the war tax is additional. Most of the exhibitors, however, are contemplating an increase if the Government tax on film rental is increased to twenty per cent, as provided in the new revenue bill. The theatre owners are protesting vigorously against this increase, which they declare is an almost unbearable burden on the poor man's principal amusement. Several of the principal exhibitors have met informally to formulate a protest and the matter has been taken up by the Screen Club, a Rocky Mountain organization with headquarters in Denver, and which includes both exhibitors and distributors among its membership.

Figures Show Growth of Industry.

The size to which the motion picture business has grown in a few years is shown in figures which were presented to city officials in a protest against the second influenza closing order. Five hundred persons are employed by the theatres, and have about 1,500 dependents. The average cost of operation of the six principal houses on Curtis street is $400. The payroll of the six houses is about $5,200.

Few Kansas Towns Have Influenza Restrictions.

The first week of the new year found the large majority of communities in Kansas and Missouri, resuming moving picture exhibitions. Very few restrictions remain in any of the towns—though a few towns are still closed. The influenza has practically disappeared—the extremely cold weather of the past two weeks perhaps helping to remove it—or at least giving the officials and the public something else to think about.

In Wichita, the city health board had tried order after order in the effort to close the picture houses. The exhibitors met them on the grounds of some orders, and fought for their rights. But this proved to be a futile task—the board could always devise some new order, if the courts knocked out an old one. The managers therefore settled back into the channel of ignoring all orders—and the community began to take the regulations as a joke. Arrests for violations resulted in no convictions—and publicity methods by the board of health rather advertised the theatres than otherwise.

Producers' and Distributors' News

Goldberg Closes Contracts for First National Films

LEE L. GOLDBERG, manager of the Big Feature Rights Corporation of Louisville, just made a profitable trip to Cincinnati in which he closed First National contracts for Newport, Covington and the other nearby Kentucky towns. He signed Godfrey Kotzen, manager of the Lyric Theatre in Covington, for "The Romance of Tarzan," "Italy's Flaming Front," "The Passing of the Third Floor Back" and "The Panther Woman," the only First National Exhibitors' Circuit Features he has not played. Mr. Kotzen was delighted by the results of his first showing of "Shoulder Arms." Despite the fact that an influenza ban kept the children away, the Chaplin comedy showed to remarkably good business and Mr. Kotzen has secured it for a repeat engagement of two days.

Mr. Kotzen is one of the most progressive young business men of that section of Kentucky. That he is up to date is indicated by his personal appearance and his style of dress. It has often been said of Mr. Kotzen that "he could step right into the screen" at any moment to play the part of a typical young business man of today.

J. Frankel of the Temple Theatre, Newport, booked "The Romance of Tarzan," "Virtuous Wives," the Petrova pictures and will repeat "Shoulder Arms."

Mr. Frankel, although a comparatively young man, has his hands full. In addition to personally managing the Temple and Hippodrome theatres in Newport, he has recently taken over the active management of the Alhambra Theatre, a big downtown theatre in Cincinnati.

Pete Smith of the Avenel Theatre, Bellevue, booked all the First National Exhibitors' Films he hasn't had. Mr. Smith has such confidence in the First National that he has given carte blanche orders to the B. F. R. Corporation to count him in on all First National releases.

Mrs. Meyers of the "Family Theatre" in Covington booked second run on all of the First National Exhibitors' films.

Barrymore in Humorous Role.

Portraying the character of a poor lawyer who is in love with the daughter of a millionaire, but who weds an ugly widow with a "past" to win a reward of $100,000, John Barrymore, the Paramount star, will be seen in one of the most humorous roles of his screen career in "Here Comes the Bride," which has been scheduled for release January 19. This picture is an adaptation by Charles E. Whittaker of the play of the same name by Max Marcin and Roy Atwell which was produced at the George M. Cohan Theatre in September, 1917, and ran for several months with pronounced success.

The heroine of the story is portrayed by Faire Binney, a young actress who won popular favor by her work in the Paramount-Artcraft Special, "Sporting Life," produced by Maurice Tourneur. The supporting company includes such well-known players as Frank Losee, Frances Kaye, Alfred Hickman, William David and Leslie King. The director was John Stuart Robertson.

Nazimova

Famous star of "Out of the Fog," an elaborate photo-version of Nazimova's great stage success, "'Ception Shoals"; June Mathis, who adapted it, and Albert Capellani, who directed the picture, which will be the next Nazimova production following "Eye for Eye."

Make Statue of Goddess for Nazimova Film.

A colossal statue of the Chinese Goddess of Peace was built and modeled by hand for use in the forthcoming Nazimova production, "The Red Lantern," in which the Russian star is presented by Richard A. Rowland and Maxwell Karger. The figure, that of a woman seated cross-legged on a dais in the shadow of a huge shell, stands twenty-two feet from the floor to the top of the shell and was made in the art shops of the Nazimova studios.

The goddess measures six feet across from elbow to elbow. The sculptor was Victor Andre. He copied the figure from a rare Chinese antique obtained by Albert Capellani, Nazimova's director.

"Wolves of Kultur" Finishes January 19.

The final episode of Pathe's great patriotic serial, "Wolves of Kultur," entitled "The Reward of Patriotism," unravels all the entanglements of the story and shows the star, Leah Baird, in the most thrilling escapades of the entire serial. This episode is scheduled for release Jan. 19, and shows how Alice Grayson and Bob Moore working in the interest of the United States against the band of Hun spies headed by Walker have at last located the torpedo which is to be used against United States transports.

Pearl White Resting.

Pearl White and the members of her company have finished the final episode of "The Lightning Raider," the newest Pathe serial, which has just gone on the screen. Miss White, her director, George B. Seitz; Warner Oland, William Burt, Frank Redman and the other members of the cast will all take a much needed rest. Miss White has just purchased an estate on Long Island and she will probably spend her vacation pottering about her new property and supervising various improvements she intends to install.

Official Review 30 Shows New York Men in Action

CONTINUED interesting scenes of the Americans at the front are shown in Official War Review No. 30, for release by Pathe January 20. Red Cross workers are seen offering comforts and small luxuries to the doughboys, supplying them with cigarettes as they come weary from the trenches, and soothing them with cookies and chocolates. Margaret Mayo, Lois Meredith and Elizabeth Brice "jolly" the fighters, and are "jollied" in return. The King of Italy is shown in a review of the first American troops on the Italian front, and the Duke of Aosta decorates the Italian Automobile Service.

Close-up fighting of the Americans is shown in their advance from the Vesle to the Aisne. These Americans of the 305th and 307th Regiments of the Seventy-Seventh Division from New York are caught in a galling fire from the German heavies.

Scenes are given of Bellicourt, where the Americans—New Yorkers among them—broke the Hindenburg Line. The key obstacle was the St. Quentin Canal tunnel, which the troops took in a terrific frontal assault. Field Marshal Haig is seen in his visit to the tunnel.

"Hard Boiled" Dorothy Dalton's Next.

The next production from the Thomas H. Ince studios in which Dorothy Dalton will be seen is "Hard Boiled," scenariozed by R. Cecil Smith from a story by John Smith, which is scheduled for release February 2. Meanwhile, Miss Dalton has just completed work on a picture of a radically different type, which bids fair to be one of the most dramatic offerings which she has presented in a long time. "The Accursed Town" is the working title used and C. Gardner Sullivan was responsible for the story and scenario. Miss Dalton's next picture will be made at the new Ince studios at Culver City, but illness will deprive the star of the services of Director Victor L. Schertzinger. In his stead Otto Hoffman will handle the production.

Billy Mason is leading man, while Billy Courtwright plays the part of the deacon. Gertrude Claire is the old lady and a country chap is well performed by Walter Hiers.

Not a Vestige of War in Griffith's Latest.

D. W. Griffith, in his third production for Artcraft release, "A Romance of Happy Valley," which is scheduled for January 26, has turned the scene of the conflict of armies and for the first time in several years has made a picture in which there is not even the remotest suggestion of war. In his newest production, however, he has employed virtually the same cast who gained fame in "Hearts of the World," "The Great Love," and "The Greatest Thing in Life," Lillian Gish, Robert Harron, George Fawcett, Kate Bruce, George Nicholls, Bertram Grassby, Porter Strong, Adolph Lestina, Lydia Yeamans Titus, Andrew Arbuckle and Frances Parks being noted in the dramatis personae. The story deals with life in "calico and denim" and the locale is the toll-road region of the Southland at a place named Happy Valley.

Gladys Leslie Greets Admirers.

The week of January 6 was "Vitagraph Week" at the Amphion Theatre in Brooklyn. On the 6th, 7th and 8th J. Stuart Blackton's production, "The Common Cause," was the attraction. For the remainder of the week Manager F. D. Williams played the Gladys Leslie feature, "The Beloved Impostor."

The high spot of the week came on Friday evening, January 10, when little Miss Leslie made a personal appearance and literally stood them up rows deep. The star was accompanied by her director, Joseph Gleason, and after "The Beloved Impostor" had been screened, she appeared before the packed house and said a few words to the audience. One studio secret was divulged in regard to the production of "The Beloved Impostor."

In the photoplay, Miss Leslie masquerades as a twelve-year-old girl and in one scene slides down a banister. The first rehearsal of the scene was made before the varnish on the banister was thoroughly dry and her director became quite peevish when Miss Leslie got about one-third of the way down and could not slide any further. A new dress for the star and a new coat of varnish for the banister were necessary.

Medalled Farmerettes Support "Smiling Bill."

Beautiful farmerettes share the laurels with "Smiling Bill" Parsons in "The Big Idea," his Capitol Comedy. Twenty of them take part—a score of California's hundreds of young women who put aside typewriters and adding machines when their brothers entered the service of Uncle Sam.

It was "Smiling Bill's" big idea to depict on the screen their successful efforts in doing their bit. Among the beauties are three whom the State recognized as the most efficient among all the feminine farm workers on the Coast. They are Florence Brady, Jeanne Lamont and Alice McIntyre, who were awarded medals and purses of gold at the recent California Agricultural Exposition. Others among "Smiling Bills'" aggregation received honorable mention.

"The Big Idea" depicts the twenty beauties doing everything they did while actually engaged in farm work. They plot, plant and pitch alfalfa with speed and alacrity that could hardly be improved upon by farmers of the sterner sex.

Orientals Dominate Cast of Film.

Six Japanese players, ranging in age from a diminutive youngster of five to a grey-bearded patriarch of sixty-five, make up the majority of the cast of Sessue Hayakawa's "Bonds of Honor," released by the Exhibitors' Mutual. Toyo Fugita and Mr. Foshida, both native Japanese of tried theatrical experience, present the roles of two aged noblemen of the flower islands.

In the next generation are the star, Hayakawa and his native wife Tsuru Aoki, who with her charm and the wistful role she is called upon to present, might be a Madame Butterfly. In the youngest generation are two doll-like Japanese children whose playful mischief suggests that childhood is the same the world over.

The story is built upon the clash of German criminal intrigue and the heroism of the subtile Japanese. Sessue Hayakawa depicts the double role of twin brothers, one a wayward, lovable sort, the other, trustworthy and courageous.

"Every Mother's Son" a Program Issue.

The announcement that a George Barr McCutcheon story ("Cowardice Court") has been purchased by William Fox for a program release, is followed by another statement regarding an early February release of the Standard Program. The R. A. Walsh feature, "Every Mother's Son," will be given to the exhibitor as a regular Standard Pictures release.

Goldwyn to Release a Big Four in February

Four releases of more than ordinary excellence and box office power are announced by Goldwyn for February. They include productions starring Mae Marsh, Mabel Normand and Pauline Frederick in the order named and a Rex Beach picture with Kay Laureli and Russell Simpson in the leading roles. The February schedule follows:

February 2, Mae Marsh in "The Bondage of Barbara," by Burke Symon, directed by Emmett J. Fynn; February 9, Mabel Normand in "Sis Hopkins," by Rose Melville, directed by Clarence G. Badger; February 16, Pauline Frederick in a dramatic production directed by Hobart Henley; February 23, Rex Beach's drama of the Yukon, "The Brand," featuring Kay Laurell and Russell Simpson; directed by Reginald Barker.

Goldwyn is keeping secret the name and authorship of Pauline Frederick's first starring vehicle under its banner with the intention of presenting the production as a surprise. Suffice it to say, it is based one one of the most successful Broadway plays of the last year and was written by two of America's foremost dramatists. It is a play that affords its star opportunities for achievements hitherto unexcelled.

"The Bondage of Barbara" is from the pen of Burke Symon, for many years stage director for David Belasco. It tells the story of a girl who becomes a boy to clear the honor of a wayward brother led astray by a son of the rich. Miss Marsh's leading man is Matt Moore, now a Goldwyn star. Matt Moore makes his first Goldwyn appearance in this subject. Others in the capable cast are Arthur Housman, Jack McLean, Edwin Sturgis and Henry Hallam.

There is no need to recite the story of "Sis Hopkins," Mabel Normand's newest vehicle, completion of which was interrupted by the star's illness of California's "prevailing." John Bowers is leading man and in the cast are Sam de Grasse, Thomas Jefferson, Nicholas Cogley and Eugenie Ford.

Prominent in the cast of the Pauline Frederick play are Willard Mack, Wyndham Standing, Jere Austin and Tammany Young.

"The Brand" tells the story of the love of Alice Andrews for two men, one who throws her off after she has served her purpose, the other of whom really loves her. Chief in the support is Robert McKim as the villainous Barclay.

Tom Moore Completing Comedy Drama.

Tom Moore's newest Goldwyn picture is nearing completion in California. It is "A Man and His Money," and exhibitors will be glad to know that in it the same happy medium of wholesome comedy and consistent drama found in "Thirty a Week" and "Go West, Young Man," is maintained.

Written by Frederci S. Isham, author of a score of novels, the story is unusually human and well balanced, with some comedy touches as whimsical as they are amusing. The direction of Harry Beaumont insures the same enjoyable spirit and deft handling which elicited nation-wide praise of Tom Moore's previous vehicles.

"A Man and His Money" is played largely in the atmosphere of conservative society, though beautiful outdoor scenes, photographed at Little Bear Lake, in California, are many. The cast sparkles with well known names. Besides Seena Owen, noted for her superb Queen Attarea in "Intolerance," there are Sydney Ainsworth, Claire DuBrey, Kate Lester, Sydney Deane, Edwin Sturgis, Clare Garcia and Bobbie Bolder.

Harold Lloyd Is Making Distinctive Comedies

THE bookings of the Harold Lloyd comedies have shown such an unusual increase during the last few months and exhibitor comment has been so favorable that Pathe Exchange, in preparation for a country-wide drive in a promotion of these one-reel features, has started, through its thirty odd branches, a comprehensive census as to the number of theatres at which the comedies are booked on standing orders, the estimated number of days that comedies are shown in specified territories, the number of persons who see them, and all individual, newspaper and exhibitor comment that can be collected.

The aim also is to secure as much helpful criticism as possible to show which particular staple features are most admired in the comedies, whether they be the work of individual players or the method of handling situations. The most frank criticism will be invited to aid in the further improvement of what Vice President Paul Brunet considers to be one of the exceptionally good things of the year. For, he declares, the Rolin Film Company, in fashioning the comedies featuring Harold Lloyd, with Bebe Daniels and "Snub" Pollard, has contributed an entirely new comedy spirit, an evolution from the broad, coarse and oftentimes messy slapstick pioneer work.

Harold Lloyd is twenty-five years old and Pawnee County, Neb., claims him as one of her famous favorite sons. Harold Roach, president and general director, personally supervises the making of the comedies and he is especially proud of the fact that he personally selected and trained the members of the company.

Harold Lloyd's work with the Edison Company was in light comedy parts. His next picture engagement was with the Keystone Film Company, playing leads. Then Roach engaged him. In common with practically all motion picture stars of this age, Mr. Lloyd is a proficient athlete, his principal accomplishments being riding, swimming, fencing and boxing. Mr. Lloyd is also a tumbler of no mean ability.

Bebe Daniels was born of theatrical parents, in Dallas, Texas, January 14, 1901. She started on road with her father's company when only ten weeks old, as the baby in "Jane." At three she played her first speaking part in "The Confederate Spy," in a part especially written for her. At four she was the youngest Shapespearen actress in America, playing Duke of Yorke in "Richard III" on tour throughout the United States.

Harry Pollard was born in Melbourne, Australia, in 1893, and reached the stage by way of a church choir of St. John's Church, Melbourne. The manager of a minstrel show engaged him and he toured New Zealand for fifteen months. In 1907 he was routed through South Africa with Hall's Juvenile Opera Company and later, with the Pollard Opera Company, played in Australia, China, Japan, Honolulu, the Philippines, Canada and all through the United States.

"Made in America" to Run Eight Weeks.

There were many touching farewells in thousands of homes all over this country when the draftees went off to camp, and now there are many happy reunions as they return from camp and over-seas duty. Reunited families are hearing the stories of the soldier's life in camp and field; stories vivid with heroic deeds; many stories full of pathos and tragedy.

These sidelights upon the great world-conflict have opened a new world to millions to whom the life of the soldier was a sealed book. At this time "Made in America" will appeal with peculiar force because it presents for the first time an authoritative and complete story in pictures of the life and training of millions of young Americans in this country and in France.

There are eight one-reel episodes in "Made in America," released one reel each week. Each episode is full of pictorial interest, presenting with great variety and wonderful realism, the many phases through which the draftee passed in his development into a first class fighting man. The picture also takes the American soldier to France and shows how he trained intensively over there, and finally how he won imperishable glory on the battlefield. The series is published and distributed by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation through Pathe Exchange, Inc.

To Release "Come Again Smith" Feb. 10.

The release date on J. Warren Kerrigan's newest J. D. Hampton production, "Come Again Smith," has been advanced one week to February 10, it is announced by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, distributors of Kerrigan productions.

"Come Again Smith" is a bright comedy of the romantic type that the particular talents of Warren Kerrigan are best fitted for. It tells the story of a park bench bum who was given a chance by a man who believed in investing in the Bond of Humanity.

E. Mason Hopper directed the picture under the personal supervision of Jesse D. Hampton, from the original play by John H. Blackwood. A feature of the picture not to be neglected is the laugh-getting titles. Prominent in support of Kerrigan, besides Lois Wilson, are Winnifred Greenwood, H. A. Barrows, William Conklin, Charles French and others.

California's Climate Appeals to Hamilton.

"Lighter and faster" is the way Hale Hamilton describes his physical condition since the smiling screen star's arrival in California to work before the camera at the Metro studios in Hollywood. The climate of the Golden State has lured Hamilton into long morning hikes in the Hollywood foothills before he begins his day's activities in the studio.

He is at present in the middle of "Johnny on the Spot," by Shannon Fife, adapted by June Mathis and directed by Harry L. Franklin.

National Advertising on "Little Women."

National advertising and a direct-by-mail campaign are carrying the news of the Paramount-Artcraft special, "Little Women," to the people of every city in the country. In this connection the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation announces that by early February no fewer than 1,464,816 persons will have purchased national publications containing advertisements devoted exclusively to the picturization of Louisa M. Alcott's story.

Old Pekin "Dragon Room" Shown in "Red Lantern"

A REPRODUCTION of the famous "Dragon Room" — the Emperor's throne room in old Pekin—will be one of the many scenic marvels of the colossal Nazimova production, "The Red Lantern," which is entering its fourth week in production at the Nazimova studios in Hollywood. In fact, this screen version of Edith Wherry's novel, in which Nazimova is presented by Richard A. Rowland and Maxwell Karger, is planned to set a new mark in lavish picturesque embellishment for the superb dramatic art of the Russian star.

June Mathis and Albert Capellani collaborated in adapting "The Red Lantern" to the screen, and Capellani is directing the production. Before a single scene was photographed, the co-authors, the director and the latter's art director, Henri Menessier, spent weeks in research work, much of which was poring over plates, etchings and a mass of photographs of the buildings, temples and other shrines of Pekin.

M. Menessier made water color sketches of all the art interiors which later were built on the Nazimova stages. Among these was a sketch in detail of the Emperor's throne room. Menessier also designed the mission garden—a wonderful bit of oriental beauty in design and coloring—and a street in Pekin, lined with merchants' booths, bazaars, dwellings and places of Chinese worship.

The story is of a girl's struggle—a Eurasian girl, Mahlee, in whom runs the blood of a Chinese mother and an Anglo-Saxon father, against an unkind fate. The picture will reproduce on the screen the stirring scenes attendant upon the Boxer rebellion of 1900. In these scenes there will be hundreds of people.

Besides enacting the role of Mahlee, Nazimova does that of Blanche Sackville, natural daughter of Mahlee's English father. This part, so unlike that of the Eurasian girl, is a veritable transformation in make-up and emotional range. As Mahlee, Nazimova is darkly oriental; as Blanche Sackville she is a blonde—stately and aristocratic.

Miss Leslie Supports Two Stars.

Lilie Leslie is playing in the support of two stars in two productions being filmed at the Metro studios in Hollywood. Miss Leslie has the role of Lillian Dupre, an adventuress, in "Johnny on the Spot," starring Hale Hamilton and directed by Harry L. Franklin, and also plays Marjorie Sinclair in "Diana Ardway," starring Viola Dana and directed by Herbert Blache.

Post Scenics Make Hit with Boston Film Club

PROBABLY the highest praise ever given to any film production comes from no less an organization than the Boston Film Club. This organization viewed in a body the Post Scenic Films, "Come Watch With Me the Passing Night" and "When Nature Smiles," at the Tremont Temple Theatre, Boston, and its members were so impressed that at a meeting held on January 8 they passed a resolution advising every exhibitor in New England to carry at least one Post Scenic Film in their program.

During the current run of these pictures at the Tremont Temple Theatre, Boston, members of the audience are continually requesting to see the manager in order to learn more about them and to request a similar film to be shown more often in Boston. One of the prominent men of New England, ex-Governor Bates, declared them superior to any nature pictures he had seen. He described them as "marvelous," in their conception and beauty.

These Post Scenics are the same pictures that won such high favor at the Rivoli Theatre, New York City. They are being shown at the Tremont Temple Theatre, Boston, on the same program with Carle E. Carlton's feature picture, "A Romance of the Air."

In connection with these Scenics it is hinted that the Post Film Company, Inc., may produce a multiple reel picture to take the place of the regular feature on the program. In fact, it is said that work along this line has already been started.

Coming Big "V" Special Comedies.

The Vitagraph Company has just announced its Big "V" Special Comedy release list for the next six weeks.

This is the schedule: January 13, "Boobs and Bumps," featuring Walter Hall and Don Barclay. January 20, "Traps and Tangles," featuring Larry Semon. January 27, "Footballs and Frauds," featuring "Slim" Summerville. February 3, "Love and Lather," featuring Earl Montgomery and Joe Rock. February 10, "Soapsuds and Saphcads," featuring James Aubrey. January 17, "Scamps and Scandal," featuring Larry Semon.

Vitagraph's two-reel comedies are the result of the successful one-reel Big "V" Comedies which for a long time were issued weekly and which grew into great popularity. It was in answer to an insistent demand from all over the country for the same type of comedies, but of greater length which would enable exhibitors to feature them properly, that the two-reel Big "V" Specials were finally evolved.

Vitagraph now has three comedy companies at work in Hollywood, devoting their time exclusively to these two-reel Big "V" Specials. Larry Semon heads one company, playing the lead and directing the productions; the second company features Earl Montgomery and Joe Rock, under the direction of Gilbert Pratt; the third company is headed by James Aubrey, under the direction of J. A. Howe.

"Love" Is Fatty Arbuckle's Next.

"Fatty" Arbuckle, whose Paramount comedy, "Camping Out," has just been released, is now announced in an entirely new and original comedy vehicle called "Love."

The title itself suggests great possibilities, for what may not be expected of the genial "Fatty" when laboring under the wounds inflicted by Cupid? Winifred Westover, one of the most delightful of ingenues, is cast for the leading feminine role.

The comedian directed the picture himself and it was made at the new Paramount-Arbuckle studios on Alessandro street, Los Angeles.

Henri Krauss in "A Vagabond of France" (Pathe).

Krauss at His Best in "A Vagabond of France"

JEAN RICHEPIN'S charming poem, "Le Chemineau," which furnished Otis Skinner with the story for his beautiful production of "The Harvester," years ago, has now been enriched by the realities of the open places, fired by the camera; and thus the vagabond idyll comes with the new appeal of actual nature and the finished artistry of Henri Krauss, the distinguished French actor. It is titled "A Vagabond of France," and will be released by Pathe January 26. Krauss, who also directed this production, which expresses every delicate mood of the poem, is one of the strong modern influences of the French stage, and, along with Bernhardt, a distinguished European veteran of the cinema. He is known the world over by his expressive creation of Jean Valjean, in "Les Miserables," filmed twelve years ago, one of the first super-features in multiple reels ever produced which has remained as a model of classic film production.

"A Vagabond of France" is a model of direct, continuity and freedom from padding, though the urge to the use of scenics was strong. It has been encompassed in four reels, which, says Krauss, "gives a sense of sincerity and completeness." It might have been allowed to be longer, but with a loss of the very feeling for which the director-star sincerely aimed.

Krauss plays the Vagabond with the same intensity of purpose, the same forceful acting, the same inimitable artistry which he gave to Jean Valjean. He is an artist to his finger tips—every movement, every gesture, every facial expression throughout this cinema-poem is the result of long years of experience and careful study. Just as Otis Skinner was lauded by eminent critics for his splendid characterization of "The Vagabond" on the speaking stage so will Krauss' rendition of this part, it is predicted, be applauded in the screen version.

Supporting him are some of the cleverest French screen artists, including Messrs. Charlier, Anthonin, and Colsy, as Pierre, Francois, and Toinet, respectively, and Miss Charlotta Barbier as Toinon.

"The Sign of the Cross" (Success Series).

William Farnum and an able supporting company are presented in the Paramount production of Wilson Barrett's drama, "The Sign of the Cross," which is released by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation January 12 as a Success series feature.

As Marcus Superbus, William Farnum supplies a great characterization, while Rosina Henley, as Mercia, is said to bring out all the faith and courage with which that character is endowed. Ethel Gray Terry is well cast as Berenice. Sheridan Block makes a cruel but truthful Nero and Lila Barclay portrays Poppaea, Nero's wife. Morgan Thorpe, Georgine Majeroni, Ogden Child, Ethel Phillips, Charles E. Verner and Rienzi de Cordova are also numbered among the leading players.

Ethel Barrymore Star in Metro's "The Divorcee"

ETHEL BARRYMORE will appear January 20 on the Metro screen in "The Divorcee," an adaptation of one of the most striking successes of her stage career, "Lady Frederick," by W. Somerset Maugham, the English playwright. This All-Star Series production is all that its name implies, there being no member of the cast whose name has not appeared prominently in the programs of New York and London plays for years.

Wherever possible Metro cast for parts in "The Divorcee" the artists who supported Miss Barrymore in Charles Frohman's stage production. E. J. Ratcliffe will be Lord Frederick. E. E. Herbert has the part of Sir Paradine Fuldes.

Naomi Childers needs no introduction. John Goldsworthy has proved unusually popular in musical comedies in New York. His playing of the broker in "The Easiest Way," and his part with Edith Storey in "The Silent Woman" have served to establish Joseph Kilgour firmly as one of the best character actors on the screen. Others are Maud Turner Gordon, Harold Entwhistle, Eugene Strong and Ricca Allen.

June Mathis and Katharine Kavanaugh collaborated in preparing the script. The photography is by George K. Hollister.

Vila Dana Making "Diana Ardway."

Glimpses so far of Viola Dana's work in her latest screen production, the Metro adaptation by John H. Collins of Van Zo Post's novel, "Diana Ardway," indicate that the completed feature probably will surpass in charm and interest anything this star has done. The film is now in process of production at the new Metro studios at Hollywood.

The story is one particularly suited to the star's personality. Miss Dana has as her chief support in the picture Milton Sills, who interprets the role of Paul Worden, the playwright.

Assisting Herbert Blache in the direction is Albert H. Kelley. John Arnold is the cameraman.

The DeHavens With "Smiling Bill" Parsons

COMES now the announcement that Carter DeHaven, musical comedy and film star, and Flora Parker, his wife, had been signed by "Smling Bill" Parsons for a series of two-reel comedies built on the "newly wed" idea. The two rosy DeHaven babies will be an important part of the concern.

By a special arrangement between Mr. Parsons and the Robertson-Cole Company the DeHaven comedies will have the benefit of the distributing organization of the Exhibitors' Mutual. The pictures will be built around the personality of the star. Painstaking care and ample production time will be employed to make them equal to the best the market can offer. The initial film will be released early in March and the others of the series will follow, one a month for thirteen months. They will be known as the Feature Comedies.

Carter DeHaven's cleverness and fun making need not be recalled to playgoers who recall his achievements both on the stage and screen. Mr. Parsons expresses the keenest satisfaction at the new combination. "The family idea is an excellent one," he declares, "and with Carter DeHaven putting it over we may count on a smash. We're going into this comedy series to do a finished job. Scenarios, locations and supporting casts will be selected with more care than is given to most five-reel features."

"By the arrangement with Robertson-Cole Company," Mr. Parsons continues, "we have the advantage not only of the complete distributing facilities of the Exhibitors' Mutual but we have the added prestige of a new name in the motion picture business which the exhibitors already know spells reliability and square dealing."

"The series of thirteen," Mr. Parsons goes on to state, "will exploit all the high lights of joy and the dark spots of woe that follow two people who tie up together, from the beginning of their courtship all the way through to the baby's first case of mumps.'

Mr. DeHaven says that a monthly release of a comedy of only two reels in length was his notion of an ideal medium for a star who takes pride in snappy work sustained at the top speed of fun. "Comedies go over," declares Mr. DeHaven, "only when they're packed full of choice bits of business and when the incidents snap you up one after another without any let down. This can't be done for five reels, but it can for two."

MARTIN JOHNSON'S sensational picture of life in the South Pacific, "Cannibals of the South Seas," has duplicated its New York run in half a dozen large cities of the country since its release through Exhibitors-Mutual exchanges.

Refreshingly original as a feature release and presenting exceptional possibilities for unusual showmanship, the Johnson picture has been "put over" for long runs of the record-breaking box office receipts.

The Plaza, the Symphony, Concourse, Dyckman, Adion and Annex, of New York City, have taken advantage of the exploitation which the Rivoli showing was given in New York and the Halsey and Park theatres, of Brooklyn; the Park, of Corona, L. I.; the Place, of Passaic; the Pastime, of Union Hill; the Colonial, of West Hoboken; the Star, of Newburgh, and the Playmouse at Mount Vernon, followed the New York presentation in the immediate vicinity of New York City.

The largest single booking on the production was made with the Stanley Booking Corporation of Philadelphia, which played it in eight houses in Philadelphia for from three to five days each.

The most interesting phase of the reports of the showings is the fact that the long runs are playing to increasingly heavy box office receipts.

The character of the production is so distinctly different from the ordinary five-reel release that the public finds refreshment in the presentation. The opportunities for unique exploitation, too, are so many, and for unusual presentation, that the production is going over with a "bang."

"Footballs and Frauds" Ready for Jan. 27.

Vitagraph's two-reel "Big V" comedy, scheduled for release on January 27, is called "Footballs and Frauds," and features "Slim" Summerville and Maude Emery. If any place offers greater possibilities for slap-stick comedy than a football field, it has not as yet been discovered, and inasmuch as a great deal of the action in this takes place during a football game, exhibitors are assured of opportunity for much audience laughter.

Vitagraph reports that its "Big V" comedies have taken hold with remarkable speed. Out of Vitagraph's Hollywood studio, three companies are at work, turning out these two-reel laugh makers. Larry Semon heads one company and likewise directs his productions; Earl Montgomery and Joe Rock are the featured players in a second company, under the direction of Gilbert Pratt, while James Aubrey completes the trio of funsters, under the direction of Jay A. Howe.

Universal Makes Metzger Mountain District Chief

FOLLOWING the announcement of a reorganization of certain departments of Universal last week comes news of several other promotions effective this week.

Gus A. Metzger, manager of the New York Jewel exchange for the past six months, has been promoted to the district managership for the Rocky Mountain territory by Universal. Mr. Metzger was formerly manager of the Universal exchanges at Portland, Seattle and Spokane, and his return to the West as district manager seems a logical step by Universal. Mr. Metzger knows the western territory well and is anxious to return to the Pacific Slope. His new position gives him jurisdiction over the Denver, Salt Lake, Butte, Spokane, Seattle, Portland, San Francisco and Los Angeles exchanges. Immediately upon his arrival at Portland he will begin a visit to all exchanges in his territory for the purpose of meeting exhibitors and learning their requriements.

Simultaneously with the promotion of Mr. Metzger comes word that Hal Hodes has been made assistant general manager of Universal exchanges. Mr. Hodes has been with Universal for three years in various capacities. Having previously been with Vitagraph from 1903 to 1908 and later Kalem in a publicity capacity, Mr. Hodes's first work for Universal was in a similar capacity. Later he took up sales promotional work and when Jewel Productions were first issued he became assistant to H. M. Berman, who had charge of their exploitations.

Variety in Magazine No. 100.

Universal Screen Magazine No. 100, released January 11, comprised six subjects of decidedly different character, and according to Editor Jack Cohn each should have a strong appeal to film followers.

Dwight Franklin, museum artist and historical expert, portrays our ancestors with the aid of wax for the magazine; a study of babies, and the service flag of Isaac Simms, a Southern patriot who has fifteen boys in Uncle Sam's service, are also included. In addition exclusive pictures showing what American women have done in Italy during the war, pertinent paragraphs from leading newspapers and Willie Hopkins' "The Greatest of Them All," modeled in mud, complete the weekly.

Rothacker Titling a Feature.

"Doing the Dells," "Bulls and Bears" and "Geezers and Geysers" are the titles of the last releases of the Rothacker Outdoor Pictures through Exhibitors' Mutual Distributing Corporation.

"Doing the Dells," scheduled for release January 26, is a trip through the beautiful "Dells of Wisconsin," a favorite resort for vacationists. "Romance Cliff," "High Rock," "Witches Gulch," "Fat Folks Misery" and the "Hornet's Nest" are some of the peculiar freaks of nature shown in this interesting out-of-doors.

The titling of these Rothacker subjects is an attractive feature, being adapted in a light and humorous narrative vein in order to make an interesting story of the picture. A forthcoming release will show a visit to the great cattle country of the West and the rounding up of beef for the market.

Grossmith In "A House Divided."

Lieutenant Lawrence Grossmith, musical comedy star, plays an important part in J. Stuart Blackton's current production, "A House Divided," which was adapted from Ruth Boucicault's widely read novel, "The Substance of His House." The lieutenant began his screen career under Mr. Blackton's direction in "The Common Cause."

Baltimore Exhibitors Give Reception to Drews

LAST week the legitimate attraction, "Keep Her Smiling," in which Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew are starring, was playing in Baltimore, and the motion picture exhibitors in and around that city hastily planned a reception and dinner at which the Drews were to be the invited guests.

The banquet was held in the grand ballroom of the Hotel Belvedere, and a pleasant surprise was hastily conceived by the manager of the local Paramount Exchange handling the new Drew two-reel comedies.

When the coffee was served the lights were suddenly extinguished, a screen dropped at one end of the ballroom, and from a camouflaged booth the first release of the Drew Paramount comedies, "Romance and Rings," was projected, followed immediately by the second subject, "Once a Mason."

The appearance of Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew on the screen at the banquet was the occasion for a tumultuous demonstration, and at the conclusion of the showing the lights again went up accompanied by tremendous applause on the part of the guests.

Mr. Drew made a brief address impressing upon those present his desire to make just such comedies as exhibitors believe the public demand. "I feel," said Mr. Drew, "that I have struck a responsive cord and that I am on the right track. In fact, I should say that Mrs. Drew is on the right track, for fairness compels me to say that hers is the guiding hand in the making of Drew comedies, and I am just old enough to appreciate that a woman's viewpoint is after all the human and the popular viewpoint."

An unprecedented incident occurred. Every exhibitor, with the exception of one, signified his intention of booking all of the new Drew comedies, and this lone exception rose to explain that owing to the demolition of his building and the expiration of his lease he was going out of business for the present.

"Cheating Cheaters" a Four-Star Picture.

Clara Kimball Young's forthcoming Select Picture, "Cheating Cheaters," with practically four stars in its personnel—Miss Young, Anna Q. Nilsson, Tully Marshall and Jack Holt—contains, according to the announcement made by Select Pictures Corporation, many star bits which lend this attraction a distinctive atmosphere; and while it is true that for this reason "Cheating Cheaters" might easily have been scheduled for release as a special attraction, it is, nevertheless, being retained by Select as the second in Miss Young's Second Star Series.

Not alone for its noteworthy cast is "Cheating Cheaters" elevated above the average standard of productions, but the story itself is one of the most remarkable ones that has ever been transformed into a screen attraction. Two years ago one of the most successful stage plays on Broadway, this compeling Max Marcin drama of crook life has been scenarioized by Kathryn Stuart into a screen play full of intense moments and thrills.

Allan Dawn did the directing, while the photography was in the capable hands of Arthur Edeson.

Cannibals Break Akron Records.

Martin Johnson's "Cannibals of the South Seas," released through Exhibitors' Mutual, broke all records of the Orpheum Theatre at Akron. Two wires from A. P. Bortzum, manager of the Orpheum, to the Mutual executive offices told of the sensational run of the South Pacific pictures.

Under date of January 1, he wired: "Opened Sunday, December 29, with Martin Johnson's 'Cannibals of the South Seas' to the largest one day's attendance in the history of the Orpheum Theatre. Patrons delighted, and commenting on the wonderful photography and educational value. Apparently embarrassing situations are appreciated by the audiences for their truthful depiction and are not questioned. Now showing fourth day, and attendance still maintained notwithstanding miserable weather. Indications point to record attendance for balance of the week."

Under date of January 5, he wired: " 'Cannibals of the South Seas,' which completed week's run last night, broke all records for the Orpheum. Patrons delighted with subject. It is an original, satisfying business-getter at advanced prices."

First S.-L. Film Practically Completed.

The initial S.-L. production starring E. K. Lincoln has practically been completed. Directed by Ralph Ince, this picture marks the debut of Arthur H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin into the field of film makers . The inaugural S.-L. offering, which will be stamped as a "Ralph Ince Film Attraction," is said to be one of the biggest screen entertainments ever made.

"The Fighting Roosevelts" Open at Strand

THE long looked-for Roosevelt picture has made its appearance. This week "The Fighting Roosevelts" was shown to several big New York exhibitors. On Sunday, January 19, it appears at the Strand. The price paid for the first showing is said to be the highest ever paid by the Strand, exceeding the $3,000 rental recently recorded for the Anita Stewart picture.

Frederick L. Collins, the producer, has concluded this arrangement with the Strand in spite of the fact that extraordinary inducements were made to him and the First National Exhibitors' Circuit to show the film immediately in a circuit of large theatrical houses, the plan being to release it after that through the first-run theatres. This offer involved the payment of a large cash bonus to the First National Exhibitors' Circuit and to Mr. Collins in order to secure the distribution of the picture through this channel.

Other offers to buy a financial interest in the picture were also received from big film men. In spite of these attractive propositions it has been decided at considerable personal sacrifice to Mr. Collins to stick to the original releasing program—direct to the exhibitors. Mr. Collins felt that in view of the extraordinary timeliness of the picture the exhibitors were entitled to receive it immediately.

In addition to the universal interest aroused in the picture through the fact that Colonel Roosevelt was giving his close attention to its production up to the last week of his life, the film is also unique in that it shows the influence Colonel Roosevelt had on the stirring events of the present troubled era.

Major-General Leonard Wood, whose touching tribute to Colonel Roosevelt appeared this week in the daily papers, is pictured in the film at that moment of his life when President Roosevelt perceived his military qualities and selected him for promotion. The film also shows Roosevelt selecting Lieutenant Simms for a special mission, thus giving first recognition to his fighting and executive ability. In addition to these two interesting episodes, Roosevelt's selection of General Pershing for promotion is strikingly depicted.

These three incidents, revealing Roosevelt as a picker of the three American heroes who, since his death, have joined to pay him remarkable tributes, are only a few of the fascinating incidents that appear in "The Fighting Roosevelts."

Mack a Man of Many Talents.

Hayward Mack, who plays the heavy opposite E. K. Lincoln in "Fighting Through," for distribution by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation January 27, was a civil engineer and a newspaper man before he tried the stage, where he spent seven years in stock and vaudeville and Broadway productions. His screen career dates back eight years. As the other suitor for the hand of the Southern belle in "Fighting Through," Mr. Mack easily portrays all requirements. W. Christy Cabanne is producer-director-author of this story of adventure.

Peggy Hyland To Be Seen in McCutcheon Best Seller

OUIDA, Victor Hugo, Guy DeMaupassant, Charles Dickens, Hall Caine—these are only a few of the famous writers whose stories have been the basis of big Fox productions. Now comes the announcement that George Barr McCutcheon has been added to the Fox list. One of McCutcheon's best sellers, "Cowardice Court," has been purchased for Peggy Hyland, and its screen version will be released by the Fox corporation under its Excel Pictures program. This is following out the policy previously announced by Mr. Fox—to secure for Excel stars the finest scripts available. "Buchanan's Wife," by Justus Miles Forman, was released recently under Excel pictures, with Virginia Pearson as the star. It is stated that the price paid for "Cowardice Court" is a substantial one.

The Excel exhibitor, through this purchase, certainly will have for his patrons one of the most popular names in American fiction. During some fifteen years and beginning with the famous "Graustark" Mr. McCutcheon has written thirty successful novels. "Beverly of Graustark" and "Brewster's Millions" alone, with their host of readers, it is pointed out, suggest the immense possibilities for the exhibitor of Mr. McCutcheon's name on the billboards of a theatre.

It is contended that "Cowardice Court" lends itself especially well to the making of a motion picture. Its setting is the big out-of-doors of the Adirondacks, its plot is filled with swift action, and rare comedy marks the rivalry and near feud of the occupants of two adjoining estates. Miss Hyland, herself a native of England, will play the charming English girl who trespasses upon the American hero's estate with results that not only are exciting but embody a charming love story. A haunted house, an attempted murder, the heroine lost in a storm that sweeps the mountains, an appealing instance of the faithfulness of a dog to his master—these are some of the other factors in "Cowardice Court" which are dependeu upon to ensure enthusiasm and success.

Ruth Roland Working on New Pathe Serial

PATHE Exchange has received word that Ruth Roland has started work on her Pathe serial which is being made by Astra at Glendale, Cal. This serial was to have been started some weeks ago, but Miss Roland's illness necessitated a postponement. The original title of the serial, which is to be in fifteen episodes, was "The Long Arm," but this will probably be changed and the Pathe Scenario Department has a number of titles in view. The story is by Arthur B. Reeve and Charles Logue and will be directed by Louis J. Gasnier. Pathe expects to release this serial some time in the early spring, probably at the conclusion of the Pearl White serial "The Lightning Raider," which has just started.

Puts 48-Sheet in Post Office.

D. L. Williamson of the Lyric Theatre, Jackson, Tenn., is a believer in "preparedness." Mr. Williamson has contracted with the Big Feature Rights Corporation for 16 pictures, one to run every other week, and has secured the advertising for all, that he may lay out his campaign.

Mr. Williamson is a great believer in advertising. Nothing comes too big for him. Recently he ordered nine 24-sheet posters and when told there was a 48-sheet poster also, he wired: "Send 48-sheet. Stand put up in the post office."

Billboard Campaign for "The Man of Might"

Plans for a national billboard campaign to herald its new serial, "The Man of Might," are perfected, says a statement from Vitagraph headquarters. The new twenty-four sheet carries a heroic group of figures, showing Duncan in a furious fight with one of the villains, while the heroine, lashed to the mast, looks on helplessly, the fight taking place on board a sailing ship.

The atmosphere surrounding the situation gives opportunity for some wonderful color work and as striking a twenty-four sheet as has graced the boards of the country for many a day is promised. Beginning with "The Fighting Trail" and through every serial thereafter, Vitagraph has made its billboard campaigns the pivot on which its serial exploitations have turned. These twenty-four-sheets have girdled the continent in campaign after campaign.

Duncan's company is well beyond the half-way mark in its production of "The Man of Might" and the entire serial will probably be filmed by the time the first episode is released throughout the country.

Vitagraph has in preparation a big campaign and plan book which will contain everything needed by an exhibitor for the proper exploitation of "The Man of Might." Novelties in the way of photo lobby display and attractive posters are being turned out and it is confidently expected that the release date will witness "The Man of Might" as thoroughly equipped for a ride to success as any of its predecessors.

Miss Calvert Wears Gowns.

When E. Lloyd Sheldon wrote "Marriage for Convenience" for Catherine Calvert, he knew the star's reputation for gowns and what the public expected of her. Miss Calvert supplements acting with a collection of gowns that would stage a Fifth Avenue fashion show, and when Mr. Sheldon wrote the script for "Marriage for Convenience" he took good care to give Miss Calvert every opportunity to display her latest repertoire of gowns, which are said to represent an outlay of $10,000. The last word in sartorial art is attained in the fifty-seven varieties which characterize Miss Calvert's wardrobe for "Marriage for Convenience," which by the way is produced by Frank A. Keeney.

However, while special stress is laid upon Miss Calvert's gown exploitation, the new photoplay by no means depends upon sartorial display. The name of the author, E. Lloyd Sheldon, attests the inherent value of the story.

In the role of Natalie Rand, Miss Calvert presents herself as a society belle of the south and her fine calculation of dramatic values is afforded ample scope to present her to the utmost advantage of her motion picture career.

That Bennison Smile Irresistible.

The Louis Bennison smile is irresistible, but never more so than in his second Betzwood production, "Sandy Burke of the U-Bar-U." Critics the country over sang the praises of his cheery good humor when the Bennison smile brought him fame as the star of "Johnny, Get Your Gun." And their commendation was none the less warm in the reviews of his first picture triumph, "Oh, Johnny."

In his tensest moments—and "Sandy Burke of the U-Bar-U" abounds in highly dramatic situations—Bennison's infectious smile is ever present. And as a cowpuncher Bennison is decidedly different. In place of the usually hardened man of the plains ready to manhandle every difficult situation that arises, he gives picture lovers the ingenious good nature of youth and a sense of fun that makes him see the laughable side of everything he encounters, without sacrificing the ability to deal with it effectively when everything seems to be going against him.

Warner Back to Screen for Eight Hampton Features

H. B. WARNER will return to the screen as the result of the contract which the star has signed with Jesse D. Hampton. He has arranged to appear in a series of eight features, to be directed by Mr. Hampton at the Brunton studios, and to be shown through the joint distributing facilities of Robertson-Cole Company and the Exhibitors' Mutual.

The acquisition of Mr. Warner has furnished new proof that Robertson-Cole Company is coming through on their promise to furnish first-water quality productions. Coming in the same week with the booking announced by which they will control the six-reel special, "What Every Woman Wants," featuring Grace Darmond, the declaration of the Warner contract had attracted further interest.

Created Jimmie Valentine.

The man who created the role of Jimmie Valentine has behind him a splendid record of achievements on both stage and screen. Mr. Warner has tendered his resignation from the cast of "Sleeping Partners," and will leave for the Coast at the end of the month to begin his new work.

The first picture, "The Man Who Turned White," gives full opportunity to Mr. Warner's unique skill in depicting the type of man with the steady nerve and the fearless mastery of situation of intense dramatic force. The second picture of the series will be known as "The Hornet's Nest."

Mr. Warner has proved himself more than a gifted actor. He has shown marked ability as a continuity writer in many of the pictures in which he has appeared, and possesses a knowledge of directing rare and valuable in players. He will in all probability choose his own support.

H. B. Warner.

Universal's Walcamp Serial To Be Released February 17

FEBRUARY 17 has been set as the release date for the new Universal serial, "The Red Glove," starring Marie Walcamp. The fifth episode is being completed at Universal City.

The story of the serial deals with the efforts of two rival oil companies to discover and secure possession of a rich oil field in a mountain pass, of a battle of wits between a girl and two men and of love and adventure. The story for the serial has been published in novel form by its author, Douglas Grant, under the title "The Fifth Ace," but since being adapted for the screen by Universal a second edition of the book under the title "The Red Glove" and illustrated with scenes from the film is to be published shortly.

Miss Walcamp is cast as Billie, a Western girl who "has never deserted a friend or forgiven an enemy." Alfred Allen is Geoff, the girl's foster father; Evelyn Selbie plays the part of Tia Juana, an old Mexican woman possessing psychic power and the chart showing the location of the rich oil field. Tom Lingham essays the role of an oil company representative and Pat O'Malley is an oil engineer.

J. P. McGowan, who produced several serials featuring Helen Holmes which were big successes and who recently completed Eddie Polo's serial, "The Lure of the Circus," is directing Miss Walcamp.

Universal publicity and advertising departments are now at work on the exhibitors' campaign books and a newspaper publicity campaign.

Helps for Paramount Exhibitors.

As an example of the numerous opportunities offered exhibitors to tie up to the campaign of national advertising being conducted by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, the advertising department of the company has distributed to the exchanges a large number of post card reproductions of the Saturday Evening Post advertisement of December 28 titled "You Wouldn't Know the Old Town Now." These in turn are to be apportioned by the exchanges among the exhibitors of Paramount and Artcraft pictures.

Underneath the photographic reproduction of the advertisement there is ample room for exhibitors' announcements of coming Paramount and Artcraft attractions.

No two men advertise alike. If they did, there would be little pull in advertising. But the man who does the best work is usually he who makes the most radical departure from the average.

Unprecedented Opening for Houdini Serial in New York

WITH results exceeding even the fondest expectations of producer, distributor and exchangeman, B. A. Rolfe's super-serial, "The Master Mystery," starring Houdini, had its opening in New York the week of January 6, when the first episode was shown in sixteen Keith and Proctor houses in New York city and State.

To say that the opening was auspicious is to use terms which do not adequately describe the facts. It was a tremendous success.

What happened at Proctor's Theatre, Yonkers, illustrates just how well the serial opened . Seating three thousand, the policy of Proctor's, Yonkers, is to play one show nightly. Thursday night, the opening day for the Houdini serial, the house was packed to its utmost capacity. Friday night, at 7.50, ten minutes before the show began, the theatre was literally jammed to the doors. Not only was every available seat occupied, but standees were present to the utmost limit of the law's allowance. Outside a veritable mob had gathered, vainly trying to gain admission. Three thousand persons were in the crowd that was turned away, it was estimated.

As a solution to the problem of accommodating the disappointed throng, the house management decided upon a radical course—in accordance with which it was immediately announced that two shows would be given on Saturday night, the first at 6.30 and the second at 9. Thus for the first time in the history of the house the Keith and Proctor policy of one show a night was broken—a significant compliment to Houdini in "The Master Mystery."

Elsie Ferguson Goes in Florida on Location.

Elsie Ferguson, with her director, Emile Chautard, Assistant Director Al Lena, Jacques Bizeul, cameraman; Wyndham Standing, leading man, and other members of Miss Ferguson's company have gone to Miami, Fla., there to film a number of exteriors for the new Artcraft picture, "The Salt of the Earth." They will remain in the Southland about two weeks and upon their return will find the Fifty-sixth street studio of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation entirely renovated, with a new concrete floor ready to accommodate the interior sets.

Triumvirate Puts Out No. 6.

The rather subtle prediction that Select Pictures advanced through the medium of its publicity department one months ago that the triumvirate of screen workers, Constance Talmadge, Harrison Ford and Walter Edwards, might again combine their efforts, has come to pass and in Miss Talmadge's January attraction she appears on the screen with Harrison Ford as her leading man and Walter Edwards as the director.

This marks the sixth time that the winning combination has worked together in Select Pictures. The combination dates back to the days of "Good Night, Paul!" and ran through such triumphs as "A Pair of Silk Stockings," "Sauce for the Goose," "Mrs. Leffingwell's Boots," and "A Lady's Name."

"Who Cares?" the latest Constance Talmadge comedy, is the work of Cosmo Hamilton, whose stage plays and magazine stories are always sources of real entertainment.

Allan Dwan did the directing, while the photography was in the capable hands of Arthur Edeson.

Beach Can't Go to the Mountain.

Snow blindness, contracted several years ago in Alaska and annoyingly recurrent at this season, kept Rex Beach on the Goldwyn studio lot at Culver City while Director Reginald Barker and members of the company appearing in "The Brand" journeyed to Northeastern California and the Sierra Nevadas for snow scenes in the author's drama of Alaska.

Photographing of the interior scenes for the production purposely was delayed in the hope Mr. Beach would recover sufficiently from his affliction to permit him to make the trip with Kay Laurell and Russell Simpson, featured players in the production . But even the sun of Southern California was too much for the author's eyes, and he was obliged by his physician to go about with smoked glasses. The glare of sunlight on snow, he was told, might make him unable to see at all for months.

Some of the most thrilling scenes of "The Brand" are being made at Truckee, Cal., high up on the mountain divide between California and Nevada, where snow falls so heavily all winter that even the summer air fails to melt it all.

Lytell Begins Work on "Blind Man's Eyes."

Bert Lytell has started work on his Metro production, "The Blind Man's Eyes," at the studios in Hollywood. The production is an adaptation by June Mathis of the novel by William McHarg and Edwin Balmer.

Naomi Childers has the leading feminine role. The story is gripping drama, lightened by comedy; it narrates the fight of a man wrongly accused of murder to regain his good name.

International News Shows Wilson Reviewing Troops

V. K. WHIPPLE, staff cameraman for the International News Service, has secured some exceptional scenes of President Wilson's review of American troops at field headquarters in France on Christmas Day. In addition to showing President Wilson and General Pershing all of the leaders of America's victorious armies are seen in one group.

In addition to scenes taken on President Wilson's trips in France the first pictures to be sent from Austria-Hungary since America declared war are shown in a recent Screen Telegram. These scenes show the celebrating at Prague, Bohemia, when the monarchical yoke was thrown off and the Czecho-Slovak republic founded.

Pictures of the funeral ceremony of ex-President Theodore Roosevelt are also shown in Universal Current Events released January 12 and this issue also contains scenes showing what the German left behind them on their recent retreat and the embarkation of English Tommies at San Francisco on their long journey from England to Siberia.

A New Alice Joyce.

"The Captain's Captain," the last Vitagraph release in which Alice Joyce was featured, has developed much discussion among exhibitors and Vitagraph representatives, and all because the feature presents a new Alice Joyce. Heretofore, Miss Joyce has been identified almost exclusively with emotional, dramatic roles. "The Captain's Captain," however, gives Miss Joyce a role that is almost light comedy, and a great many exhibitors are insisting that, appealing as Miss Joyce has always been in the heavier roles, she has never before appeared more delightful or more surprising than in "The Captain's Captain."

Exhibitors are urging more Alice Joyce features along light comedy lines, but it is reported that for the next three or four releases plans have already been made whereby exhibitors are assured of powerful dramas of note and wide reputation, in which Miss Joyce will have the sort of roles that have made her reputation as an emotional actress.

Press Book for Big Universal Film.

Universal publicity and advertising departments are this week completing work on the press book for "The Heart of Humanity," the big Jewel production to be released for showing in various parts of the country within a few weeks.

Universal has prepared an elaborate and practical press book. When completed it will comprise over twenty pages and will be an individual and complete press service for any engagement.

Nathan Hirsh Resigns as President of Pioneer

NATHAN HIRSH has resigned as president of the Pioneer Film Corporation, and will in a few days make a definite announcement as to his future business plans. He is at present working out the details.

Mr. Hirsh has been successful in marketing state rights features, this having been his specialty for many years. He is well familiar with the business of selling features and it is intimated that his new arrangements will be along the lines of distribution.

During the time that he was president of "Pioneer" Mr. Hirsh put over many successful deals, placed on the market several big features. He does not believe in simply selling a territory and then letting the buyer put the picture over for the exhibitor, but insists that advertising material of the best be supplied with all the films he handles, to give the theatre owner an opportunity to properly advertise his features and put them over to good results.

Many Novelties Prepared for Exploiting "S. L." Stars

THE name of the star of the initial S-L picture, E. K. Lincoln, will be kept before the public in a number of novel ways designed to be of the greatest possible value to exhibitors and distributors of this attraction, according to an announcement from this organization. Arrangements have been completed whereby a series of stories in connection with the production will appear in a syndicate of newspapers throughout the country, selected so as to cover the different territories; and in addition a special department will be established in one of the magazines catering to photoplay audiences, which will be conducted by Mr. Lincoln and in which he will endeavor to answer queries pertaining to the picture and himself.

During the month in which the picture is to be first presented, the star's photograph will also appear on the available covers of several magazines. Several novelties have also been arranged in the matter of lobby displays, including paintings in colors by Clarence Underwood. Also, a photograph in various colors on glass of Mr. Lincoln, in an illuminated frame which is so made that the picture changes in color and pose depicting the character he portrays which will attract the attention of the public, is available to exhibitors.

As a special aid, a booklet is being prepared which contains the story of the production and information regarding the star. This booklet will be profusely illustrated with cartoons of the star and scenes from the play by a well known artist. It is also announced that several other surprises in the matter of exploitation and advertising will be sprung when the picture is ready for release and that all the material mentioned can be secured from Messrs. Sawyer and Lubin at the office of S-L Pictures in New York.

Lesser Secures Territory on New Billy West Comedies

TERRITORY on the new Billy West comedies is being rapidly disposed of by the Bull's Eye Film Corporation. Milton L. Cohen, president, reports that Sol. L. Lesser, the well known independent buyer of the Pacific Coast, president of All Star Feature Distributors, Inc., after viewing some of the comedies was enthusiastic over them, and immediately secured rights for California, Arizona and Nevada. Also, the Equitable Film Corporation, of Kansas City, has secured rights to these comedies for Missouri and Kansas, B. N. Judell, of Minneapolis, for Minnesota, Wisconsin, North and South Dakota; Canadian Film Service, Limited, of Vancouver, for western Canada, and Southwestern Film Corporation, of Dallas, for Texas and Louisiana.

Mr. Cohen further advises that excellent business is being enjoyed by the Billy West offerings in all sections; the Fontanelle Feature Film Company, of Denver, report that exhibitors and public alike are well pleased, and similar reports are being received from Chicago, Boston, Atlanta, Philadelphia and other exchange centres.

Since recovernig from influenza, Billy West has completed two comedies which are said to be filled with more comedy stunts than ever.

Both Mr. Aechtler and Mr. Farrell are very well known film men. Mr. Farrell was manager of the General Film Company, Pathe Film Exchange and Select Film Exchange, and has been in the picture business for eleven years. Mr. Aechtler had theatres in Winthrop, Revere, Peabody and Cambridge, and two years ago sold his interest in the above theatres to take over the Major Films Company.

This company will be in the market for state rights productions, both features and single reels.

Cast to Support Lincoln Selected with Great Care

IN keeping with the care exercised by the producers of the initial "S-L Picture" starring E. K. Lincoln, several weeks were given the matter of picking out a suitable cast. The story, dealing with a theme of international appeal, called for several distinct types and Arthur H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin, together with Ralph Ince, who is directing the production, decided not only to secure performers who would meet their requirements, but also those possessing names well known to moving picture audiences.

Grace Darling, selected for the ingenue lead, is well known as a screen beauty, while Clara Joel, who will appear in the leading feminine "heavy" role, was the "baby vamp" in the Broadway success, "Business Before Pleasure" and star of other productions. William B. Mack, famous for his characterizations in support of Mrs. Fiske for many years, appears in a role suited to his type and abilities. Robert W. Cummings, another popular player of many Broadway stage successes, has the leading heavy male role, while John P. Wade will be seen in a character befitting his ability. Among the other players may be mentioned Irving Brooks, for several years with Madame Modjeska, Danny Hayes, famous for his characterizations of "hick" roles, Edward Talbot as Lieutenant Wainwright, and many others.

Third Perret Production "A Soul Adrift" Finished

THAT love is the prime factor in all things and that without it happiness cannot be complete, is the theme of "A Soul Adrift," the third independent Perret production, which has just been completed, written by Peonce Perret and produced by Madame Alice Blache under his supervision. It has to do with the obstacles, sufferings and hardships endured by a girl because of her constancy and devotion to the man she loves, and is replete with dramatic and romantic thrills.

Tiring of his fastidious existence basking in the smiles of the demi-mondes, an artist forsakes the scenes of debauchery and goes to a small village under an assumed name where he meets Helen Sanderson and their friendship ripens into love. Circumstances necessitate his return to the city and he settles back into his old habits. Helen goes to the city and accidentally learns his real identity. Going to see him she interrupts a boisterous celebration. Disillusioned, she decides to go on the stage and after considerable hardships wins success. Robert, the man, discovers that the famous star is the girl who took possession of his heart; realizes the error of his past life, and they are ultimately reconciled, in a dramatic manner.

It is announced that a special invitation showing will be arranged prior to the presentation of this picture at one of the Broadway theatres, and that Madame Blache has introduced a number of strikingly realistic effects in this production.

Although there has been no definite arrangements as to the manner in which "A Soul Adrift" will be released, a beautiful novelty story-album has been prepared by the producers, who will furnish it gratis to exhibitors upon request. This album contains reproductions of a number of scenes from the film, with a complete cast and synopsis for exhibitors' use.

Dolores Cassinelli, "The Cameo Girl," is the star of this production, and she is supported by an excellent cast headed by Albert Roscoe.

Bailey to Help Exhibitors With "Wanted for Murder"

THE Independent Sales Corporation announces that Captain Harry A. Bailey has been appointed a special representative to cover the country and aid exhibitors in handling Harry Rapf's production "Wanted for Murder," starring Elaine Hammerstein.

Captain Bailey only recently secured his release from the army. He is a showman of many years' experience, having been associated with Anderson and Zeigler, later with the New York Hippodrome, and for the past eight years manager of the Keith theatres, the Alhambra, Colonial and other New York houses.

"Wanted for Murder" is a special attraction, offering an unusual number of advertising angles, and Captain Bailey's experience in handling special campaigns should prove of great value to exhibitors in securing box office results with this production. It is understood that Captain Bailey's servcies will be given to exhibitors without any expense to them.

"Still Alarm" Plays All Newark Houses.

What is claimed by the Pioneer Film Corporation to be a record seldom held by a distributing company, is the fact that "The Still Alarm" has been shown in every picture theatre in Newark, New Jersey, the Elliot and Royal theatres being the last two to show the picture.

Territorial buyers throughout the country, who are handling this feature production have also sent in glowing reports to the Pioneer of its success in their respective territories.

"Scarlet Trail" Combats Social Evil.

The recent attraction at Shubert's Thirty-ninth Street Theatre, New York, "The Scarlet Trail," will be distributed by the G. & L. Features, Inc., on which N. R. Greathouse is general manager. This production is in six reels and was written and directed by John S. Lawrence. The cast includes Beth Ivins, Vincent Coleman, Margaret Blanc and John Costello.

"The Scarlet Trail" is a photoplay propaganda combating the social evil and tells the story of a quack doctor who after being exposed by a newspaper is upbraided by his son, who refuses to share in the money his father made from his practice. When the son tries to enlist in the Army, the blood test shows the presence of an inherited disease which makes him unfit for military service. Returning home, he shoots himself after leaving a letter in which he accuses his father of being his murderer.

Big New England Bookings for "A Romance of the Air"

FOLLOWING the telegram of Manager Plimpton, of the Tremont Temple Theatre, Boston, to the Independent Sales Corporation, in which it was stated "A Romance of the Air" was breaking records, Lieutenant Bert Hall, who is personally appearing at each performance, wired Frank Hall as follows: "Boston critics unanimously acclaim 'A Romance of the Air' the most thrilling aerial production—devoting as much as three columns to interviews and criticisms. Thaw and myself guests of honor at special banquet for Allied aviators and radio operators at Boston City Club, Thursday night."

Many Timely Views in Gaumont News and Graphic

THE simple ceremonies which marked the burial of Theodore Roosevelt, ex-President of the United States, are pictured in Gaumont Graphic No. 42. The following are some of the other subjects of interest: In London, King George and the Prince of Wales review "silver-badged" men in Hyde Park. In Marseilles, France, the American Red Cross Society is keeping war orphans supplied with shoes. In San Francisco, Harry Hudwig, carrying Olympic Club colors wins the Bulletin's eighth annual cross city race, and visiting "poilus" witness American fire fighters at work.

In Cleveland, firemen are on strike, and volunteers do valiant service in fighting the flames. In Pasadena, "Baby 1919" is robed in rosebuds at the annual Carnival of Roses and is welcomed by a glad throng. Uncle Sam, disposing of surplus war supplies at Camp Devens, auctions off a number of horses and mules.

At Camp Logan, cowboy soldiers stage an old-fashioned "wild west" show. "Little Mary's" adopted soldiers have returned, and the screen favorite greets them with smiles and tears at Oakland.

Pictures are shown of Hon. Heber J. Grant, the new president of the Church of Latter Day Saints, and the successor to Joseph F. Smith, who recently died.

Gaumont News No. 42 shows characteristic poses of the late ex-President Roosevelt; also an installment of "Flying for Uncle Sam," shows the severe test of nerve and skill required in flying in formation, and some of the most difficult feats performed by airmen.

Baron Makino, Japanese peace delegate, is in our capital city; and Secretary of the Navy Daniels meets the war fleet admirals in an important conference. In Paris Henry Davison, president of the American Red Cross Society, is made a Commander of the Legion of Honor. And General Guillaumat, Governor of the City of Paris, is decorated with the military medal. A Russian commission visits the famous observatory on Mount Wilson, California, and inspect the world's largest telescope.

French "poilus" lead a military review in San Francisco.

Large Crowds Greet Star of "Wanted for Murder"

IN VIEW of the glowing reports received regarding the business enjoyed by the Harry Rapf feature, "Wanted for Murder," which has recently been presented on the Loew circuit of theatres in New York, a representative of this paper visited the Avenue B Theatre Saturday evening, January 11, where Elaine Hammerstein, the star of the picture, was scheduled for a personal appearance.

While Miss Hammerstein was to have appeared at the DeKalb Theatre in Brooklyn prior to going to the Avenue B, the crowd was so great at 8 o'clock that a hurry call was sent for the star to come to the latter house first, and it was necessary to call out the police reserves to handle the throng which had overrun the lobby and smashed some of the glass in the doors leading to the street. The house manager reported that all box-office records for the house were smashed, and similar reports were received from the DeKalb and other Loew houses in which Miss Hammerstein has appeared in connection with "Wanted for Murder." In each house the picture is said to have pleased the audiences and the star given an ovation.

Of interest in this connection is the fact that for what is said to be the first time Marcus Loew inserted the following notice in one of the New York daily papers: "Mr. Loew takes this opportunity to thank Miss Hammerstein for appearing in person in his theatres during the week and also to congratulate her on her popularity as shown by the size and enthusiasm of the audiences which greeted her in every one of the twenty-four theatres she visited. The manner in which the picture was received proves its popularity and shows the public still likes photoplays depicting big stories in connection with the war."

Immediately following the Loew engagements, "Wanted for Murder" was booked by the Majestic for an indefinite run; Al Harstn will play it for an extended engagement at the Regun and his other theatres, while William Yost has booked it for his new Third Avenue house and the rest of his chain of houses.

Gaumont's "Satan on Earth" Described as Photo-Novelty

AFTER weeks of preparation the Gaumont Company has completed an artistic photodrama, "Satan on Earth," which it terms a "photo-novelty." Like all Gaumont productions, this feature will be distributed through state rights exchanges. It is anticipated exhibitors will hail it with pleasure.

"Satan on Earth" is a thrilling drama of man's enlightenment from the rise of the Roman Empire until the current time, when the United States proudly stands in the first line of Christian nations. Though reference is briefly made to the passage in the Bible, which states that "Satan, which deceiveth the whole world, he was cast out into the earth," this drama is in no way a biblical play, and, though the great conflict is referred to near the close as a fitting climax to the story of civilization's growth, it is decidedly not a war story.

Starting with the downfall of Lucifer, the struggles the devil has made for the mastery of the world up to the present day are shown. The natural barriers which the Great Creator placed to keep Satan in a restricted portion of the earth are demonstrated by pictures and animation. The first republic, the Roman Empire; its patrician nobility in the days of the Caesars; the spread of its civilizing democracy to the Westward and the resistance to it offered by older civilizations to the Eastward; the classic dances which beguiled the rulers of Palestine; the Bacchanalian banquets when Cleopatra ruled; with these and many other big scenes this great drama is spectacularly begun.

The Gaumont Company wishes particularly to emphasize the fact that this picture is released as a novelty. It is not a love story, Bible story or war story, nor is it an historical or propaganda production. But it is a motion picture drama of the highest type of interest which breaks away from the beaten path of production.

Startling posters have been prepared guaranteed to attract the public. "Satan on Earth" should be booked for long runs to reap the benefit from word of mouth advertising, which is sure to be favorable.

Females in First S.-L. Film Garbed in Gorgeous Gowns

WHEN the inaugural Ralph Ince attraction starring E. K. Lincoln is presented, it is said that the famine contingent of movie audiences will be delighted by the extraordinary array of gowns worn by Grace Darling and Clara Joel, who respectively play the ingenue and heavy roles.

Lucille, creator of fashions for women, has designed several wonderful dresses for Miss Darling, while Clara Joel, remembered for her distinctive wardrobe in such stage productions as "Within the Law" and "Business Before Pleasure," is said to have surpassed her previous achievements along this line in the forthcoming picture. In addition to several gowns created by Madame Francis she will also wear a sable coat worth several thousand dollars.

The costumes of the leading feminine members of the cast are said to be in keeping with the manner in which the entire production is mounted, and in the matter of beauty of sets and richness of properties it is claimed that unusual magnificance has been attained.

Snappy Advertising Aids for Francis Ford Serial

IN heralding "The Silent Mystery," the fifteen epsiode Francis Ford serial produced by Louis Burston and handled by Hiller & Wilk, it is said that no expense or effort has been spared in turning out "paper" that reflects the quality of the production, it is filled with Ford "pep," punch and mystery. The one sheet, is claimed to be a striking example of finely balanced bold and effective posters, surcharged with action.

There is also a press book overflowing with good copy, while the slides and banners are out of the ordinary, and the cuts are filled with originality and character so that they will stand out on the page. The lobby displays are also said to be distinctive and fully in keeping with the production and the other advertising accessories. Louis Burston ,and Hiller & Wilk have throughout worked on the basis that artistic posters and snappy aids are fundamental factors in successful serial production, in aiding exhibitors to secure box office results.

"FIGHTING BLOOD."

Five-Reel Fox Production Features William Farnum in Rugged Melodrama.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

A FIVE-REEL melodrama of the rugged, red-blooded type is this Fox feature, entitled "Fighting Blood," which was written and directed by Oscar C. Apfel. It features William Farnum, who is always admirable in such parts, as a strong-limbed, big-hearted hero. Although he becomes a preacher in the course of the tale, he has a certain belligerent philosophy which does not prevent him from fighting, after he has obeyed the biblical instruction of turning the other cheek. And in so doing he wins the admiration which real men are apt to feel for a good fighter, with justice on his side.

At the opening of the story the hero, Lem Hardy, enters a lumber camp in the Kentucky mountains. He interferes with a man named Gray, who is abusing some horses, and is made foreman of the camp by the owner, Henry Colby. In the course of time he falls in love with the owner's daughter, Evie, and in so doing incurs the hatred of the superintendent, Harry Blake, who also loves her. Blake "frames up" a substitution for the payroll and succeeds in sending Lem to prison. After his release Lem becomes a preacher and returns to the lumber camp to clear his name. This he does in the course of many adventurous happenings.

The story, which is of the pronounced melodramatic type, has abundant plot interest and the action swings along without perceptible break. It will satisfy observers who like plots of the elemental sort.

The cast includes, besides Mr. Farnum, Dorothy Bernard, Fred Huntley, Henry J. Herbert, H. A. Barrows, Dick Le Strange and Willard Louis.

Publicity Points.

The locale of this story is in the heart of a rugged timber country and carries well the atmosphere of the lumber camp. The characters are well-selected types to conform to this atmosphere.

There is a fight in a barrom between the hero-preacher and the camp bully which will appeal to the observer's sense of justice and give him a new respect for the preacher and the bully as well, as the latter proves to be a "good loser."

One of the best scenes is that showing the way in which Lem's first religious service is broken up, after his return from prison.

"CAMPING OUT"

Paramount Presents Fatty Arbuckle in a Farce of Outdoor Life.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

IT is the story of a man who runs away from his wife's bad cooking to camp out on Catalina Island and do his own. Probably the most amusing part is that devoted to Arbuckle's culinary exploits, getting a wooden-legged man to punch the holes in doughnuts and handling the most part it is the same old slapstick of throwing mussy things at one person, only to have them hit another, and the like. Arbuckle is an acrobat, ingenious and a fine actor, but he seems to overlook the best part of his own interesting personality, that which always set an audience laughing, the pure humor of his mental revelations. Then, again, he gives himself very little true opportunity in such patchwork of incident as "Camping Out," merely a lot of incongruous movements sewed together without general design. Like most director-actors he cannot get the effect of what he is doing before the camera, and loses accordingly.

This is not to say that "Camping Out" is not amusing, but it ranks far below other vehicles for Fatty's laughable psychology. He is largely in evidence every moment, and therefore not sufficiently in contrast with other characters to enforce the fun in his own. He does not need this prominence—it would be accorded him without solicitation on his part, and he is so rarely good in comedy of human nature that he ought to give more time to the quality of his medium and less to directing its presentation. He will get more than one laugh in "Camping Out," but not near so many as he has received in farces more naturally funny.

"THE GREAT ROMANCE."

Metro Pictures Corporation Releases Charming Six-Act Screen Classic Subject.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

SOME new angles on what may be termed the American-International romance creep into view in this pretty story, which is pervaded from start to finish with artistic beauty. The scenes, both in this country and in the mythical land of Rugaria, are thoroughly delightful. But one of the best features is the new political turn taken by the usually effective and time-honored plot. In this case the hero has been sent to this country to be reared under democratic ideals, by a set of Rugarian revolutionists. When he returns and discovers, to his own astonishment and that of the people, that he is a prince and heir to the throne, he at once renounces the latter and says he will institute a democratic government. But he, of course, insists on keeping the American girl, and thereby hangs a pleasing romance.

Harold Lockwood appears as the hero, Rupert Danza, a student at Columbia when the story opens, and afterward Prince Danilo. The appearance of Mr. Lockwood, who died during the recent epidemic, again emphasizes the loss to the screen of a man of engaging personality. He performs in this with his usual ease and buoyancy, and is ably supported by Ruby de Remer, in the role of the heroine, Althea Hanway. Joseph Granby has the third role of importance, that of Prince Boris, who aspires to the throne of Rugaria and also loves the American girl.

The plot is at all times interesting in this subject and there are a number of dashing episodes. The hero in one instance plays Young Lochinvar and carries the girl away on horseback and in another instance fights a sword duel with a number of opponents.

The story was written by Finis Fox and directed by Henry Otto, and the exquisite photography is the work of Rudolph Bergquist. Others in the cast are Frank Currier, Helen Lindroth, Franklyn Hanna and Clare Grenville.

Publicity Points.

The director has succeeded in establishing a fine special atmosphere for Rugaria, wherever that may be. It is a thoroughly pleasing place and makes the observer want to go there. The American scenes include an unusually good long shot up Fifth avenue.

The sword duel on the stairs is a fine romantic feature and well staged; also the dash made by the hero when he carries the girl away from the would-be kidnappers.

The meetings of the Rugarian revolutionists is a variation from the usual melodramatic treatment, and the abdication of the prince at the moment of his inheritance to the throne is a good feature.

"THE DUB"

Paramount Presents Wallace Reid in a Lively Comedy-Melodrama.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

OPENING with an unusual scene, a quarrel among three old partners in what appears to be a general brokerage business, the story promises much in the way of originality, and, therefore, of relief from the commonplace. It is, in fact, not commonplace, and it will prove entertaining from the fact that there are no lapses of interest once the main line of action is under way, but there is a constant repetition of action and subtitle which could have been easily avoided to the vast improvement of the story. The three partners are admirably interpreted by those capable screen performers, Charles Ogle, Ralph Lewis and Raymond Hatton. In the midst of their disagreement, Ogle walks away with the firm's books, securities and an option on a mine handled under financial disadvantages by "The Dub," a young operator in quest of funds to meet his weekly payroll. One of the two remaining partners hopes to have that option expire, but, to keep up appearances, he sends a young man after it stupidly recommended by his attorney as a "Dub," who is none other than the owner (impersonated by Wallace Reid), the maker of the option, and anything but a dub, as subsequent events satisfactorily prove.

During a series of active adventures lasting through the night the "Dub" manages to accumulate all the books, securities and personal papers of the absconding partner and to meet a young lady just out of boarding school who is dimly aware that she has an "estate." The "Dub" incriminates the guilty partners, wins a fortune and gets the girl. It was to be hoped for the sake of originality that she would not be worth a million, but it was too easy to say. The faults of this story are those of the tyro, and many of them can yet be remedied. One of the partners keeps repeating a remark only mildly amusing in the first place, and the young lady constantly refers to "my estate." Of course this may well mean the property in general, but it is usually applied in this sense to the property left by the person spoken of at death. In spite of its faults, however, the play has sufficient genuine merit to get over with the average audience.

"OUT OF THE SHADOW."

Paramount Release Which Gives Pauline Frederick Opportunity for Some Exceptionally Fine Interpretation of Motive and Character.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

EVERY actress has to await her opportunity, and that of Pauline Frederick has not yet come, but there are indications of what she could accomplish in the remarkably fine interpretation of character she gives in the story of a woman falsely accused of murdering her husband. The falsely-accused story and that stale solution, the guilty man's confession, loses heavily in the matter of audience interest from being more or less of a foregone conclusion, but it is handled with more skill in this case, with enough constructive cleverness to shield the only element of suspense—"who's guilty?" It is interesting on this account, on account also of some exceptionally fine treatment as to picturesque exteriors and largely on account of Miss Frederick's fascinating presentation of a human being in the torture of crimination and social recrimination. The woman she depicts without pantomime or exaggeration of movement, simply by psychology, has her heart and mind almost laid bare to the audience.

The woman accused of murdering her husband is acquitted by the jury, but a newspaper has formed public opinion against her, and she is sent to a country place by a wealthy young man who has taken an interest in her case. She is followed by a reporter intent on making a "scoop" and the country house becomes the scene of strange discoveries, involving her young benefactor. He is arrested for the same murder, and the woman who has just felt the sting of injustice does him the injustice of believing him guilty. He is not saved by any effort of his own, but by the confession of a young musician who admired her and hated her husband. That this young man should confess to murder, not for her sake, but for the sake of a man she has come to love, is far from convincing. It feebly concludes a play whose suspense, admirable treatment and splendid acting have promised much. The fine qualities of the product will carry it over to strong audience interest.

"THE LIGHT"

Theda Bara Acts a Reformed Vampire in Fox Production of the Paris Underworld.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

FEVERISH is the word to apply to "The Light," a five-part Fox production of the underworld of Paris, written by Arthur Reed and Bert Page, and put into scenario form by Adrian Johnson and Charles Kenyon. Theda Bara is its shining star. Her role is that of "the wickedest woman in Paris." Passion unashamed is the dominant note of the story. Bianchette Dumonde has three lovers during the five reels, and the light that lies in her eyes is a false beacon until the meaning of the great war reaches her and she offers to do her part by becoming a nurse. Her reputation stands in her way and she goes back to the old life in a more reckless mood than ever. She throws over the wealthy protector who has lavished his money upon her and runs away with an Apache. Meeting a former lover, a returned soldier, now blind, her heart is filled with pity, and she goes to live with him that she may wait on him and help him to bear his burden.

The Apache finds the little cottage where the blind man and his companion are staying, and tries to kill his rival. Blanchette saves the soldier by killing the Apache. Chabin, her wealthy protector, arrives at this moment. When he learns what has happened and realizes the change that has come over Blanchette, he also sees the light, and gives her up to the blind man. To insure their happiness he goes to the police and reports that he killed the Apache, whom he caught in the act of stealing.

The points of the story are told dramatically, and the acting of the cast is in keeping with the subject. Those who are interested in the men and women of the underworld and believe in the reformation that takes place in "the wickedest in Paris" will enjoy the picture. Aside from the relation of the characters to one another, there is nothing in the picture to offend. Theda Bara makes Blanchette the accepted type of French kept-woman as she is drawn in popular melodrama, and wears many changes in extremely unconventional gowns. Eugene Ormonde as Chabin, Robert Walker as Desechette, George Renevant as Auchat, and Florence Martin as Jeanette, are excellent in their several roles. J. Gordon Edwards directed the picture.

Publicity Points.

In "The Light" the great war serves only as a background. It shows how the cause of liberty touched even the wickedest woman in Paris and made her anxious to do her part.

The underground cabarets of Paris and the manner in which they were conducted during the war is a feature of "The Light." As shown in the picture, a sharp watch was kept on the Apaches and male dancers that were formerly found in such places, to see that they were not attempting to escape military duty.

"WHO CARES?"

Ingenuous Heroine of Select Production Charmingly Played by Constance Talmadge.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

WHERE does he dig them up? Cosmo Hamilton, the English author, has found another of those remarkably ingenuous heroines of his that have the charm of unvarying vivacity and the innocence of a child of six. Joan Ludlow in "Who Cares?", a Select production, adapted from a stage play written by Hamilton, is a full sister to the long line of young persons created by the Englishman that put themselves into the most compromising positions with never a thought of wrong. Such a character needs careful handling, but Constance Talmadge quite convinces you that Joan Ludlow isn't too good to be true. Her role comes under the head of light comedy and, although "Who Cares?" is not equal to the rest of her pictures in neatness of construction and cleverly-sustained fun, it is always entertaining. Some of the situations are only just saved from real devilishness by the personality of little Miss Talmadge.

Joan is living with her grandparents, a grouchy old couple of the most unpleasant sort, when the story opens. She has a dull time of it until Martin Grey moves in next door. The two meet in secret and have a happy and harmless time until the grandparents discover what is going on. Joan receives such a scolding that she runs over to Martin's house that night and asks him to take her to her friend, Alice Palgrave, who lives in the city. When they arrive at the Palgrave home its mistress is absent. Martin can think of but one way out of the difficulty; he offers to marry Joan. She is pleased with the arrangement, and after the ceremony goes to live with Martin in his city home. Here Martin continues to respect her extreme innocence and she continues her maidenly existence.

The condition of affairs sends Martin to his club and leaves his wife free to carry on what she supposes is an innocent flirtation with Alice Palgrave's husband. Fate squares matters by throwing Miss Toodles of the chorus in Martin's way. There is a scene on board of Martin's yacht that shows the young husband knows how to resist temptation. Things get quite dramatic when Joan finds Miss Toodles is visiting her husband at his country home. The young wife turns to her friend's husband and flirts harder than ever. He repays her by getting her alone one night in a seashore cottage and threatening to kill her with a bullet from his revolver unless she consents to his unlawful desires. The man is suffering from brain fever, and Joan's life is in real danger. Martin rescues her just in time, and the two agree to go home and conduct themselves like sensible beings. The scene in the cottage is much too long.

Walter Edwards' direction of the picture is generally satisfactory, and the photography is skilfully handled by James C. Van Trees. Harrison Ford as Martin Grey, Donald MacDonald as Gilbert Palgrave, Beverly Randolph as Alice Palgrave, and Claire Anderson as Toodles are the leading members of a worthy support.

Publicity Points.

"Who Cares?" teaches the lesson that there is nothing more dangerous than innocence of a certain sort.

In the last scenes of the picture Constance Talmadge does some real dramatic acting when she finds herself, as Joan, facing a loaded revolver in the hands of a crazy man.

"HEART OF GOLD"

Five-Reel World Picture Features Louise Huff in Sparkling Comedy-Drama.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THIS five-reel subject, "Heart of Gold," was written by Lucy Sarver and directed by Travers Vale. It tells a bright, entertaining story of the comedy-drama type, and has the quality of suspense developed to a high degree. It is one of those pleasant and fascinating little yarns that send people home in the best of spirits.

The story itself is original and free from the obvious. Louise Huff and Johnny Hines do some good team work in the leading parts, and are assisted by a good cast. Miss Huff plays the role of Annie Wilkes, a country girl, who comes to the city and wins a prize for designing a war-time costume for the universal wear of women. The girl is inexperienced, and so is her lover, Mike, a role played humorously by Mr. Hines.

After winning the prize money for designing the costume the heroine is tricked out of the credit and out of the money also for the time being by her employor, Madame Estelle. Mike sets about to put matters right, and employs a shyster lawyer, who plays in with Madame Estelle. It is difficult to describe the suspense that is attained by this clever little plot, but the observer is kept on the anxious seat till the end of the story. The work of the director and of the adapter, Clara S. Beranger, has been well done.

Others in the cast are Grace Barton, Marion Barney, Robert Fischer, Anthony Merlo, William Williams, Peggy Vaughn and Louis Rheinhardt.

Publicity Points.

The settings include two fashionable shops for women's wear, and an interesting fashion revue takes place in one of them. These scenes are distinctive and help give genuine atmosphere.

The number illustrates well the fact that suspense does not always consist of having matters of life and death in the balance. The observers can be just as much interested by the course of less weighty matters when they are well presented.

Taking the Shell Off Dad

DOESN'T look as if he needed it, does he? But he did need it three minutes ago before the youngsters got him in tow. Sat there in his armchair with cigar and paper and guessed he just didn't want to see any pictures.

But that's all changed now. Dad has found out that a Paramount or Arteraft feature is mighty well worth the effort of getting there, with its foremost stars, superb directing and clean treatment.

Dad's was a bad case, too.

Stubborn!

But, arrived at the theatre, he was quick to see the tremendous difference between what he remembered of motion pictures—it's quite a while since he went—and the Paramount and Arteraft photo-plays of today.

"Somebody seems to have got the right idea," he admitted cheerfully half way through the performance, and the family soon let him know which somebody that was, and how Paramount and Arteraft had come mighty near taking all the guess-work out of motion pictures.

Go to it, children and wives young and staying young! Take the shells off all the Dads!

The wiser they are the more they will enjoy
—the foremost stars,
—the superb directing,
—the clean motion pictures
—of Paramount! of Arteraft!

MONAT CREATES BIG STIR WITH FOX ANNOUNCEMENT

Paris Trade Press Prints Advertisement Telling of Well-Known French Distributer Having Bought Central European Rights Hitherto Banned on Account of War

CARLOS SAYS CONTRACT IS MORE LIMITED

Deal Effected, However, Is One of Largest Yet Consummated, Involving Two Hundred and Fifteen Releases for Which Royalty of About $200,000 Is Paid—France, Switzerland, Belgium, Holland, Spain, Portugal, Italy, Egypt and the Balkans Are the Territories.

New York 39 II Anglo.
"From the 1st of January, 1919, I will be the General Agent of the Fox Film Corporation for Central Europe. (Signed) MONAT."

This significant cablegram appeared in recent issues of the French trade press, and some of the explanatory articles on the subject seemed to indicate that Mr. Monat's contract with the Fox company covered France and the countries within the territory between France and Russia.

As this was the first transaction of its kind to be announced in an allied nation since the signing of the armistice, the news created a great stir in New York export circles and the Fox Foreign Department was practically flooded with inquiries from all quarters.

Additional interest was created because, although a great deal of rumoring has been going on in New York during the past month about prospective contracts covering large territories on the other side of the Atlantic, no definite information had been obtained of any actual sales being made to Germany, Austria-Hungary or any other of the Central European states which were, and are still, technically, enemy countries.

For the purpose of securing a definite confirmation or denial of the story, one of the World's representatives took the matter up with Abraham Carlos, manager of the Fox interests abroad.

"Our contract with Mr. Joseph Monat does not include the erstwhile Central Empires or any other of the enemy countries," said Mr. Carlos. "The deal we have recently closed with the well known French distributor is doubtless one of the most important to take place during the past two years in the export market.

"The transaction represents a purchase of the exclusive distribution and exhibition rights on a certain number of pictures in several territories, and the activities of the Monat exchange with the Fox brand will extend throughout France, Switzerland, Holland, Belgium, Spain, Portugal, Italy, Egypt and the Balkans. The purchases made by Mr. Monat are as follows:

"10 Standard productions for France, Switzerland , Belgium, Holland, Spain, Portugal, Italy, Egypt and the Balkans.

"40 Special productions for France, Switzerland, Holland Belgium.

"20 Specials for Spain and Portugal.

"10 Specials for Italy.

"15 Specials for the Balkans and Egypt.

"40 Sunshine comedies for France, Switzerland, Holland and Belgium.

"20 Sunshine comedies for Spain and Portugal.

"20 Sunshine comedies for Egypt and the Balkans.

"40 Mutt & Jeff comedies for France, Switzerland and Belgium.

"In regard to the price paid for the exclusive rights on all these productions, I may state that the royalties alone amount to over one million francs.

SHAUER SEES BIG THINGS AHEAD

Manager of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation's Foreign Department Knows No Reason Why American-Made Film's Popularity Should Wane or Their Business Lead Diminish—Going Abroad Soon.

The American film industry, unfettered by the heavy hand of war, can look forward to the year 1919 as a period of great development and prosperity in the film export business, in the opinion of E. E. Shauer, assistant treasurer and manager of the foreign department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. The coming of permanent peace will not only reopen fields which have been more or less closed to American films, but will permit the firm introduction of our pictures in countries hitherto scarcely touched, Mr. Shauer believes.

In anticipation of greatly improved conditions in the foreign market, Mr. Shauer is sailing for London shortly, where he will spend several weeks studying the opportunities for Paramount and Artcraft pictures in Great Britain. It has been some time since an official of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has visited England, and Mr. Shauer expects to devote considerable time to outlining a program for the expansion of the export business of his firm.

"Considering the great difficulties under which the American film industry has labored during the last four years, the year just closed has shown an important gain in the exportation of Paramount and Artcraft pictures," said Mr. Shauer in discussing export conditions on the eve of his departure for London. "The reports received from our foreign branches have been most satisfactory, and there is every reason to believe that the successes of 1918 will be greatly increased in 1919.

"The signing of the treaty of peace, which will do much to stabilize the commercial interests of the world, will undoubtedly bring about a vast expansion in the exportation of American films. The name of America, and the business ideals it represents, are far better known than before the war, and there is no reason why the United States should not retain world leadership in the film business. American films are more popular than ever, due to their large distribution during the period of the war. And wherever introduced their universal appeal has created a demand which will bring about a tremendous expansion in the export business. The establishment of stable trade conditions will open fields which have been closed to American film interests.

"The Scandinavian market has been exceptionally good during the last year and will continue to show big gains in 1919. Careful and systematic trade relations with Europe can now be undertaken on a greater scale than ever.

"Personally, I look for greatly increased demand for American films in Great Britain, Canada, Australasia, France, Italy, Belgium and other Allied nations. The ties that have bound the Allies so closely together throughout the war will surely inspire closer and better commercial intercourse during the coming years which will be of great benefit to the industry.

"Another field which has shown gratifying improvement during the last year as far as Paramount and Artcraft pictures are concerned has been Central and South America. Brazil, Argentina, Chile and other South American countries are showing a greatly increased interest in our films, and there is every reason to believe that the restoration of peace will serve to improve market conditions in South America. The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has organized a new distributing concern—the South Pacific Paramount Company—with headquarters at Valparaiso, Chile, which has charge of the distribution of Paramount and Artcraft pictures in Chile, Peru and Bolivia. Hon. Eduardo Suarez, for five years Chilean ambassador at Washington, and a man of wide experience in the commercial life of South America, is president of this new company, which already is actively engaged in exploiting the South Pacific field.

"Reports from Famous Players-Lasky representatives in Argentina and Brazil indicate unusually bright prospects for increased business in 1919. Mexico also is a field which promises considerable development this year, and we are making arrangements to extend our interests in that country as rapidly as possible. Cuba has shown a great fondness for American films and should continue to improve as a factor in the export trade. Its close proximity to the United States makes it a preferred market.

"That our pictures encircle the globe is indicated by reports from Japan which tell of the wonderful growth in the demand for American-made films. The business of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has shown a most important growth in the Far East.

"For these reasons, and many others, I anticipate that the year 1919 will be a banner period for American films in all corners of the world."

GOLDWYN DEPARTMENT ENLARGED

Well-Known Producing and Distributing Company Will Market Other Pictures Besides Its Own in Foreign Fields—Bigger Responsibilities for Arthur Ziehm.

The Goldwyn Distributing Corporation has officially launched a new department entirely devoted to foreign sales. Its scope will be unlimited, covering all branches of the industry in their relation to export trade. It will ship films to all parts of the world, on its own account or acting as New York agent for buyers in foreign countries.

The Goldwyn Foreign Sales Department begins its campaign with an output remarkable for its quality and quantity. It controls the distribution throughout the world of all Goldwyn productions, all the pictures released in the United States and Canada through the William L. Sherry Service, the Capitol comedies, the six new Louis Bennison features and Ira Lowry's "Freedom of the East."

Arthur Ziehm, who has been directing the export activities of the Goldwyn Company during the past year, heads the new organization. Mr. Ziehm is a veteran of the moving picture and theatrical business, and in New York export circles enjoys a high reputation as a man of integrity and one of its most successful operators in foreign markets. With a perfect command of half a dozen languages, and that accurate knowledge of countries and peoples that can only be acquired by travel and personal business contact, Mr. Ziehm is the ideal man to take charge of an enterprise of this nature.

"The plans of Goldwyn's Foreign Sales Department," said Mr. Ziehm when interviewed by a representative of the Moving Picture World, "although very vast, have been worked out in detail during the past few months. We will not restrict ourselves to the handling of one or two brands of pictures, and aim to offer the buyers the best that can be obtained in the United States. The new department of the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, and its exporting facilities are at the disposal of the buyers abroad and the manufacturers at home; it is in the field to market in foreign countries any American picture or brand of pictures possessing merit, on its own account, or it will act in the United States as buying agent for any foreign concern of standing."

Additional space has been taken in the building at present occupied by the Goldwyn Distribution Corporation, at 509 Fifth avenue, where the offices of the new organization will be located.

SOCIEDAD GENERAL RENEWS CONTRACT

The Sociedad General Cinematografica of Buenos Aires has purchased "The Greatest Love," a new Griffith production, for Argentina and Uruguay. The "Sociedad" has also renewed its contracts with the Paramount and Artcraft companies and will handle the output of both brands in 1919, on an exclusive basis, in Spain as well as in Argentina, Uruguay and Paraguay.

New Swiss Organization.

A new distributing organization has just been organized in Geneva, Switzerland, under the name of Compagnie Generale du Cinematographe (General Moving Picture Company), with a capital of 500,000 francs. It is said that this concern will work in close harmony with the local representative of the Entente Governments.

HOUDINI PICTURES SELL FAST ABROAD

Big Serial Placed Throughout World Before Initial Release Date in Domestic Market

Name of Widely Known Escape Artist Proves Big Magnet—Export & Import Film Co., Inc., Elated Over Prospects for Two More.

With the Houdini serial just being released in theatres in the United States, the rights to exhibit the serial in foreign countries have practically all been disposed of. The deals involving the foreign rights were handled in a record-breaking manner by the Export & Import Film Co., Inc.

Ben Blumenthal, head of the Export & Import Company, let it be explained, sat in with the powers that be in the B. A. Rolfe company before the production of the serial was begun. It was largely because of the faith which Mr. Blumenthal had in the foreign draft of the well known escape artist's name that the project was launched; the Rolfe people were sure of their American market and when Mr. Blumenthal satisfied them that the serial ought to be a record seller in the foreign market all doubt as to the advisability of going ahead along the lines that had been laid out—lines that called for lavish production and consequent heavy expense—was swept away.

To date the serial has been sold for Great Britain, Scandinavia, France, Switzerland, Spain, Cuba, Porto Rico, Argentina, Australasia, the Far East, Japan, and the Philippine Islands. Important open territory remaining is Italy, Holland, Belgium and Russia. The enemy countries, including Germany, Austria, Turkey and the Balkans, have, of course, not been dealt with.

The success which has attended their efforts with the Houdini serial makes the Export & Import people look forward with pleasurable anticipation to the near future when they will have in their hands for foreign sale two more big serials which bid fair to be fully as strong from the box office point of view as the Houdini one.

KENT STARTS ON CENTRAL AND SOUTH AMERICAN TRIP

For the purpose of coming in closer contract with the buyers in Central and South America, Arch G. Kent recently left on a trip covering all of this territory in the interest of his own company, the Central America Film Company, and David P. Howells, Inc.

When seen by one of our representatives, Mr. Kent stated: "It has been Mr. Howells' desire for some time to open up a Latin department in connection with his business so that buyers from these countries can be taken care of to the best advantage. There is still a large field open for the distribution of high-class productions, and I will have to offer on this trip in many of the countries comprised in this territory all of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit productions, the United Picture Theatre of America pictures, the new photoplays of Mary Pickford and Anita Stewart, besides the Chaplin comedies and other pictures of merit.

"My object in making this trip is to become personally acquainted with all of the buyers and do my best to establish lasting relations with responsible concerns."

Mr. Kent has lived for about ten years in Latin countries and is well qualified to handle this business. His knowledge of the conditions and the requirements will aid him materially, as well as his command of the Spanish language and his years of experience in the film business.

Export Regulations Handicap Film Trade

The British exporters and producers have been able to ship film abroad without the necessity of obtaining licenses for over a month.

A Cuban distributor purchased a copy of "The Mysteries of New York," an American-made film, from the Paris office of Pathe and the shipment was delivered in Havana fifteen days after the order reached France.

The Italian manufacturers are sending agents, well supplied with prints of their newest productions, to those markets of the world where American pictures stand supreme at this time.

While this is going on, even propaganda films released five or six months ago that were intended to shape public opinion in neutral countries are safely stored in the New York Custom House.

Dissatisfaction Abroad.

Dissatisfaction among foreign importers is becoming general. Of this we had tangible proof in the wholesale cancellation of foreign orders that shook our mercantile circles the moment the armistice was signed. As soon as there was a chance of dealing elsewhere, our wartime customers left us, in circus parlance, "flat on the lot." They are sore at our export regulations and very, very sore at our peculiar methods of cultivating foreign trade during the war.

The film business has not yet been affected, but the methods referred to should be radically changed before we are compelled to do so by circumstances. And as far as the export of moving pictures is concerned, there is no reason today why its natural development should still be hampered by the War Trade Board, the License Bureau, the Committee on Public Information, and the official and semi-official American Film delegates operating in neutral countries.

No sensible argument can be advanced for the present interference of these wartime agencies in the film export business and many sound reasons could be given for their elimination.

A Typical Example.

Let us take the case of Mexico. Before this country entered the war, Mexico was a sore in the film business. Then we struck the happy idea of attempting to regulate that market, and since then our loving neighboring republic has become a raging epidemic threatening to ruin for us all the nearby territories. There is an official American delegate in Mexico City to whom all American moving pictures are consigned and who is supposed to deliver them only to proper parties, and there is another delegate in Cuba, for instance, entrusted with the same mission. Very well. Has the pirating, duping and other friendly practices stopped? Nothing of the kind. The business of smuggling films across the border goes on as briskly as ever, and distributors in Cuba, Central America, Colombia and Venezuela, instead of placing their orders direct in the United States where they obtain no protection whatever, prefer, and very naturally so, to buy our films at cheaper prices from Mexico.

We can hear some American producers—the exporters know better—saying: "Why those Mexican distributors engaged in this business are nothing else but thieves!

So they are, and the same thing applies to the Americans thriving on this trade from our side of the border, as well as to those securing the pictures in New York and other American centers simply because the manufacturers are not able to control their output.

Exporters Should Act.

Our film business abroad, if it is to be conducted on a profitable basis, rests on the absolute protection of picture rights abroad. We have discarded the European method of trading by the metre or foot; we sell, as a rule, royalties and supply the prints at cost. Most of the manufacturers lack vision or are indifferent, and no help can be expected from the Government. In fact, if the Government keeps on regulating and "encouraging" foreign trade, the business of buying films in this country will become a perfect nuisance; it is already so complicated that the wonder is how the buyers have not been driven in despair to other markets. A determined stand, therefore, will have to be taken by the exporters. They know what is needed and can obtain, if they want to, sufficient guarantees from the producers that will enable them to offer full protection to foreign buyers.

The republics of America do not know each other. In Chile or Brazil, for example, French, British, German and Italian problems are subjects of daily discussion, while the doings and happenings in the United States, Cuba, Colombia and other neighboring nations pass almost unnoticed. The last four years have proven that Europe needs America more than America needs Europe. They have also demonstrated, to everybody's satisfaction we believe, that trade between the different republics of North, Central and South America is safer than with Europe—at least the risk of landing into the middle of a murderous war is not so imminent. Our great merchant marine in course of construction will have to be used somewhere, and Latin America offers one of the only two logical and practicable routes for the present. The other one leads to the Orient. Our trade with Europe is and will be, as far as we can see, made up mostly of raw materials, while the great bulk of our exports to Latin America are manufactured goods. For these and many other reasons that have been pointed out times without number, it is imperative that the countries of all the Americas should know and keep in close touch with one another.

There is no better vehicle than the screen to educate, express ideas, define aspirations, advertise wares, eliminate the latent antagonism felt even in the most advanced countries, and particularly in these hemispheres, against everything "foreign." Private enterprise, for commercial reasons, will take care that American films go to Latin America in the largest possible quantity, and will import into the United States any picture capable of successful exploitation. But this is not enough. In our opinion, the Pan-American Bureau and other Washington official bodies would only be fulfilling a belated duty by organizing, as soon as possible, an interchange of educational films between our schools and colleges and those of Latin America.

We said in these columns four or five months ago:

"It is the opinion of quite a few well-informed people that the non-producing brokers as such will cease to exist in New York and other moving picture centers on the present large scale one or two years after the resumption of normal conditions. Their independent organizations of to-day will either be swallowed by the producers, or the brokers themselves, if strong enough financially, and will have to decide on any one of the following courses: turn producers, associate with or absorb the producing companies the output of which they are handling; start their own renting organization in the markets they are covering, associate with or absorb the clients they are at present supplying with films."

Inter-Ocean and Robertson-Cole have already started the ball rolling.

The producer who falls into a trance at the mere mention of export, and there are still a few left, will wake up some morning to find his organization, which he could not make pay, in the hands of an aggressive exporting firm or a more far-sighted colleague.

The month's optimistic thought:

The motion picture business IS a conservative business, conservatively conducted.—"Old Exhibitor" in the Christmas issue of the New York Dramatic Mirror.

The consensus of opinion in export circles seems to indicate that the South Americans have been overbuying in New York during the past three months. Argentinian distributors interviewed by representatives of Cine Mundial state that by April next, the beginning of the theatrical season in South America, there will be an unprecedented quantity of film in Buenos Aires and other renting centers. "It will be fine for the exhibitors," said one of them, "but some of the exchanges will find it hard to weather the storm."

PRODUCTION BOOMING IN AUSTRALIA

Claude Flemming Shows Another Five-Reel Subject and Will Immediately Make Multiple-Reel Comedy Feature—Shipping Conditions Cause Temporary Shortage of Film.

Sydney, N. S. W., November 14, 1918.

Claude Flemming, whose recent production, "The Lure of the Bush," has been favorably commented upon throughout Australia, gave a private screening of his second feature recently. This is a five-reel subject entitled "£500 Reward," and it is one of the first locally made pictures to depend solely for its success on the strength of plot. The story is an original one, written by Flemming, himself, and the action takes place in the United States, Canada and Australia. Naturally this calls for many varied locations, and the producer has done very well in this direction. The featured player is Renee Adoree, who is at present touring Australia in vaudeville with a dancing act, and she appears to good advantage in a congenial role. Flemming scores a triple success in this picture, as he is not only the producer and writer, but in addition has found time to enact the leading male part.

On the release of "£500 Reward," Flemming will start the production of a multiple-reel comedy feature starring the well known stage comedian Barry Lupino. During the past two years Mr. Lupino has achieved many successes throughout Australia and New Zealand in various spoken plays, notably, "Very Good Eddie" and "The White Chrysanthemum," in the double role of actor-producer. His film debut will be eagerly awaited by showmen and the public alike.

Owing to the restrictions in film exports from America there is a temporary shortage of features just at present, with the result that many older films have been revived. Although some of these were released here over two years ago they appear to be good box office attractions even in their old age.

As was stated last month, the Customs Department has restricted imports of posters and "stills," and supplies are very short. It is quite a common occurrence to see old posters pasted over with new titles, while many suburban theatres are without poster displays at all.

The Sydney Kookooburra Theatre, adhering to its policy of releasing only Australian-made films, has as its current attraction a four-part comedy entitled "The Laugh on Dad," produced by the Austral Photoplay Company. The production is amateurish, and, as there is only one professional in the cast, little can be said in praise of the acting.

J. C. Williamson, Ltd., announces that the premiere of D. W. Griffith's "Hearts of the World" will take place at the Sydney Theatre Royal on November 16.

The second reading of the Entertainments Tax Bill in the House of Representatives caused much discussion. One member said the tax was nothing but a levy on children, who have the most right to amusement. An amendment has been passed granting immunity from tax to children's matinees held on Saturday afternoons.

The Victorian Chief Secretary intends to introduce a bill into Parliament this session to restrict the use of picture theatres by children of tender years, unaccompanied by a guardian, and to prevent mothers taking children in arms. He is not yet determined whether he will suggest anything as high as fifteen years, which was the law in Berlin before the war. He also proposes to fix license fees for picture theatres.

The attention of the Chief Secretary was drawn recently to the character of a film being screened in Sydney, which depicted the "third degree" methods in the administration of justice, and contained other alleged objectionable features. He directed the State Censor Board to view the film, which they did, and made a recommendation that the further screening of the film in New South Wales be prohibited. Action has been taken accordingly.

The headquarters of the Federal Censor Board will be removed this month from Melbourne to Sydney. This move has been under consideration for a long period, as fully 85 per cent. of imported films are landed in Sydney, and much time has been lost in sending films to the southern capital for inspection.

A new rule under the War Precautions Act, affecting film exhibitors and importers, was brought into force recently. Under this law no advertising posters or "still" photographs can be exhibited in or around theatres unless a copy of each is lodged with the Censor Board and passed by them.

Except under special license from the Collector of Customs no posters or photographs are permitted to be imported into this country.

Dragging the Ball and Chain in England

B. Nichols, at present controlling the Moving Picture Sales Agency, Ltd., London, is one of the most widely known international film operators. In the early days of the film industry in this country, it will be recalled, Mr. Nichols controlled the foreign rights for some of the leading brands of American made pictures, marketing them in the United Kingdom and throughout the world from London.

The British Producers Viewpoint.

The following extracts from a letter by Mr. Nichols, written to a personal friend on the staff of the Moving Picture World, are of interest:

"At present my whole time and efforts are devoted to selling independent films in this market; that is, films that are sold in the United States under the state rights principle.

"From my point of view this is going to be one of the most important branches of the business, as the exhibitor in this country—and I believe also in the United States—is getting tired of the program exchanges. It looks to me as if the future will be a tie-up something as follows: The leading artist, with a competent producer and a financial backer, turning out perhaps four to six subjects a year and selling them on their merits—state rights within the States and territorial rights abroad.

"Among the films which I have recently placed in this market are the following: 'The Melting Pot,' 'A Daughter of Uncle Sam,' 'One Law for Both,' 'Babbling Tongues,' 'A Modern Lorelei' and Gerard's 'My Four Years in Germany.'

"B. NICHOLS."

The sentiment which Mr. Nichols expresses concerning the future of independent pictures in the United Kingdom, and possibly in the United States, is reflected to some extent by the cartoon which is herewith reproduced from the October 3 issue of the Kinematograph and Lantern Weekly, leading moving picture trade paper in the English market.

"Block bookings," as represented by the ball and chain retarding the progress of the exhibitor up the steep hill to his goal of success, are the "program bookings" and "star series bookings" of the American market concerning which there are constant bickerings between exhibitors and producers in the American industry. The "block bookings" in the United Kingdom, however, are engineered by the exchanges, not the producers, for the reason that a comparative paucity of production by English manufacturers has made it inadvisable for them to control their own channels of distribution or exchanges as do manufacturers in the United States.

FROM OSHKOSH TO URUGUAY.

"It's a long way to"—Oshkosh from Uruguay, and we are again reminded of the story of the man who made the better mouse-trap and had the whole world beating a path to his door.

The present incident concerns Electric Generating Outfits instead of mousetraps, but it illustrates the truth of the saying.

The Universal Motor Company of Oshkosh, Wis., is a long enough way from Uruguay, but the fame of its generating sets spanned the distance and the other came. The first shipment this company has made direct to that part of South America consisted of three sets—4 k.w.

The Universal Motor Co. has already secured representation in the city of Montevideo with Enrique Abals Co. The need for generating outfits in the remote districts and even in many of their larger towns makes it safe to say that increasing attention will be paid to the products of American manufacturers of generator sets.

QUEER CUSTOMERS ARE BUYING ONCE MORE

The censorship of films was officially abolished on the 9th of the month, and the air is already full of rumors pertaining to the future and "more aggressive" activities of the film dupers and pirates operating from this market. Among the translators and title printers in town facetious remarks are passed and jokes are made on the queer customers that are again going the rounds in search of Spanish, French and Portuguese adaptations.

What are the exporters going to do about it?

STARS SUPREME

MARY PICKFORD

This most widely known of motion picture stars is a favorite wherever the screen is used as a means of entertainment. The new series of pictures Miss Pickford is making under a special contract with the First National Exhibitors' Association are being sold in foreign markets exclusively by David P. Howells. There will be three of these super-productions during 1919; the first, a screen version of "Daddy Longlegs," directed by Marshal Neilan, will be ready soon.

The New ANITA STEWART Series

"Virtuous Wives," the first of six special productions in which Miss Stewart will appear during 1919 under the management of Louis B. Mayer, drew record-breaking business at the Strand Theatre, New York, recently. The remaining five will have equal draft. Some of the most discriminating foreign buyers have already closed contracts for the entire series through the David P. Howells office.

AMERICAN ACCESSORIES POPULAR

Inter-Ocean Film Corporation Has Built Big Business on Initial Orders for Carbons, etc., Which Were Filled Merely as Accommodation to Film Customers.

By Eugene H. Kaufman.

INTER-OCEAN'S work of exporting motion picture accessories really came into being through and by the Speer carbon. We really started as film exporters, exclusively. One day an important foreign buyer, cabling an order for film, added a request for carbons. We went out and bought Speer, and they went off in the film shipment. Hardly two weeks after attending to this order another foreign cable appended a request for carbons. Again we obliged the customer. You will understand that there was no particular profit in the carbon transactions—we looked on them as "courtesy sales"; that is, made purely to accomodate a buyer of our other lines.

But the second carbon request set us to thinking. It would pay to have the export rights on the Speer, as long as we were likely to have to supply it anyway. We procured the right, and from the act of supplying carbons to that of creating a demand for them was but a short step. The time came just then when we had placed the majority of our chief film lines, and that left the writer, who is also office manager of the firm, clear to concentrate on a carbon sales campaign. I once before, in the World, told of the results of that campaign. It practically eliminated German-made carbons as a factor in the foreign accessories market.

As this is the International English section of the World, it might be appropriate to add that the first strong response to our Speer call for business came from Australia, an English-speaking country.

Well, the establishing of Speer on the foreign market meant the establishing of an accessories department that was to stay. The "Fulco" line of accessories was added just after we moved into our own building on West Forty-second street. We wanted to be in the new building, with its wealth of space, to properly handle accessories on a large scale, as called for by a line like Mr. Fulton's.

There are more than three hundred articles in this line alone. Says Mr. Fulton in a recent letter to the writer: "The Fulco business is not only an old established and well-rated firm, but its policy has always been to deliver one hundred per cent. value and service." That policy the Inter-Ocean, as Mr. Fulton's exporters, are seeking to extend to the whole world market.

Mr. Fulton is the only American devoting a factory to the manufacture of so many motion picture specialities. He has been at it for twelve years. He has his three sons with him, and they have grown up in this specialty-making business. The brains of the four men are the guarantee of every accessory we offer the buyer in Brazil, in Sweden, or the Malay Islands.

The Fulco Factory Devoted to Manufacture of Moving Picture Specialties.

"WOMAN AND THE LAW" HELD UP IN CHILE

The purchase of "The Woman and the Law" from the Fox Company by Pairoa & Herrera has turned out one of the mystery deals transacted during the war. It will be remembered that the picture is closely woven around the notorious De Saulles' case, the heroine of which was a well known Chilean heiress. Pairoa & Herrera paid, for this reason, a record price for the Chilean rights.

The film was passed by all the war-time censors about four months ago and shipped, following the usual procedure in force at that time, to the U. S. Legation at Santiago.

And there it has been laying for the past three months.

Mr. Herrera, one of the partners of the Chilean firm owning the rights, has spent nearly $500 and quite a lot of sole-leather going from the Committee on Public Information to the War Trade Board office, and vice versa, but the American Ambassador in Chile, for reasons unknown in New York, refuses to release the picture, although it has already been shown in Argentine and other neighboring countries.

ARGENTINIAN SOCIALISTS TO CENSOR PICTURES

All the candidates for aldermen nominated by the Socialist Party in Buenos Aires were elected by substantial majorities. As the Argentine radical groups hold decided views on moving picture questions, the local exhibitors and renters are showing a very panicky feeling. In an article signed by "Comrade" Deodat, one of the elected members, published in the official organ of the party, the cinematographic platform of the Socialists is pretty clearly outlined as to its aims and purposes. The article is too long for full reproduction, but we will quote in extract some of the most salient points:

"The screen has conquered the hearts and the minds of the people of the world . . .

"Sex and crime . . . nullifying the efforts of the men of vision who are trying to uplift the masses.

". . . with the preconceived object in view of inflaming the lowest passions . . . the revolver as the supreme symbol of right and justice . . .

"In North America, which is sending us those malignant detective melodramas . . .

"Are we to stand still while the minds of our youth are being influenced by the 'stunts' of Helen Holmes . . ."

Then the writer goes on to mention the restrictions imposed on moving picture shows in European countries and different cities of the United States, and we presume that the upshot will be, unless the trade is able to prevent it by concerted action, the enactment of some picture censorship law.

CONSULAR REPORT CREATES DISCUSSION IN ARGENTINA

H. Dawson, the American consul at Rosario, Argentina, seems to be a very peculiar man. One of the Buenos Aires trade papers comments as follows on some of his reports on moving picture conditions recently published by the Department of Commerce and Labor:

"He has recently discovered that American films are not liked by the Argentinians; that French and Italian films are always enthusiastically received by the public; that the local moving pictures houses can only keep their doors opened by selling intoxicating liquors; that a film in which a Protestant minister appears cannot be shown owing to the intense Roman Catholic sentiment of the public, and so on and so forth.

"There must be something wrong with Mr. Dawson's powers of observation."

We will not quote the rest of the article. Although the Consul has been woefully misinformed, the way in which he is handled by the Argentinian contemporary is a little bit too rough for publication in New York.

MAI CLOSES SEVERAL IMPORTANT CONTRACTS

Ernesto Mai, manager of Saenz & Mai, a comparatively new Buenos Aires distributing house, returned to South America two weeks ago after a short stay in New York. Before leaving he purchased the exclusive rights on all the Goldwyn pictures, Capitol comedies, Bennison productions, and all the pictures distributed in this country under the Sherry plan for Argentina, Uruguay and Paraguay. Mr. Mai also bought "Intolerance" for all of Latin America and the following for Argentina and Uruguay: "Woman," "Sporting Life," "A Daughter of the Gods" and "My Four Years in Germany." All these deals were closed through Arthur Ziehm, manager of Goldwyn's export department.

CALCUTTA AUTHORITIES LIBERAL

Enforcing Regulations to Compel Proper Ventilation of Picture Theatres —Health Officer Refuses to Close Them—Indian Cinema Conditions Told in Notes.

In spite of the fact that influenza rages in Calcutta, Bombay, Madras, Rangoon, and elsewhere in India, the picture houses there do not show any lack of patronage. The Calcutta municipal authorities will not close the local bioscope theatres and other places of amusement as the epidemic is not so bad here. The chairman of the Rangoon Municipality, when interviewed about the closing of cinemas there, replied that he had no power and did not think it necessary. Under the municipal regulations, ill-ventilated places of amusement have almost disappeared, and I think, therefore, the authorities are justified in refusing to close bioscope theatres. The Picture House, which is the best ventilated place of amusement in Calcutta, is daily cleaned down with a solution of hypol. the disinfectant recommended by the health officer. The epidemic is expected to die down within a month or so, but it is meet that the example of the Picture House people should be imitated everywhere.

The Bengal publicity boards have started propaganda work by means of the cinema and lectures. Reports received from different parts of the Province show that they are attracting large audiences everywhere. Mr. Madan, of the Elphinstone Bioscope, has supplied the necessary outfit. The pictures selected are the best and most interesting of the war topicals. A motor party will visit the places round and about Calcutta in December and January. The shows are, of course, free, and held on the open maidans. Mr. Ducasse, of the Picture House, has undertaken a similar contract for the Central Provinces, the towns and villages of which will be covered by a cinema fixed on a motor lorry.

At the Picture House, Calcutta, Rex Beach's "Auction Block" was recently screened. I have nothing to say against the play itself, but I do object to "Americanism" in the text. American producers should remember that their films will be seen by non-American audiences who do not understand American "slang," and naturally grumble. Why give them occasion to complain? The big serial, "Jimmie Dale," which is now being screened at the Calcutta Ripon, is another "offending" film. I hope American film manufacturers will give due consideration to this grievance of their patrons and take early steps to remove it.

"The Daughter of the Gods," which was screened to record houses at the Picture House of Calcutta, lately, roused the indignation of certain influential Calcuttaites, who made representations to the Commissioner of Police regarding its "indecency." The Commissioner ordered the withdrawal of this film and further directed the other cinema theatre owners not to screen it at all. The same film has been screened at the Cinema Precious and the West End Theatre, of Bombay. Certain newspaper correspondents have suggested that powers should be given to local authorities to report to the police authorities everywhere that such and such films have been put on the prohibited list, on grounds of public morality, and their exhibition should not be allowed there. Calcutta, I should say, has a large number of moralists who are sure to make exhibition of films of "A Daughter of the Gods" type difficult in future. Film dealers please note.

At the Bijou (Calcutta) we have seen the following: "The Car of Chance," "The Promise," "Revelation," "The Innocence of Mrs. Gordon," "The Great Impostor," "The Lure of Heart's Desire," "Broken Threads" and "Treason." These films drew crowded houses.

The management of the Elphinstone Picture Palace has screened: "The Spiral of Death," "The Price She Paid," "Vagabond," "Periwinkle," "Manxman" and "The Closing Net." In regard to this last film, it is interesting to note that this is the first occasion in the history of the stage in India that Miss Kathryn Browne-Decker, a prominent dramatic actress, has appeared on an Indian stage and screen on the same day.

At the Empire (Calcutta) we shall shortly have an opportunity of seeing the sensational film, "Winning a Continent."

At the Ripon (Calcutta), we have seen "Marie Tudor," "The Prey," "Notre Dame of Paris," and certain other films of no importance. The serial, "Jimmie Dale," is now being screened. It was, however, screened by the Presidency Theatre management some months ago. For once, Madan is late.

"The Fatal Ring" is now being screened at the Albion to huge crowds.

At the Cornwallis we have seen "Julius Caesar," "The Dumb Girl of Portici," "The Cigarette Girl" and "Srikrishna Janma." This last film is one of Phalke's productions and drew crowds for about a fortnight. Though it has many defects, it is certainly better than certain other Phalke films which I have seen in Calcutta and elsewhere.

"The Perils of Pauline" will be screened at this theatre shortly. It was, however, screened by Madan at one of his theatres some time ago. But there is no harm in repeating—public memory is proverbially short.

The Theatre Royal people have screened "Siegfried," "Vicar of Wakefield," "Mater Dolorosa" and several excellent American one-reelers.

At the Kidderport cinema, "A Daughter of Herodias," "Oath of Protia," "The Cigarette Girl" and "Fantomas" have been screened to large crowds.

Mr. Ducasse has screened the following at his Picture House: "The Circus of Life," "Max in a Taxi," "The Woman in White," "The Girl in the Chequered Coat," "An Enemy to the King," "Auction Block," "The Lad and the Lion" and "Under Two Flags." He has also shown us two series of "Kinekature Komics"—an attraction entirely new to India.

At the Bioscope Theatre, "The Black Chancellor," "The Lure of the Yukon" and several Indian films have been shown. Better films are available. Why do not its management take a leaf out of the book of Madan or Ducasse?

At the Empire (Bombay), we have seen "The Clown," "Doctor Against His Will," "Loaded Dice," "The Culpable" and "The Adventures of Stingaree."

At the Cinema Precious, "Man and Beast," "A Daughter of the Gods," "She" and several excellent American comics have been screened.

The management of the New Amexandra has shown "The Footprints in the Snow," "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin," "Hidden Valley" and several excellent comics to crowded houses.

HOWELLS VISITS COAST ON IMPORTANT BUSINESS.

David P. Howells, who recently closed one of the most important contracts dealing with the foreign rights to American made motion pictures when he secured the new Mary Pickford super-productions for exploitation throughout the world, exclusive of the United States and Canada, is expected back in New York about January 18 after a visit to the Pacific Coast in the interests of his business. Besides the Mary Pickford pictures which are being made by arrangement with the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, Mr. Howells also controls the foreign rights on all other First National releases excepting the Chaplins and his trip to the Coast was made in company with the directors of the First National, who went west to transact a number of important business matters having to do with their production plans.

Just equal world-sale facilities for everybody's pictures at three important points.

Inter-Ocean serves buyer and producer best because it has no American producing interests, no pet films of its own that it must push first.

This secures the foreign buyer because it enables us to coldly appraise ALL American productions at their WORTH TO HIM.

It secures the American producer because it gives the exporter no rival producers' pictures that the latter is bound to favor.

American exporters who are linked to producing interests offer to "act as foreign buyers' confidential agent" but here you find the old story of theory that fails to work in practice. It is not humanly possible for the exporter-with-producing-interests to bring that degree of impartiality to the business of confidential agent for foreign buyers which INTER-OCEAN, WHOSE BUSINESS IS SOLELY EXPORTING, can and does.

Inter-Ocean has been the foreign buyer's guide four years now.

The reason for it is, results. There is safety in sticking to experienced, tested American buying agents—who have no American producing interests.

"THE GAME'S UP"

Five-Reel Bluebird Subject Features Ruth Clifford in Good Light Comedy.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

A HAPPY combination of plot and humor make this a pleasing light comedy number. The story, which was written by Gladys E. Johnson and directed by Elsie Jane Wilson, has been very deftly woven into picture form, and it is seldom that offerings of this kind flow along so smoothly. The acting of a nicely balanced cast headed by Ruth Clifford and Al Ray is also largely responsible for the success achieved. The humor is of the quiet but effective kind, and there is a gradual rise in the interest as the number proceeds.

Miss Clifford has the role of Ruth Elliott, a struggling young arist in a Western city, who receives a letter from a girl friend to the effect that she is coming on a visit. Ruth has a touch of the false pride that frequently assails strugglers in the artistic vineyard, and has given her friend to understand that she is a "whale" of a success. When her friend arrives she feels that she must make good, and appeals in the emergency to a friendly young chauffeur whose car she has rented for an afternoon. The chauffeur, as the observer already know, since the story starts with him, is a masquerading young man with a rich uncle who is running a little bluff of his own at earning a living. The complications which arise from this general situation are naturally and humorously handled, with a double love affair at the close. The court scenes have some technical slips, but will pass.

Others in the cast are Mildred Lee, Harry Holden, Margaret Cullington, Clifford Gray and John Hay Cossar. The adaptation was made by Katherine Carr.

Publicity Points.

The number has some very pleasing exterior and interior settings, which harmonize well with a light plot of the kind. Country roads and golf links, with a few park and restaurant scenes thrown in, give the production an agreeable atmosphere throughout.

The character work is properly toned in this to suit the purposes of comedy, and is a pleasing change from the farcical methods so frequently used.

"WHY GERMANY MUST PAY"

Five-Reel Metro Screen Classic Production Deals with Germany's Brutality.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THIS five-reel subject, "Why Germany Must Pay," draws a heavy indictment against the outlaw nation which precipitated the bloody war. It is a production that would have been much more effective in the early days of our participation in the world crisis, as it again pictures the deeds of cruelty and inhumanity perpetrated by Germany at the commencement of hostilities. The number, for audiences of today, unfortunately contains much repetition, and it will not match up in point of human interest with "To Hell with the Kaiser" and other predecessors. Its story is one that, in spite of the sanguinary subject matter, remains close to the surface. It pictures the horrors of the war from 1914 until the armistice was signed without carrying to any great degree the intense feeling wrought by the events themselves.

A large cast has been employed, and there are characterizations of Nurse Cavell, President Wilson, the Kaiser, General Von Bissing and others. Those mentioned are perhaps among the best, but, with the exception of Fred C. Truesdell's portrayal of President Wilson, they are not as good as we have seen previously.

Creighton Hale is the hero of the story, appearing as Conrad LeBrett, a youth of French parentage in Alsace, who is forced to serve in the German army, though his heart is with France. In the course of the story he is shot while protecting a woman from the ravages of a German soldier and sent to a hospital. Here he falls in love with an American nurse, whom he marries, after escaping to this country. But in the meantime he has served a short time in the American army and killed the German soldier who murdered his grandfather and ruined his sister. There are a number of realistic battle scenes taken on the French front, but they are not so well staged as others have been. The subject is overshadowed by former successes.

The number was adapted by June Mathis and A. S. LeVino from a story by Maxwell Karger and directed by Charles Miller. Others in the cast are Florence Billings, E. J. Connelly, Helen Ferguson, Henry Kolker, Earl Schenck and Margaret McWade.

Publicity Points.

The opening scenes in this convey a pretty picture of Alsace prior to the war and during its early days. There are several picturesque pastoral scenes, and a pleasing impression of happy home life is obtained.

The coming of the German troops is brought out in strong contrast, and some good work has been done in handling great throngs of herded civilians, who suffer indignities from the soldiers.

"COME AGAIN SMITH."

Jesse D. Hampton Presents J. Warren Kerrigan in an Amusing Tale.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

Originality of plot and an all-around entertainment value are features of this production, "Come Again Smith." The story was written by John H. Blackwood and directed by E. Mason Hopper, under general supervision of Jesse D. Hampton. It will be distributed by W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

J. Warren Kerrigan appears as the hero, Joe Smith, a role that suits him admirably, as it gives him opportunity to appear in contrasting circumstances. His first appearance is as a hobo, picked up from a park bench by two philosophizing financiers. They take him home with them, give him a bath and attire him in a dress suit. Then Mr. Kerrigan, or Joe Smith, begins to shine. He tells stories to the ladies, who are properly entranced by his joviality and warm up to him immediately. He tells them he is the son of the noted oil magnate, Joe Smith, Sr. In the course of events Lucy Stevens, already wondering whether she really loves one of the financiers, loses her heart to Joe.

Some interesting complications follow. The financier becomes jealous of Joe, naturally enough. There is a pawned necklace and an effort to throw suspicion on the hero. But the latter's father turns up and his name is, of course, cleared at the proper time. His story also, which had been under question, is substantiated.

The plot as a whole is a diverting one and played with a good undercurrent of humor running through it.

Lois Wilson and Winnifred Greenwood have the feminine roles. Others in the cast are H. A. Barrows, William Conklin, Charles French and Walter Perry.

Publicity Points.

There are some good shots at an oil well region, which gives character to a part of this story. This brings out certain phases of the hero's early life.

The interior settings are attractive and in keeping with a story of the semi-social type, such as this.

The cast as a whole is an agreeable one and this tends to give a pleasing flavor to a romance of this type.

"FIGHTING THROUGH."

William Christy Cabanne Presents E. K. Lincoln in Strong Red-Blooded Romance.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

There is a great deal of outdoor charm and romantic interest in this six-reel feature, "Fighting Through," which was written and produced by William Christy Cabanne and is to be distributed by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation. E. K. Lincoln appears as the hero of the tale, Robert Carr, a young Southerner, whose personal courage was questioned by his sweetheart, and who afterward wins back her love by a demonstration that he possesses the genuine quality.

The story begins in the South and is notable for the attractive manner in which it pictures home life there. The hero has a rival in his love for Maryland Warren and the rival takes pains to put Robert in a bad light, so that the girl breaks off their engagement. Robert is then further discredited by a false charge of disloyalty to his own flag. He is later robbed and placed in a box car by hoboes.

The scene changes to Arizona, where the girl has gone, accompanied by her mother and Robert's rival, Raymond Haynes, now a successful suitor. There is a well-staged train robbery and the girl is kidnapped by a band of Yaqui Indians. Robert, who has been traveling with a hobo friend, now appears on the scene and goes to the girl's rescue.

There is a gradual increase in the interest of this well-built story as it proceeds. Some of the riding scenes are excellent and the atmosphere of the whole is satisfying. The plot, while it resembles numerous predecessors in certain ways, has a general effect of novelty. The feature as a whole may be depended upon for its entertaining qualities.

Millicent Fisher is attractive in the role of the heroine. Spottiswoode Aitken contributes a pleasing bit of character work as Col. Dabney Carr, and Hayward Mack plays the rival. Others appearing are Frederick Vroom and Helen Dunbar.

Publicity Points.

A well-staged train robbery furnishes one of the Western features of this story. This event is carried out in an exciting and workmanlike manner. There are also picturesque glimpses of mountains and plain, with some dashing riding scenes.

The plot turns upon a question of the personal courage of the hero and this gives opportunity for dramatic action of an effective kind. His defense of the flag in the Mexican wine room will thrill any audience.

"ADELE"

Kitty Gordon Featured in Six-Reel Story of Realistic War Type.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

This six-reel drama of the great war is presented by United Picture Theatres of America, Inc. It was adapted by Jack Cunningham from a romance by Adele Blencau, entitled "The Nurse's Story," and directed by Wallace Worsley.

Intense realism, set forth in splendid day and night photography, is the outstanding feature of the production. It is the kind of a story that, if presented while hostilities were on, would have done much to stimulate the allied morale, since it pictures in an unsparing manner the way in which the Germans bombed Red Cross hospitals and maltreated wounded men. The attack of a German patient upon a wounded British captain appears as though it might have been based upon actual press reports. Its reception by the public now would seem to be problematical.

Kitty Gordon is cast in the role of the heroine, Adele. She is the daughter of an American surgeon who goes with her father to France to assist in caring for the wounded. She has already fallen in love with a British captain, whom she meets again in France, while he is in a hospital wounded. The place is taken by the Germans and Adele is subjected to many indignities; the Germans even attempt to use her as a spy. Miss Gordon is very attractive in this role.

The story itself is not particularly strong in plot, which is not altogether a fault in a production which clings closely to realism. There is some vagueness at times, but this is partially cleared up by some clever scenes at the close.

Mahlon Hamilton makes a good figure as the British captain. Others appearing are Wedgwood Nowell and Joseph Dowling. The art work on this number is attractive.

Publicity Points.

The strong feature of the picture is in the realism with which it depicts war. The hospital scenes reflect this and there are some fine examples of night photography on the battlefields, which the heroine visits during an action, with the dead and wounded lying thick upon the ground.

Kitty Gordon in the role of the heroine is a well known actress, and her personality does much to carry the interest of the production. She does some pleasing acting.

Metro Pictures Corporaton.

THE GOLD CURE, January 6.—This five-reel feature is an unusually good comedy in which excellent work both on the part of the star, Viola Dana, and the director, John Collins, have resulted in many good, hearty laughs. It should be a pleasing offering in any theatre. Reviewed at length in our last issue.

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

JAPAN OF TODAY NO. 2 (Post-Pathe), January 5.—A fine descriptive number illustrating numerous phases of industry in Japan. The manufacture of match boxes, Japanese lanterns, rice-straw rope, Damascene art work and other commodities is pictured. Cutting grass by hand with long shears and the propagation of gold fish are other interesting features. An excellent number of the kind.

LOVE'S YOUNG SCREAM (Pathe-Rolin), January 19.—A comedy number featuring Alf Goulding, Harry Pollard and Bebe Daniels. Rivalry over a closely guarded girl leads to trouble of various sorts. The "cow itch" feature is quite amusing, and there are some fairly good knockabout scenes.

THROUGH DOORS OF STEEL (Astra-Pathe), January 26.—No. 4 of "The Lightning Raider." This is one of the best instalments shown in a serial for some time, since it has both novelty and surprise. It pictures the way Lightning (Pearl White) recovers the ebony block from the bank vault. After returning the block to Tom later events immediately rob him of it.

GOING! GOING! GONE (Rolin-Pathe), January 26.—A comedy number featuring Harold Lloyd, Harry Pollard and Bebe Daniels. This follows the adventures of two tandem tourists. They find some girls wading in a creek, and save one from an unfriendly crab. Several of the incidents pictured are amusing, but there is no particular plot. It makes an average number.

OFFICIAL WAR REVIEW NO. 30 (Pathe), January 19.—This number opens with numerous scenes depicting the activities of Red Cross men and women workers at the front. The King of Italy and the Duke of Aosta are seen visiting their troops, and there are also close-ups of General Haig. A strong feature of the subject are actual scenes taken of the advance of American troops from Vesle to the Aisne under heavy fire.

Universal Film Exchange.

THE LURE OF THE CIRCUS, NO. 9 (Universal).—This repeats at the opening the high dive of Eddie and Alice from the drawbridge. Later it takes up their adventures with a band of whiskey smugglers in the employ of Cochrane. The latter tries to force Alice into a marriage with himself, but Eddie prevents this. Later the hero makes a swing from a rooftop to some water below.

THE LURE OF THE CIRCUS, NO. 10 (Universal).—This is another episode devoted to the exciting experiences of the hero and heroine with the whiskey smugglers. They assist the revenue officers in rounding up the gang and bringing them to justice. Eddie then returns to the circus, where he meets fresh difficulties.

"A ROMANCE OF THE AIR"

Carle E. Carleton Presents Lieut. Bert Hall (Himself) in a Vivid Play Presented by Lieutenant Hall's Book, En L'Air, with Edith Day.

Cast.

Edith Day.....Edith Day
Lieut. Bert Hall.....Bert Hall
Countess of Moravia.....Florence Billing
Archduke of Moravia.....Stuart Holmes
General Montaigne.....Brian Darley
Colonel DuBois.....Tom Burrough
Major William Thaw....Herbert Standing
Lieutenant Le Roy.....Joseph Lertora
Herbert Stair.....Franklin B. Coates
Herbert Stair.....W. P. Richmond

Directed by Carle E. Carleton.

The Story: Lieutenant Hall, detailed to an important air flight, is wounded in a fight with a German aviator and is forced to descend. He finds the German dead, and exchanges uniforms with him. He is found in hospital by Edith Day, a young American girl, and his own playfellow, who is held in Germany by the Archduke of Moravia and his sister, the Countess, because of the value of the news she receives from America. She causes his removal to the castle, and they plan an escape in an airplane. The Countess pretends a hatred of Germany and persuades them to take her with them in their flight. Once within the French lines she establishes liaison with a German spy who is impersonating an American correspondent and plans that suspicion shall be directed against Bert, who is condemned to death, but he is saved through the timely arrival of the real correspondent, who reveals the trickery.

Feature Lieut. Bert Hall, the celebrated American "Ace," and Edith Day, as the American girl.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Bert Hall, Famous "Ace" of the Western Front Comes to Light as Picture Star.
Love and Adventure Combine in Making Thrills for Photodrama.
Famous Cast in Famous Photoplay Reflects Daring Aerial Adventures.
"Romance of the Air" Presents Thrills and Adventures in Gripping Scenes.

Advertising Angles: Your chief appeal is the fact that Lieutenant Hall is one of the original Lafayette escadrille, and one of the two surviving members of that famous organization. You should be able to work your papers for more space than they would give a regular motion picture star. Make a big display of the special photographs, working in store windows as well as the lobby. The miniature airplanes should also be used. These should be given out several days in advance of the showing to get the effect of the talk they will make. For a special stunt try an aeroplane race with home-built toy aeroplanes, or have two classes, for ready-made and home-made toys. In a small town this can be made a feature.

Advertising Aids: Two 22x28 colored, eight 11x14 colored and eight 8x10 black and white photos for lobby display, two slides, miniature aeroplane cuts, three one-sheets, two three-sheets, one six-sheet and one 24-sheet. Cuts and mats.

Released by Independent Sales Corporation through Film Clearing House.

Alexander Vernon.....Earl Schenck
Lew, the Butler.....Doan Borrup

Directed by Abraham S. Schomer.

In the end, Love and Mercy triumph over Hate and Revenge.

Feature Julia Dean as Eveline Roland and Edwin Arden as John Walton.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Hate and Revenge were Ruling Passions Until Mercy Introduced Love.
Love, Mercy, Hate and Revenge Are Ruling Passions Shown in Photoplay.
Which of the Four Great Passions Is the Ruling Passion in Your Life?
Edwin Arden Star of the Last Photoplay He Ever Created.
Beautiful Julia Dean Starred with Edward Arden in Photodrama.

Advertising Angles: Work on the popularity of the stars. Play up the title rather than the story, merely hinting at the latter, as the theme is rather overworked.

Advertising Aids: Two one-sheets, two three-sheets, one six-sheet, one 24-sheet. Window cards, 14x21. Heralds. Lobby display photographs, 8x10, 11x14, 22x28. Slides. "THE GREAT ROMANCE"

Screen Classics, Inc., Presents Harold Lockwood in the Story of a Young American Who Was Offered a Throne but Preferred a Lesser Dignity.

Cast.

Rupert Danza.....Harold Lockwood
Althea Hanway.....Ruby de Remer
Prince Boris.....Joseph Granby
King Rudolph.....Frank Currier
Olga Marie.....Helen Lindroth
John P. Hanway.....Franklyn Hanna
Mrs. Hanway.....Clare Grenville

Directed by Henry Otto.

The Story: Rupert Danza is loath to leave his American college to go to Rugaria, even though he is told that the prosperity of the kingdom depends upon him. He is not really interested until he finds that Althea Hanway, whom he wishes to marry, and whose mother wants her to marry Prince Boris, has been taken to Rugaria. Then Rupert cannot get over there quickly enough. He is groomed to lead a revolution, but is discovered by Prince Boris. Twice he fights his way to freedom, once with the girl he loves; but he escapes the firing squad by so narrow a margin as to leave the spectator out of breath through suspense.

Feature Harold Lockwood as Rupert Danza and Ruby de Remer as Althea Hanway.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Story of Speedy Adventures in the Rule of Tiny Kingdom.
How Title-Stalkers of Society Barter Happiness for Ambition.
Excitement and Keen Adventure in Photoplay of Speed and Class.
What Happened When Young American Started to Rule a Kingdom.
Doings of Social Harpies and Ambitious Title Hunters.

Advertising Angles: Appeal to the Lockwood following, but make additional appeal to the lovers of romantic drama. Tell them that this is one of the best stories of that type since "The Prisoner of Zenda." Pull up the exciting incidents for detailed treatment and ask why the reader supposes an American college student should be chosen to lead a revolution in one of the Balkan states. Get them wondering why, and tell them they can find out by coming.

Advertising Aids: Four styles one-sheet, three three-sheets, two six-sheets, one twenty-four sheet. Photos. Slides. Music cue sheets. Special heralds. Special hand-colored lobby displays. One, two and three column ready made advertisements. Scene cuts.

An Announcement

OUR ACTIVITIES for the past year have been nearly 100 per cent. devoted to war production of vital importance to the government, compelling us to discontinue regular manufacture in practically all of our lines.

The cessation of hostilities has now enabled us to begin the readjustment to a peace production basis. While this adjustment must be gradual, we are pressing it with all possible speed in order to satisfy the requirements of our normal trade at an early date.

We appreciate the patience and understanding with which our patrons have reacted to the situation and trust they may continue to exercise such consideration until our manufacturing facilities are once more on a pre-war footing.

SILVERTIP

For Direct Current Projection
The Columbia-Silvertip Combination

The Columbia-Silvertip combination gives a light source that fills the bill in every particular. The silvertip is a quality product that has been tried and tested by the experts of the motion picture industry. It has received the stamp of approval of the best operators in the country and is standard.

The Columbia-Silvertip combination gives:

1. High current carrying capacity. The Silvertip is heavily plated, making it capable of carrying the heavy currents used in projection without harmful heating.

2. A strong, flexible light. The arc can be varied at the will of the operator, according to the density of the film within a reasonable limit of the rated amperage of the combination used. No two films are of the same density, and therefore, true artistic presentation of a picture requires a flexible light source.

Note: Silvertips are for direct current only.

FOR ALTERNATING CURRENT PROJECTION
WHITE A. C. SPECIAL CARBONS give a pure, white light of high intensity and flickerless illumination. No change of apparatus.

New Method Of Processing Film Gives Highest Quality

Mr. George K. Spoor spent years in having perfected a processing machine that would produce a uniform, high grade development throughout the length of the film, and which would at the same time eliminate the tremendous waste of the old processing methods.

He succeeded in obtaining a quality in prints that surpasses any yet produced. This has been proved not only by tests under the most exacting conditions, but through the actual processing of millions of feet.

The results of these years of work and experience are now offered to you.

Talk to our sales manager, Mr. Charles F. Stark, in regard to price and service.

"I am coming to pack your house for eighteen weeks"

—and I'm coming with a serial that's so sensationally thrilling, so fascinating, so all fired magical in power that your Competitor down the street will be sitting up nights figuring how he can get a little of the overflow from your serial nights. The serial?—a whirlwind—

Why a whirlwind? 'Cause it's the screening into eighteen amazing episodes of Douglas Grant's great story—"The Fifth Ace." Millions have read it. Have you? You'd never stop, once you'd started it.

That's precisely and exactly what will happen to your patrons, once they see the first episode or ANY episode. I chose this story MYSELF. Then telegrams were sent to Exhibitors asking them to read the story and wire their opinion. To a man they got all "het up" over——simply because it contains those age old elements of success. "Giving the public exactly what the public expects in serials plus some more they would never dare to expect." That's what you'll be able to advertise in this smashing winner—

—Millions of people all over the world have seen me work in serials—know my name—recognize in it the mark that means fearlessness, daring, sensationalism—and that's what they go to see in serial pictures—and that's what you're going to give them for eighteen straight weeks.

—Seen the tremendous layout of big and little newspaper ads? Seen the Advertising campaign book? Seen the posters? Seen the banners?—the lobby displays—the dozen and one other helps to make —a sweeping winner in your house? Then get busy with your nearest Universal Exchange this minute. They'll show you what you want. They'll show you in one second why you're going to get the biggest drawing card serial of the season in—

—and you can't act any too quick. With half the usual newspaper advertising you give your features, you'll clean up with "THE RED GLOVE." Talk with your Exchange and do it NOW. Released Feb. 17th.

Goldwyn Pictures

Now Ready: Goldwyn's First Pauline Frederick Production.

FOR months, pending her first Goldwyn release, exhibitors have said: "Well, let us hope Goldwyn gives this great star the right kind of stories."

By that they have meant stories as great as this beautiful woman's dramatic and emotional powers; modern American stories; vital themes of the present day and moment; stories like those that established her tremendous screen and stage popularity.

Such a play, meeting the emotional demands of this lovely star, is announced for February 16 release as the first of our Pauline Frederick Star Series of six productions.

Samuel Goldwyn presents:

"I'm Coming Over at 11 O'clock —and You'd Better Be There To See Me!"

BEAUTIFUL Cora Lamont, who has buried her past amid the snows of gold-mad Alaska, who has found happiness with her husband and child, who has escaped the memories of an act of desperation—

Suddenly hears the voice that means retribution and the loss of everything on earth that promises her safety and contentment.

This is the basic situation of a bold, daring, dramatic story of Eastern days and Alaskan nights in which

Directed by Reginald Barker

The unrivalled Farrar as a dance hall girl—you never expected such a surprise. And supported by Tom Santschi as the villain and Milton Sills as the hero.

If you, as an exhibitor, act quickly you can book this production for pre-release before its official release on January 26. "Shadows" is the kind of production that is worth a doubling up of playing time—give it more days and exploit and advertise it to the extreme limit.

"Shadows" is the most powerful and unusual picture Geraldine Farrar ever made; there has never before been a Goldwyn production like it.

This second successful Star Series production of a winsome, lovable, new personality on the screen means a continuation of exhibitor and public approval that greeted his first picture, "O, Johnny!" It has more speed and action; more heart interest; more humanness and more laughs. Announced for release February 23.

Welcomed with open arms in the Great West, you find the Butte Miner saying: "Hats in the air for Lou Bennison; he's 'home folks' on the screen." And the Los Angeles Examiner saying: "This big stage favorite will number his screen friends by the million." Over-night he captured the audiences of the Eastern cities.

Just a little bit of intelligent promotion and live showmanship will make Bennison one of the best "draws" you have had in years! The Goldwyn service and promotion department is ready to show you some stunts and tricks that will make him still "surer fire."

FORD EDUCATIONAL WEEKLY

$1,000,000 A Year Invested To Maintain the Quality of the FORD EDUCATIONAL WEEKLY

THIS splendid weekly attraction has been built without ever a thought as to its profits or losses. Henry Ford, who imparts to it his name, his ideals and his vital imagination, has felt that there should be a great, powerful screen educator beyond the reach or influence of propaganda.

The Ford Educational Weekly aims to depict and succeeds in revealing real Americans; the inside of great industries in terms of vivid drama; those historical things in the old and new life of our nation that make the hearts and minds of the people responsive.

There has now come a time, under the new Goldwyn exclusive distribution, when The Ford Educational Weekly attains a greater importance than it has ever had before. This is not because this attraction has undergone any direct changes for it merely continues to maintain its previous splendid quality.

Its greater importance is due to the fact that its presentation is tremendously enlarged by its entry into the Goldwyn type of theatres throughout the nation. And there is a Goldwyn type—the best and biggest theatres of the country, patronized by the best people of America.

We have increased the volume of patronage of the Ford Educational Weekly and are enlarging it so rapidly each week that, frankly, we cannot from day to day forecast the size of our standing order for prints.

The best exhibitors of the nation are advertising this attraction as one of the appealing features of their programs. Any exhibitor who hesitates about booking it for his theatre is, we feel, making an error of judgment.

The Circle
SHRINE OF THE SILENT ART PERSONAL DIRECTION
S. BARRET McCORMICK
INDIANAPOLIS

January 8, 1919

Gentlemen:

"Under Four Flags" was presented, as you know, at the Circle Theatre the week starting December 1st, or three weeks after the armistice was signed, when one would naturally suppose that there would be a lull in the enthusiasm and interest of war activities. But our week of this picture has convinced us that the public's interest in pictures dealing with the actual achievements of American arms, has not been lessened by the cessation of hostilities. "Under Four Flags" played at the Circle Theatre to the largest attendance of any of the numerous war pictures that we have presented.

It appears to me that "Under Four Flags" presents to the exhibitor of America one of the best attractions available today. It is the Victory picture of America and her Allies. This was the manner in which we exploited the same. Our advertising was planned to appeal to the public as the victors in the great contest, with "Under Four Flags" as the undying record of the glorious achievements of America in the war for Democracy.

Now, the fact of the American troops returning to their homes, each one bringing back his own intimate story of the struggle, will only serve to heighten the interest in "Under Four Flags". It will visualize our boys' own experience. Such history is not to be passed over lightly by the public, and a picture like "Under Four Flags", which tells the actual, graphic story of the closing days of the war, possesses unquenchable appeal to the public.

Very truly yours,

Dear Sirs:
As a pronounced movie "fan", I was somewhat interested in the enclosed advertisement in the Boston Globe.
If you can stand a little constructive criticism,
I ask that you read the last paragraph.
What kind of service is it when you "have to ask" when you can see a thing?
You should not have to ask WHEN you can see it; it should be possible to see the Pathe News just like you see your favorite newspaper-pay your money and get your paper; pay your money and you see the Pathe.
When I see it I figure my evening has been well spent; when I don't see it, I'm disappointed, no matter how good the program may be.
Now, gentlemen, it seems to me it is up to you to work up a scheme whereby the Pathe News will be shown as regular as a clock in whatever theatres you think best... Insert ads in the metropolitan papers showing where they may be seen and what will be shown, and the result will tend to make even more popular your splendid pictures.
Wishing the Pathe News a prosperous New Year, I remain,
Yours Very Truly,
Advertising Manager
C. B. MOLLER, Inc.
PATHÉ NEWS
NOT a newspaper, not a magazine—yet it has the largest circulation in the world! Its circulation results from its phenomenal popularity. It now resumes the name under which it became famous—the Pathe News.
It is a motion picture. It has educated more persons to a fondness for the Silent Drama than everything else put together. Eight years ago when the word "movies" was used in contempt the great men of the nation were wont to visit the theatres where it was showing. Through it the uneducated were taught the personalities of the great men of the world; visited the great cities of the earth; by it were broadened, educated; ceased to be provincial and came to know the people of other lands.
Twenty Million Persons See Every Issue
It is shown twice a week in the best motion picture theatres everywhere. Just as it was the first of all motion picture news weeklies, so it always has been, and now is, the best. Twenty-two years of successful picture making are behind it.
Now it promises and will attain so even wider usefulness.
You should not miss a single issue. Ask the manager of your favorite theatre the days on which he shows it!

WORLD AND UNITED THEATRES MERGE

Los Angeles To Be the Center of Production but Some Features Will Be Made at Fort Lee

Los Angeles, January 21.

A MERGER of interest was formed between the United Picture Theatres of America and the World Film Corporation at a meeting of J. A. Berst, president; Milton Goldsmith, treasurer, of the United, and Ricord Gradwell, of the World Film Corporation, held in Los Angeles January 18.

According to Mr. Berst, the amalgamation is for the purpose of elaboration and extension of business and to secure increased efficiency of distribution.

"We now have thirteen hundred houses enrolled as members of the United Theatres," said Mr. Berst. "The number is increasing daily. All important cities are represented."

Los Angeles is to be the center of production for the new combine. Some big features will be made at the World Film Corporation's plant at Fort Lee, but the major part of the production will be carried on here. The new concern aims to add other names to the list of stars now controlled, but will not reveal identity of those being considered at present. GIEBLER.

The following statement was issued from the office of the World Film Corporation:

Confirming the press dispatch carried by the daily papers under a Los Angeles date line of January 20 in which an announcement was made of the combination of World Film, United Theatres and the Peerless Producing Company, World officials in New York make the following statement:

World to distribute United productions. Peerless to make big special productions for United. Name of new chairman of board of directors of United to be announced later.

A few weeks ago World Pictures announced that plans were under way that would establish this company as one of the biggest distributing organizations in the film industry. The association of the World, United and Peerless is but the beginning of a gigantic organization that will be a power working for the betterment of the exhibitors, not alone in this country, but in the whole world. With a policy of absolute square dealing the exhibitors will be afforded a chance to put their business on a sound basis through co-operation. This will result in their receiving pictures of the highest box office value through the association of World, United and Peerless.

Screen Club of Denver Enters Censorship Fight

IN the Colorado Legislature a bill has been introduced by Representative Farrow, of Pagosa Springs, to provide for censoring films. The Rocky Mountain Screen Club, of Denver, has taken up the fight and is working against the measure to the fullest possible extent. One of their methods is a campaign of "education" for the lawmakers, and, with co-operation of thirty-three picture theatres in Denver, a pass has been presented to each member of the Legislature entitling him to admission of any of the theatres listed on the back of the pass.

It is thus proposed by the Screen Club to give officials every opportunity to decide for themselves whether the films ordinarily shown in Denver theatres are of a nature to be classed among the "sacrilegious, obscene, indescent and immoral or having a tendency to debase or corrupt morals," as stipulated in Representative Farrow's measure. Incidentally the Screen Club points out that exhibitors will "pay the freight" at $2 inspection fee on each reel coming into the state.

Provision in the Farrow bill is made for a board of five censors and clerks whose salaries shall range from $1,800 to $2,200 annually, all saddled on to the exhibitor in the $2 a reel tax. H. T. Nolan, president of the Rocky Mountain Screen Club, is leading the opposition to the measure, working quietly, and reports that the outlook is favorable for the exhibitor.

California Considers Sunday Closing.

The California Legislature is now in session, and one of the first measures that has received attention at its hands, following the ratification of the Sheppard constitutional amendment, has been a Sunday closing law. The initial draft of the proposed law excludes theatres and other forms of amusements from its provisions, but exhibitors are looking askance at the proposition, since it is known that there are several members of the Legislature who are in favor of the closing of all places of amusement on the first day of the week. Sunday closing created a big fight at the last session of the Legislature and promises to be one of the leading issues at this session.

A bill has also been introduced by Assemblyman N. J. Prendergast to prohibit the showing of what he terms "fake" battlefield pictures. This is a rider to a bill that has been offered against untruthful advertising.

Finance Committee Restores 10 Per Cent. Tax on Seats

Washington, January 22.

THE Senate Finance Committee today reconsidered the theatre taxes and has agreed to accept the proposals of the Senate for a tax of 1 cent on each 10 cents or fraction thereof. At the same time it was agreed to adopt a 15 per cent. tax on cabarets instead of 20 per cent. as proposed by the House.

Four mail sacks full of protests were placed before the committee today, with additional letters and telegrams coming in all the time. This cannot be said to be a victory for the theatre folks, for all that they have won is their due. The conferees have been forced to concede the righteousness of their claim.

Buffalo Protests Against Tax.

A meeting of Buffalo theatrical managers was called January 18 for the purpose of discussing ways and means for combating the proposed 20 per cent. tax on theatre tickets. Should such a tax be imposed, double the one which is now being exacted, theatrical men say that it will prove the ruin of the theatrical business.

At the meeting representatives and managers of approximately 75 Buffalo theatres appeared, and after discussions telegrams were sent to representatives and senators in Washington urging them to combat the proposed tax.

It was also arranged to print and circulate petitions among the audiences. An appeal has also been made to the Four Minute Men of Buffalo to appear at the theatres and there point out the danger of the proposed increase in tax to the theatres.

Fox and Lehrman Part.

Los Angeles, January 21.

Winfield R. Sheehan, general manager Fox Film Corporation, has issued the following statement: "Sunshine Comedies, Inc., has terminated its contract with Henry Lehrman for the best interests of the business. The Fox Film Corporation intends to continue producing and distributing comedies on a greater scale than ever. Definite plans of enlarged project will be announced later."

It is said that Fox and Lehrman could not agree on the financial end of the contract and that Lehrman and a number of players have left the studio.

Ohio Censors Need More Money.

Cleveland, January 23.

A bill has been introduced in the Legislature at Columbus to double the salaries of the Ohio film censors from $1,500 a year to $3,000.

INDIANA GETS TWO RECOMPENSE BILLS

Measures Are Designed to Cover Losses of Enterprises Closed by Health Board Order

INDIANA motion picture exhibitors will not need to entertain further fears regarding the influenza and pneumonia epidemics if the state legislature acts favorably on a couple of bills that are to be introduced by Representative James E. Southard, of Michigan City, Ind.

Representative Southard's proposed bill will provide for the recovery of all losses suffered by legitimate and taxable business enterprises ordered closed by health authorities to prevent or stay an epidemic, except in cases in which the epidemic can be traced directly to the business. The bill, he says, is aimed at such situations as were caused by the numerous influenza epidemics in the state in 1918.

The representative from Michigan City contends that inasmuch as the state reimbursed the owners of cattle destroyed to prevent the spread of foot and mouth disease and also reimbursed owners of property which was destroyed in floods and cyclones, there is no reason why the state should not reimburse business houses which sustain losses when ordered closed by health officials. His bill will make the state or the county or municipality whose health officer orders the closing responsible for the losses to be covered.

"Now if we had just had a law like that when the 'flu' epidemic hit us, we would be far better off financially than we are today," said an Indianapolis exhibitor in discussing the proposed measure.

Representative Southard has another bill which would place Spanish influenza along with the diseases which under the law must be reported to the local health officer and are subject to quarantine. He says this bill is also designed to remedy some of the conditions which were experienced during the influenza epidemics.

"We quarantined theatres, business houses and churches and let the patients run at large," said Mr. Southard. "Under this bill I propose to have the patients closed up so that it will not be necessary to quarantine the amusements and business houses."

Exhibitors anxiously await results.

Dr. Golden Now Heads the New England Metro

DR. E. A. GOLDEN, general manager of "Hearts of the World" of Boston, has become the new manager of the Metro Film Company of New England. Dr. Golden represents a syndicate which has taken over the Metro interests in New England. The change is one of the most important that has taken place in Boston film circles for many months.

It will probably be February 1 before the entire change in management of the Metro office will be announced. Dr. Golden is winding up his affairs at the Hearts of the World office in the Little Building preparatory to going to the Metro exchange.

Since Louis Mayer left the management of the Metro to enter the Mayer-Nathan Gordon producing company, with Miss Anita Stewart as the leading star, there have been a number of changes at the Metro exchange. Just what the policy of the new management will be has not been announced. Under Mr. Mayer's management the Metro was a top-liner in the film business in New England. Every effort has been made to keep up the great work which Mr. Mayer did.

Dr. Golden is well known in film circles, although he made his entrance into the field only about three years ago. He left dentistry to become the head of the Boston Photoplay Company, and last August took over the management of the Hearts of the World company.

New Orleans' Liberty Closes New Year's Eve

THE Liberty Theatre, of New Orleans, one of the finest motion picture theatres in the South, closed its doors on New Year's Eve, and the owners of the building have not determined what course they shall pursue in the immediate future. The Liberty, along with other theatres, was compelled to close during the epidemic of influenza.

About that time Ernst Boehringer, who was the chief promoter of the enterprise, resigned, and his resignation was accepted by the board of directors, the majority of whom are identified with Baton Rouge financial interests. Later the theatre was opened under the advisory management of N. E. Thatcher, and the business began to show a steady and quite satisfactory increase despite the holiday season, protracted bad weather and the depression following the influenza.

The Liberty was just making an even break when the directors, rather than incur the immediate payment of occupation and other taxes, suddenly decided to close. What disposition they will make of the theatre is not known, but the endeavor is being made to sell it, none of the board of directors being showmen. The theatre is one of the most perfectly constructed in that section of the country, and its equipment is complete and of the best. It has a seating capacity of about 1,700, and is regarded as a very attractive place of amusement.

Personal and Otherwise.

THE New York Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, Manhattan Local No. 1, has transferred its lease for its rooms, 729 Seventh avenue, to the Reeland Publishing Company, beginning February 1. The league will now secure clubrooms elsewhere with all modern conveniences and comforts of home.

Phil Lang, who for a long time was connected with the Kalem studios, is now head of the scenario department of the Vitagraph. Eugene Mullin, whom he succeeds, has been made advisory consultant to A. E. Smith, the president.

Paul Scardon, Vitagraph director, had his automobile stolen on Wednesday, January 15, while investigating a location at 65th street and Broadway, New York. The police were notified, and the machine was recovered in half an hour.

The R. and O. Theatrical Enterprises of Brooklyn, composed of Samuel Rohnheimer and Max Oestreiker, realized that it was necessary to elect a president. This thought came to them at a meeting of the Manhattan Local No. 1. Each was willing that the other should have the honor. To settle the question they tossed up a penny and Mr. Oestreiker won. The other offices were absorbed by Mr. Rohnheimer.

In Aeolian Hall, West Forty-second street, New York, we discovered two new motion picture publications, The Educational Film Magazine and Who's Who on the Screen. The former has already issued its first number. The second is in prospectus. The Educational Magazine is quite a pretentious and commendable enterprise.

Ray Physioc, the director and artist, has been assisting his brother Joseph in the scenery for "Up in Mabel's Room" and other stage productions.

Larry Seamon, the director and comedian, was in New York City this week. He made a hasty trip across the continent from the Western Vitagraph studios to renew his contract and talk it over with A. E. Smith. Mr. Seamon returns to California Saturday, January 25.

Charles S. Hart, late of the Division of Films, Committee on Public Information, left London for America on Saturday, January 18.

Judging from the pace Dr. Cyrus Townsend Brady was making through the Hotel Astor a few days ago we are of the opinion he is one of the busiest men in the five boroughs of New York City.

Grant Anson, one of the old-time exhibitors, who owns two of the smaller theatres on Third avenue and Fourteenth street—The Gem and The Comet—says: "They are doing as much business as they did eight years ago." Grant is no longer of the heavyweight class. He is now of the middle class.

Joseph F. Lee, general manager of Anita Stewart's productions, returned to New York January 21 after a business journey that took him on a round trip from coast to coast. He stopped in the trading centers of distribution to give exhibitor showings of "Virtuous Wives."

FRANK CANNOCK, METAL WIZARD, DEAD

Precision Official, One of World's Experts on Projection Machinery, Had Host of Friends

By F. H. RICHARDSON

FRANCIS B. CANNOCK, best known to the industry through his connection with the Precision Machine Company, passed into the shades of the great beyond, Sunday, January 19, at St. Lukes Hospital, New York. The immediate cause of his taking away was an abcess on the lungs.

Friend Cannock (for I think we all who knew him personally liked to call him by that sacred title) was perhaps one of the very finest workmen in metal in all these United States. If it was of metal, and Frank made it, it was a good job. That much was settled without argument.

Cannock was born in Bristol, England, April 11, 1872, of Scotch parentage. At the age of six, the family came to America, but after a considerable period spent in Elizabeth, N. J., his mother's health failing, the family went back to England. In 1895 Cannock returned to the United States, took up his residence in New York City, almost immediately took out his first citizenship papers, and from that time forward New York City was his home.

Almost immediately after his return from England, Cannock's love for mechanics led him to enter the automobile construction field, but soon thereafter the motion picture machine claimed his attention, and in 1897 he took charge of the motion picture machine repair department of Blackton & Smith, which company later, with the addition of William T. Rock, became the Vitagraph.

With Eden Musee Nine Years.

Here Cannock remained until 1899, in which year he took charge of the Eden Musee, remaining with that institution for nine years. During all that time Cannock was constantly experimenting with various ideas having to do with improvements in projection, or projection mechanism. The knowledge gained during this period of Cannock's life proved to be of great value to him later on.

During Mr. Cannock's time at the Eden Musee the screen results in that institution were considered as being the best in the entire world. In fact, when Charles Urban came to America in 1903, he paid Mr. Cannock the high compliment of saying: "You are projecting my pictures better than I myself do in London."

In the year 1908 Mr. Cannock formed a co-partnership with R. G. Holloman, under the firm name of Edengraph Company, which corporation produced the now almost forgotten "Edengraph Projector," which was Mr. Cannock's invention.

This machine, mechanically, was exceedingly well made; also it was constructed throughout of high-class material. But the form of construction proved to be too light for the work, which about then was rapidly becoming more strenuous, and the machine did not succeed. Its manufacture was soon discontinued.

Becomes Associated with E. S. Porter.

Cannock then disappeared for a time, so far as the public was concerned. He had, however, formed an association with Edwin S. Porter, the result of which was the invention of the Simplex projector. Well does the writer remember the curiosity invoked by first reports of the Simplex. "Cannock and Porter are building," said dame rumor,

Francis B. Cannock.

"a projector you can point at the screen like a cannon."

Well, through the efforts of Messrs. Cannock and Porter the Simplex was finally completed, and—you all know the rest of that story. Mr. Cannock became secretary of the Precision Machine Company soon after its organization. The company passed through some pretty strenuous days before the Simplex was finally firmly established, but the writer can vouch for the fact that Frank never, for a single moment, lost faith in its ultimate success. As for the Simplex, it was his child. To speak a bad word for it to Cannock was immediately to get yourself very much disliked.

Final Illness Came Last Fall.

Mr. Cannock's final illness came upon him last fall, in Akron, Ohio, where he was confined in bed for two months. After what seemed a partial recovery he returned to New York to consult with specialists, and it is to be remarked, as a tribute to his faithfulness and interest, that after an operation was declared necessary, he insisted on working in his experimental rooms at the Precision factory while awaiting for arrangements to be made for it.

The funeral services were impressive and beautiful. Both regular and Masonic services were held. Floral tributes were many.

And so our friend is gone. We, in common with his multitude of friends, will remember Frank for his loyalty and sterling worth as a friend, for his unquestioned genius as an inventor and his splendid ability as a worker in metals. The motion picture industry will long remember Cannock for his contributions as an inventor, and for the improvement in projection made possible by and through his work.

Interment was at Kensico cemetery.

SECOND INFLUENZA WAVE HITS COAST

Estimated, However, That but 40 Per Cent. of Picture Houses Are Closed—Back to the Masks

THE second wave of the Spanish influenza epidemic has struck the Pacific Coast with full force, but the amusement business is not being as hard hit as when the disease first made its appearance last October. At one time practically every theatre in the San Francisco territory was closed, with similar conditions prevailing in other districts, but it is now estimated that but about 40 per cent. of the moving picture houses on the Pacific Coast are closed. Accurate figures are almost impossible to obtain, since conditions are constantly changing and houses are being closed and reopened with a rapidity that is baffling to those attempting to keep abreast of the situation.

Many Houses in Frisco Territory.

In the California territory served by San Francisco film exchanges there are about 356 theatres using moving pictures, these being located in 176 towns. Out of this list there are 145 towns which have but one theatre, and but 31 with more than one house. Eighty of these towns have a population of less than 1,000, 55 have a population between 1,000 and 3,000, 11 have a population ranging from 5,000 to 10,000, six are in the class between 10,000 and 20,000, while 9 have populations above 20,000. These have a combined population of 1,411,300 according to the last census.

The San Francisco film exchanges also serve 11 towns in Nevada which have a population of 25,000 and 15 theatres, as well as two towns in Oregon which have four theatres and a population of 6,500. About one half of these houses are closed, but film rentals have not been affected in like proportion since most of these theatres are in small communities.

May Return to Works.

San Francisco and its east-bay suburbs of Oakland, Berkeley and Alameda, which conquered the first phase of the epidemic by the compulsory use of gauze masks, is preparing to go back to this plan. The public schools in all of the east-bay communities have been closed, while at San Francisco gauze masks are worn by pupils. The closing of theatres is not being considered as a preventative measure, but theatregoers will be compelled to wear the masks when the present program is adopted.

Santa Rosa Closes at 6 O'Clock.

The Board of Health of Santa Rosa, Cal., has put into effect an order requiring all theatres, schools, libraries and churches to close daily at 6 o'clock. A mask ordinance went into effect there about the first of the year. Theatres at Healdsburg have been closed again and the wearing of gauze masks has been made compulsory at Grass Valley. Moving pictures have not been shown at Hanford for almost three months.

SHERRILL TO MAKE TWO-REEL WESTERNS

Texas Guinan To Be Starred in Short Length Dramas Made by Frohman Amusement Corporation

A DEVIATION from the policy of the Frohman Amusement Corporation as pursued by it since its inauguration was announced by William L. Sherrill, president of that corporation, in the statement that he will produce and release every two weeks commencing March 1 a two-reel western drama to be distributed probably on a State right basis.

"It has taken me three months of daily study and investigation to form my conclusion to make two-reel western dramas," says Mr. Sherrill. "The basis of motion picture popularity is to be traced to the one and two reel subjects. If a theatre catering to a regular patronage were to advertise 'we do not show productions of less than five reels,' I would venture the belief that such a house would not long survive.

"Mr. Rothapfel successfully tried out a whole week's program with only short length subjects. But the salient fact is that there is no story or play written that cannot be played forcefully and entertainingly in two reels. By this I do not mean that productions of feature lengths should not be made; they are a form of entertainment in themselves and the Frohman Amusement Corporation does not intend to abandon that field.

Texas Guinan to Typify West.

"It has taken me three months to pick out the person who by environment and experience can portray the spirit of the west. I have determined that the feminine spirit, typified by ruggedness equal to that of the men of the West, yet possessing the soul of the feminine, would be portrayed by a woman of broad vision and theatrical experience. When I announce that Texas Guinan is to star in these western dramas those who are acquainted with the history of the legitimate theatre and her work on the screen should feel that I am justified in my optimism.

"Miss Guinan was born on a ranch just outside of Waco, Texas, and her Christian name was given to her because of the first born in the Guinan family for generations past being christened 'Texas.' Miss Guinan did not see Broadway or the footlights until her seventeenth year. Prior to that her vocation was to master a horse and the intricacies of the lariat.

Fifteen Stories Have Been Selected.

"When I saw her work in 'The Gun Woman,' I made up my mind that here was the female Bill Hart of the screen. Miss Guinan can handle a gun, roll a cigarette and boss a mob of cowboys all at one fell swoop. To me, the idea of a woman a Western character, no less brave or daring than a man and at the same time portraying her womanly side, is indeed a welcome addition to the motion picture art.

"These twenty-six reels are to be staged in the West. I have chosen the first fifteen stories which have been specially written around Miss Guinan by a young man who has slept under the sky, tended bar, punched cows and wielded a 'gat.' I predict that her stories will be a revelation."

Mr. Sherrill, together with his star, will leave for the Coast this month where he will establish his production organization of these two-reel western dramas, maintaining his sales and exploitation organization in New York.

Exhibitors' Mutual To Be 100 Per Cent Theatre Men

SESSIONS of the board of directors of Exhibitors' Mutual Distributing Corporation, held last week at the company's new executive offices, 1600 Broadway, New York City, resulted in the formulation of plans for making Exhibitors' Mutual a hundred per cent. exhibitor owned distributing organization.

Conferences were held between the directors of Exhibitors' Mutual, officers of Affiliated Distributors Corporation and the Robertson-Cole Company which represents, as bankers and exporters, a group of independent producers making productions for release through Exhibitors' Mutual exchanges.

Definitely the plan is to make Exhibitors' Mutual a completely exhibitor owned exchange system which shall become an open market for the independent producer. The Robertson-Cole Company in their relations with Exhibitors' Mutual will be the bankers for the independent producer and handle the foreign market.

The directors of Exhibitors' Mutual elected H. C. Cornelius, of Grand Rapids, secretary of the company, first vice-president to succeed James M. Sheldon, whose resignation was accepted, and named L. A. Cornelius, president of the Wolverine Brass Company, a director to fill the vacancy. I. C. Elston, Jr., of Chicago, was elected second vice-president to succeed H. A. Brink, who recently resigned from the directorate.

Control of the Mutual Film Corporation passed early in November into the hands of a group of exhibitors headed by William J. Clark. The corporation was reorganized immediately as Exhibitors' Mutual Distributing Corporation with Mr. Clark as president.

On January 1 a dividend was declared on preferred stock outstanding. The dividend came within two months of the reorganization.

The minority stock in the corporation is owned by bankers and other interests formerly in control of the Mutual Film Corporation. An option has been secured by the controlling interests on the balance of the holdings which is to be offered to exhibitors generally.

"The control of the Exhibitors' Mutual Distributing Corporation, is owned by bona fide motion picture theatre owners," announced C. C. Pettijohn, general counsel and a director in the corporation. "The company is controlled actually by motion picture exhibitors and it is our plan to make that exhibitor ownership 100 per cent. The control of the company now is in the hands of fourteen exhibitors who have an option on the balance of the stock now held by bankers.

The interests which now hold the remainder of the stock are not anxious to dispose of their holdings, but we secured, with control, an option on their holdings and that option will be exercised by other exhibitors in the very near future.

Griffith Engages Barthelmess.

Richard Barthelmess, clever young leading man, has been engaged by D. W. Griffith on a year's contract to play leading roles. The actor is a New Yorker, but was educated in Connecticut. He played five years in stock on the speaking stage and then entered pictures. He is a finished actor with an attractive personality.

SCREEN SET FOR PHOTOPLAY'S IBSEN

Silent Drama Has Reached Point Where Entrance of a Man With the Scandinavian's Vision Will Be Most Welcome—Opportunity for the Men Inspired by Truth

By Albert E. Smith
President of the Vitagraph Company.

IT is good to realize that, while there is no Henrik Ibsen to perform the gigantic task, the technical development of the photoplay has now reached such a degree of perfection as to make the arrival of such a reformer welcome in cinema playwrighting. What Ibsen did for the spoken drama some genius will do for the motion picture, because there is need of the doing. It is no reflection on the magnificent brain work which has been contributing plays to the photographic stage to announce this, because of the parallel conditions.

For centuries, from Shakespeare to Zola, men had been writing classics of dialogue; yet it took this Norse writer to put truth into the play. Like all geniuses this master, like Ibsen, will probably come from obscurity.

It is a golden thought that in this age when literature has become the handmaiden of commerce, Ibsen stands forth from the most abject destitution and literally robs the classics box office of the drama. It is an encouragement to every writer that he not only left an imperishable impress on the literatures of the French, English and Italian, as well as his own Scandinavian, but also is recognized as the greatest single bread winner of the day. Perhaps his disciple and imitator, George Bernard Shaw, may dispute this title to commercial success, but the treasurer's statements of the affairs of such actresses as Mrs. Fiske, Nazimova, and Ethel Barrymore, all will show the contrary.

Ibsen Had His Struggles.

For the encouragement of the photoplaywright in the making it is well to recall that Ibsen spent his youth in poverty. He educated himself while a druggist's apprentice in Christiania, studying as he rested on his couch under the counter; for he worked at night. It was only when his first play, "The Warrior's Mound," scored a success that he walked out a free man. He then attracted attention enough to be made the stage manager at Bergen, and afterward the manager of the Norwegian Theatre at Christiania. This he reduced to bankruptcy in five years. He had kept doggedly on, producing his own plays and others which met his peculiar approval until the avalanche of criticism against him drove the genius into exile. He spent ten years in Italy and Germany, and then returned to his native country in triumph.

It may be a guide to the writer of the photoplay to consider the development of the Ibsen mind, for he also was once a writer of the highly romantic and improbable. This was in the first period of his work, when playwriting went hand in hand with poetic composition. He was youthful. Yet, while in that youth, he is observed to make a direct transition from the highly colored romance to the historic with a touch of decorative romance. The play which marked this transition was "The Banquet at Solhag." Still delving into the riches of the sagas he continued these historical studies in dramatic form until he had finished the play, "The Vikings at Hegelund."

The Youthful Ibsen—And an Analogy.

This may all be very boresome and encyclopaedic as it reads, but hardly so when one considers its possibility of application to the photoplay of to-day. Perhaps because of the insistence of the producer, the director, the actor and the expert scenario writer, our playwrights have gone no farther than the youthful work of Ibsen. Perhaps he was told at the time he had better stick to his muttons, although at this period he was only beginning to feel the results of a vogue. The eyes of the thoughtful were on him surely, and yet he deliberately abandoned the historical and romantic and became satirical, psychological, and gave evidence of his ultimate intention of telling the truth on the stage by writing the best swift-action play of his whole career in "Love's Comedy."

It was a flash of his intention or his destiny, and he followed it up by subsiding into the series of national dramas associated with Pan-Scandinavia. A careful reader will, however, find him working nearer and nearer his goal—truth on the theatrical stage. He wrote a series of political and social plays terminating in "The League of Youth," and then, as if he felt fully ready began the wonderful masterpieces of pathological dramatic treatment of social ills which startled the world and made him the most talked of and successful playwright of the day.

Taciturn, almost a hermit, Ibsen found himself at least the most discussed of writers. Shakespeare and Bacon were relegated to silence. It was Ibsen, all Ibsen. He was assailed as immoral, cynical, pessimistic, unfit to be read or seen; and by others he was hailed as the apostle of the new gospel of truth and emancipation. But is was universally granted that he was telling the truth of human responsibility under modern social conditions.

The coming Ibsen of the photoplay must not be discouraged at the scorn with which some will greet the expression of the thought that he will and must arrive. The life work of Ibsen is the best answer, and any thoughtful workman of the cinema will agree that there must come that wonderful brain which can utilize the technical moving picture to propagate truth.

High Brow? No! He Told the Truth.

High brow? At no time in his career was Ibsen ever soaring. He was always down to earth, telling the truth, always telling the truth and leaving the psychology of its telling to do the work he desired. His plays are the most realistic ever written, and for proof of this observe the attendance at "The Doll's House." They are unconventional, but always interesting, and the ultimate conclusion is for good, and the filming of this very play for Elsie Ferguson's use has, perhaps, proved his best medium.

Is the Ibsen of the photoplay possible; will he be accepted by the producer; will he be properly interpreted by the actor; will his meaning be caught by the director? All of these questions are pertinent and should be answered. The first thought is to fly off the handle, defend the cinema as having an art of its own, etc. But there is a very concrete example now before the public, vitally before the people, which may show the possibilities of accomplishment to the playwright who now prefers to hear his words spoken aloud rather than silently pantomimed on the screen.

Prohibition an Ibsen's Opportunity.

It is the passing of the prohibition amendment to the constitution of the United States and the consequences of its enforcement. Here is a social problem which is stirring and will arouse the passions of men for months to come. What a splendid opportunity for an Ibsen!

What an opportunity for the photoplaywright to teach the truths surrounding the great transition from "wet" to "dry," and save the entire argument from bitterness and the "common clay." The just man who believes in the amendment wants to have his fellow approve of its being passed. That makes one play. How is it to be enforced without further violation of what some men already consider a too great interference with personal liberty, another play. The amendment will be beneficial, another play. The world should go "dry," another play. And so on without limit.

Truth to Dominate All Factors.

Is it possible that no brain exists which can take these various phases of a great question and by a series of plays, telling the truth, always the truth, guide the public into the proper channel of thought? You will answer that a certain truth was projected in such a moving picture, and in another and in another. Yes, we have seen some of the dullest, dreariest, most tiresome photodramas come out of the late war for purposes of propaganda. And the propaganda is now as dead as the thought that was sought to be expressed.

What there is opportunity for is the brain which will tell the truth in photography so compelling that the producer will project it for the truth's sake; the director will interpret it as the writer has made it because he can do nothing else, the actor will act it as the writer wishes, the scenario expert will slave to give its treatment every minute touch, and the cameraman will "shoot" for truth.

This is all no idle dream. We want writers who will enable us to take the absurdities out of the motion play, just as Ibsen stopped a lot of ninnies from going over to one side of the stage and whispering something to the audience from behind the hand. Let us write detectives as detectives are, women as they are, men as they are, children—all of God's good world as it is; and perhaps show how good it is by demonstrating how bad it may be. The creative immagination may be necessary, but let him use his mind normally. We are all children and must be amused, but like Mme Montessori's wonderful idea, the lessons may be sent home while we are being amused.

There is immortality awaiting the Ibsen of the photoplay.

GRACE DARLING, TRAVELER, ACTRESS

Player Talks of the Picture She Is Making for S-L Under the Direction of Ralph Ince

IN more ways than one Grace Darling is a remarkable young woman. During the few years she has been in the public eye as a moving picture star and globe trotter extraordinary she has any number of unusual experiences and learned many things. She has visited many cities and places of interest in this and other countries, and told of them most entertainingly. She has questioned famous men about their exploits and repeated them in the public prints. She has revealed the magic and comfort of unlimited funds when making a record breaking trip around the world. She has learned all sorts of facts about all manners of persons.

She has also learned how to keep a secret.

Half an hour's chat with her showed an amazing control of a feminine organ of speech.

The conversation went about like this:

"Mr. Lubin tells me that you speak very enthusiastically of your part in the new S-L picture Ralph Ince is making, Miss Darling?"

"I think it's splendid! and it is such a pleasure to work with Mr. Lincoln, and be directed by Ralph Ince. I'm glad I'm in the cast. Everything is so pleasant and Ralph Ince is such a clever director. He knows so well just what he want to do and how he wants it done that I feel I am getting a great deal of valuable instruction."

"Is the picture almost finished?"

"All my scenes are completed. The story is big and fine and its theme will interest everyone."

"What is the name of the picture?"

Right here was where Grace Darling proved she could keep a secret.

"I'm very sorry," she said, "but I can't tell you. Messrs. Lubin and Sawyer are keeping the title secret for the present. It will be announced shortly."

"Can't you give me some of the details of the plot or the kind of character you are playing?"

"I'm the heroine, and Clara Joel is the woman who makes all the trouble. You remember how clever she was as the amusing vampire in 'Business Before Pleasure?' You will be surprised to see how earnest and artistic she is in a serious part."

"What sort of a character does Mr. Lincoln play?"

"One of those live American chaps who doesn't stop to talk about things but goes right ahead and does them. In one of the scenes at the— but I mustn't tell you where; it might give you a hint as to the subject. But whatever it is Mr. Lincoln does is splendid."

"I'm sure of it. Does he use any of those high-bred dogs of his in the picture?"

The Dogs Are Not in the Picture.

"You mean his Airdales? No. You see most of the scenes are— any way, he doesn't use the dogs. I wish I could tell you all you want to know about the picture, but I really mustn't."

The young woman whose features are well known wherever movie fans are a part and parcel of the population was evidently proud of her prospects.

Grace Darling.

"Can you give me a hint as to the nature of the pictures you are to do?"

"No, but I'm greatly pleased with the way the entire details of the first production have been handled."

"And you positively cannot tell me the name of the Lincoln picture?"

"Really, I cannot. Mr. Lubin thought it would be easier for me to keep the title secret if I didn't know it."

"You mean, you were never told?"

"Never. I wonder what it will be?"

The explanation was made soberly enough, but there was a demure smile in the speaker's eyes and around the corners of her mouth. Be that as it may, Grace Darling knows how to keep a secret.

"Salome" Establishing Records.

Acting General Manager Herman Robbins of the Fox Film Corporation has just completed arrangements for one of the most aggressive sales campaigns in the history of that organization in connection with the release on an independent basis of "Salome," a Theda Bara super-production.

"We have been literally deluged with wires and letters regarding 'Salome' booking," said Mr. Robbins, "yet we have hardly started a selling campaign. The mere announcement that 'Salome' was on the market as an independent attraction was apparently all that was necessary. If I may judge by the present demand, this feature is going to outrank 'Cleopatra' as a box office winner—and 'Cleopatra' has made and still is making box office records for exhibitors.

"Another matter of interest is the large number of week and two-week runs," continued Mr. Robbins. "Even one and two day houses realize that they cannot meet the demands of their public on this photoplay with a short-time showing. I consider that there is no limit to the business the live exhibitor can do."

Nebraska and Iowa Find Business Best in Years

NEBRASKA and Iowa are right now enjoying just about the best moving picture business of the last 'steen years. House after house is reporting new attendance records every day, and exchange managers are too busy to tell you how busy they are.

The after effects of the influenza, if there are such things, have just about disappeared. With few exceptions, every house in the two states has reopened. The general rule has been to put on big pictures and at once regain full business. Exchanges which laid off their road representatives or salesmen during the blue period of the epidemic have sent those salesmen out again, or have employed new ones. In the Universal exchange the entire office force, with the exception of Manager J. H. "Curly" Calvert, went out on the road. Harry Lefholz, Calvert's able assistant, caught the influenza and is in bed, but that is the only dark spot on the whole horizon of Omaha's picture prosperity.

The Rialto and the Sun theatres of Omaha last week reported the biggest crowds of their history. The Rialto in Omaha, the Plaza in Sioux City, and Lyda in Grand Island, Neb., and other houses have made similar reports.

The weather has been exceptionally favorable to the theatre business. In the smaller cities the exhibitors appreciate the good roads of this winter, which enable farmers to drive in in their automobiles.

Several purchases of theatres are reported. Many more are expected this spring, and a regular epidemic of new buildings is in prospect.

Louis Latts, of Ashland, Wis., Dies.

On January 6, at his home in Ashland, Wis., Louis Latts, a member of the Royal Theatre Company, died as a result of an attack of influenza. He was one of the Latts Brothers, owners of the Royal, Majestic and Bijou theatres, Ashland, operated by the Royal Theatre Company, of which his brother, Abe Latts, is a surviving partner. Ten years ago Louis Latts moved from Superior, Wis., to engage with his brother in the business of exhibiting moving pictures. He was enterprising in his methods and has established a wide acquaintance throughout the northwest. He was thirty years old when he died, a victim of meningitis superinduced by influenza.

The Motion Picture Exhibitor

Council Puts One Over On Cleveland Exhibitors

CLEVELAND exhibitors had one put over on them the first week in the new year, when without any warning an amendment to the Cleveland building code was passed by the city council, which put a license fee on theatres and operators.

And before the vote was cold the exhibitors and operators got after the council and had an amendment introduced nullifying it. Whether or not this amendment will be passed remains to be seen.

The amendment to the building code was proposed by the building inspector and fixed a fee upon every exhibitor who is granted a license as follows: One hundred to 300 seats, $100; 300 to 600 seats. $200, and 600 seats or over, $300. New licenses are granted each year. A fee of $5 for every applicant for a license to operate a projection machine was also included in this new law.

The building inspector said the amendment was drafted in order to make his department self-supporting. The exhibitors say they have a majority of the councilmen lined up for them and at the next meeting it will be replaced by their amendment which charges a fee of $5 against any theatre when a new license is granted.

Cincinnati Exhibitors Elect.

At a meeting held a short time ago by the Moving Picture Exhibitors' League of the Chamber of Commerce of Cincinnati, a nominating committee was selected for the purpose of deciding upon candidates for the offices for which elections were scheduled. The committee decided to place only one ticket in the field. Consequently, at the election of January 15 there was no contest, the following officers being elected without opposition: President, A. G. Hettesheimer; first vice-president, John Weinig; second vice-president, William Gervers; treasurer, Otto Luedeking; secretary, Beecher E. Hess. There was a good attendance at the election, and the new officers were warmly congratulated on their elevation to office.

Kansas Court Bumps National Wiring Code

A THEATRE owner in Kansas is not obliged to follow the "national code" in wiring his house, according to the decision of the Supreme Court. The question came up when L. M. Crawford and Roy Crawford, of the Grand Theatre, Topeka, were arrested for failing to comply with those requirements. The lower court decided in their favor and when the case was appealed Justice Dawson confirmed its decision.

In rendering his decision the Justice was somewhat caustic in his remarks upon the legislature having power to delegate authority to any individual or association to make obligatory rules with regard to the care and management of property. He also denied that it can provide that a breach of such rules is a penal offense.

The section of the fire prevention act providing that theatre owners be compelled to make electrical wiring in conformity with the "national electrical code" was declared invalid. In his opinion, it would be difficult for an individual to keep posted in the changes made from time to time, and after having wired his house according to code, would find himself, at great expense, obliged to wire it over again.

Schlichter Is New Head of Maryland Exhibitors

AN election of officers took place at the meeting of the Maryland Exhibitors' League, which was held at the headquarters in the New Theatre Building, 210 West Lexington street, on Sunday night, January 12. The following men were chosen:

Louis Schlichter, president of the Edmondson Amusement Company, president; E. B. McCurdy, manager of the Lafayette and Eureka theatres, first vice president; Thomas D. Goldberg, manager of the Walbrook Theatre, second vice president; H. Eyer, manager of the Community Theatre, Hamilton, secretary; William E. Stumpf, manager of the Goodtime theatre, treasurer.

Mr. Schlichter said he would accept it only on the condition that permanent headquarters be located downtown in the business district, where a secretary would be on duty every day, and where the business of the League could be transacted. A committee of three was appointed to select a place for the establishment of such an office. On this committee were Frank A. Hornig, of the Horn and Royal theatres, whom Mr. Schlichter succeeds; J. Louis Rome, of the Broadway and Baltimore theatres, and B. Cluster, of the Liberty.

Another meeting was called by Mr. Schlichter for January 20.

Carr Heads Reading Exhibitors.

The exhibitors of Reading, Penn., have formed an organization which will be known as the Theatrical Managers' Association, for the purpose of promoting and advancing the motion picture industry in that city. At the election of officers the following prominent exhibitors were named: George Carr, of the Hippodrome, president; Frank Hill, of the Lyric, vice-president; Julius Hansen, of the Gem, secretary, and H. J. Schad, of the Colonial, treasurer.

Reading is well known as being one of the most prosperous motion picture communities in Pennsylvania and possesses a large number of beautiful photoplay theatres of the most modern types.

Kirchner Heads Group of Detroit Exhibitors

NEARLY seventy-five exhibitors attended the special meeting held at the Hotel Tuller, Detroit, Jan. 10, for the purpose of forming a permanent organization of Detroit exhibitors exclusively. While no name has been selected, steps were adopted which make a permanent organization now an established fact.

Edgar Kirchner, of the Family Theatre, was elected president; Harry Goldstein, associated with a number of theatres, was elected vice-president; King Perry was elected secretary, and J. C. Ritter, of the Rialto Theatre, was made treasurer. There is an advisory council comprising several of the largest exhibitors in the city.

Initiation fees are $5 and dues are only $1 a year—the members will be assessed should any further moneys be needed. With such a liberal policy as to dues and with the best exhibitors in Detroit as members, everything indicates that this time Detroit will have the strongest association of exhibitors it has ever had.

The organization is not going to be antagonistic—it is going to be co-operative, not only among its members, but with the various producers and exchange managers. One of the important features will be to work out some plan by which exchanges are assured that exhibitors will live up to contracts and meet their rental obligations. Assurances have been given from the Board of Motion Picture Exchange managers that such a movement would be heartily welcomed.

Future meetings of the organization will be called at the option of the president.

SOUTH AMERICAN FILM EXPORTS GAIN

Australia, Too, in Eleven Months Takes Over Ten Million Feet—Some Interesting Figures

EXPORTS of motion picture films have reached lower levels than have been found for many years, and men interested in our foreign trade believe that the tide is about to turn and that subsequent reports will show a gradual regaining of the ground that has been lost since the beginning of the war.

The bureau of foreign and domestic commerce, as part of its work of placing the industry of the United States on a post-war basis, is compiling statistics regarding our foreign trade in various commodities during the past three years. Figures showing the exports and imports of motion picture film during the eleven-month periods ended with November, 1916, 1917 and 1918 have just been completed, as part of this effort.

These figures show that our exports of unexposed motion picture film during the period in 1916 amounted to 59,907,224 linear feet, with a value of $1,865,458. During the corresponding period of 1917, this decreased to 54,737,087 feet, and the value fell to $1,172,687. During the eleven months ended with last November, however, this loss was regained, and more, the total shipments amounting to 60,245,054 feet, with a value of $1,502,023.

Falling Off in Exposed Film.

Exports of exposed film, however, are considerably lower than during the eleven-month periods of either of the two preceding years. In 1916, the total was 142,672,556 feet, and the value $6,440,624. This decreased in 1917 to 100,612,493 feet, with a value of $5,735,371. The total for 1918 was still lower, being but 72,323,729 feet, valued at $4,140,564.

The greater part of this loss was in business with the United Kingdom, whose imports of American film fell from 77,884,168 feet, valued at $3,497,531, in 1916, to 27,186,839 feet, with a value of $2,156,645, in 1917, and to 13,796,235 feet, worth $906,782, in 1918. The next greatest loss was in France, where imports dropped from 15,489,229 feet, valued at $509,786, in 1916, to 9,882,113 feet worth $260,126, in 1917, and then to 1,093,927 feet, valued at $184,583, in 1918. This record loss was closely followed by that of Italy. Exports to that country in 1916 amounted to 11,046,155 feet, worth $275,469; the following year, they had dropped to 10,092,303 feet, valued at $255,531, and last year, the bottom dropped out and they fell to 782,297 feet, worth $29,307.

Canada and Newfoundland and Labrador show but little change, despite the war. Shipments to Canada during the eleven months of 1916 were 11,700,424 feet, worth $881,674. In 1917 they had increased to 13,256,186 feet, valued at $1,008,348, but last year dropped back to 11,319,681 feet, with a value of $823,414. Newfoundland and Labrador have run fairly evenly during the last two years, the figures being: 1916, 1,706,220 feet, $85,472; 1917, 1,274,600 feet, $47,221; 1918, 1,288,305 feet, $42,973.

South America Picking Up.

The war has developed two new markets for our films—good ones, too. Argentina, during the eleven months ended with last November, took 4,786,034 feet of film, valued at $193,016, and Brazil, during the same period, took 2,733,108 feet, worth $163,460.

Australia shows an increasing appreciation of American films, as evidenced by her increased imports. In 1916, that country took 6,590,959 feet, valued at $496,604. This increased in 1917 to 8,687,340 feet, worth $597,209, and another increase in 1918 brought the total to 10,469,565 feet, valued at $538,991. Exports to the other countries, not specified by name, amounted to 18,255,401 feet, valued at $694,088, in 1916. This increased considerably in 1917, to 30,233,112 feet, worth $1,410,291, but fell last year to 26,054,577 feet, with a value of $1,258,038.

Imports of film of all classes have reached very low marks. This may mean that America is becoming able to supply herself with necessary film, or it may mean that we have stopped importing because of the war and will resume as soon as possible. The coming year, with all restrictions lifted, will show which is correct.

Imports of sensitized but not exposed film which in the eleven months ended with November, 1916, amounted to 35,252,682 feet, valued at $523,588, increased in 1917 to 68,542,212 feet, worth $1,023,692, but dropped in 1918 to 24,228,386 feet, with a value of $397,239.

Negatives imported in 1916 amounted to 863,371 feet, worth $266,442. This dropped in 1917 to 846,060 feet, valued at $358,688, and again last year to 375,717 feet, worth $161,587.

Positive film, which in 1916 amounted to 4,497,747 feet, worth $208,564, and in 1917 to 4,040,184 feet, valued at $228,353, last year had dropped to 1,795,896 feet, with a value of $121,269. LINZ.

Secretary Baker Praises "The Heart of Humanity"

NEWTON D. BAKER, Secretary of War, was a guest of the National Press Club, Washington, Monday night, January 20, at the first showing outside of New York of "The Heart of Humanity," produced by the Universal Film Company under the direction of Allen Holubar.

The picture was brought to the Press Club through the courtesy of Lawrence Beatus, manager of Loew's Palace theater, where it will be shown throughout next week.

In a short talk following the picture Secretary Baker said: "It is a valuable picture. It brings to us in a forceful manner the sacrifices which were necessary both at the front and at the fireside, to free the world and place love in its rightful place. The picture has touched me deeply and, as it speaks toward the end, I hope that it will help in bringing about some sort of League of Nations, some sort of banding together of civilized men, which will chain the hyena gone mad with lust and ambition."

The audience included some of the best known of the men now prominent in the public eye. Among these were officers of the Army and Navy and a large number of members of Congress. "Uncle Joe" Cannon, Congressmen F. W. Dallinger, of Massachusetts, a member of the House Committee on Education and Labor; Cassius Dowell, Harold Knutson, Joseph Walsh, W. W. Lufkin, B. E. Sweet, Frank W. Woods, and others whose faces are familiar in Congress. H. E. Wales, manager of Universal, was also present with Mr. Beatus.

Public Showing for "Made in America."

It is announced that the first trade, organization and press showing of "Made in America" will be given late next week. The entire series, eight reels, will be displayed. Members of the greater city's press, trade men and officials of the "Big Seven" war charities will be invited to be present.

"Made in America" is an Ashley Miller production and is published and distributed by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation through Pathe Exchange, Inc. It was produced with the co-operation of the United States Government. Just where the showing will take place is not known at present, but it will be held in one of the large halls of Manhattan. The series will be released February 16.

RUBBERNECKING IN FILMLAND

Los Angeles Correspondent Personally Conducts Our Readers Through the West Coast Studios

By Giebler

A LARGE hectic week has just passed. A week of portentous doings; seven days filled with mystery, mergers, combinations, dramatic moments and the Lord knows what all.

The man who declares the surface hasn't been scratched should have been here. He would not only have seen the surface scratched, but the entire hide pulled off the movies and hung on the fence to dry.

Dame Rumor—or dam rumor—since everybody is leaving off the final e these days when they speak of that lady—has been on the job morning, noon and night, and ably assisted by her two efficient daughters, Gossype and Scandell.

As a consequence of all this I have become a habitue of hotels, a hanger-on in hallways, a lounger in lobbies, a chair warmer, a buttonholer, a bore—an infernal nuisance of the most persistent type.

Right here is a good place to set a few kind words next to pure reading matter, in appreciation of the Hotel Alexandria; to thank the managers for their polite patience, for their nice leather chairs, and the nice marble pillars that felt as soft as pillows at times when the leaning was better than the sitting, and for the wear and tear to the feelings of one bell-hop whom I perverted into inserting himself and my card into the august presence of the First National Exhibitors convened in solemn session.

Alexandria Stages a Comedy?

The Hotel Alexandria may not be aware of the fact, but it staged one of the most amusing comedies, one of the most melo melodramas, and one of the most tragic tragedies, all rolled into one, that has ever been put on, during the days that have just passed.

Thirteen members of the First National Association were at the Alexandria, and while the seven members that made up the executive board held their deliberate meetings up in Parlor A on the mezzanine floor of the hotel the guessers and the gossipers, and the sages and the prophets were busy in the lobby below.

Did Dave Griffith eat a little snack of lunch with Sam Goldwyn, a merger was seen in the offing. Did J. D. Williams stop Adolph Zukor in the lobby and say, "Dolph, this certainly beats New York for climate," the nucleus for a new combination was born.

Did Winnie Sheehan shake hands with Hiram Abrams and ask him politely for news from Broadway, the name of William Fox was written large on the dope sheets. Did John Kunsky smile to himself when he thought of the Detroit weather he was missing, it was joy for some big deal that had just been put over.

Eyes Follow Mysterious Strangers.

Did those two mysterious strangers from the East, Hiram Abrams and Benny Schulberg, parade their slow and solemn way along the length of the lobby, eyes were rolled in their direction and bated voices asked: "What have those two wise birds got up their sleeves?"

New horoscopes for the stars were cast every hour.

"The First National will control all the stars." "The First National is going to form a combination with Famous Players, Artcraft, Goldwyn, Metro, Fox, and after that they'll tell the stars just where to get off in the matter of salary."

"Doug has signed up with First National." "Doug has done no such of a thing." "Charlie's going to Europe." "Syd's going to make pictures for First National." "Mary will renew her contract with First National." "Mary will not." "Mary may, but Charlie won't." "See me in the morning, and I'll give you the whole story." "Don't quote me, but here's the right dope." "It's worth my job if this gets out, but I don't mind telling you that something big is coming off."

Thus it went on all day long, from getting up time until hay time—everywhere—all over the big hotel, upstairs and down, in parlor, bedroom and bath, lobby, grill, tearoom, candy shop and barber shop, until voices grew husky and imaginations were worn to a frazzle.

Syd Chaplin Held the Real Party.

And in the meantime, on Tuesday evening, three of the most important bones of contention got a couple more bones together and staged a little party out at the residence of Sydney Chaplin.

Of course, Charlie was there, and Doug and Mrs. Charlotte Pickford, who represented Mary because Mary was ill with the flu, and Bill Hart and D. W. Griffith. It was a most enthusiastic little gathering, and it lasted until late at night but when it was all over, film history had been made, and every slate that had been written on the possible results of the week needed a wet sponge.

Wednesday the news of the meeting began to sift through here and there. Telephones were busy; corridor conferences were held; vociferous denials were made.

I got to the Fairbanks studio right in the thick of things. Doug was sizzling around like a bottle of old-fashioned soda pop.

To Put Distributing Profits into Film.

"Happiest man in the country," he said. "We are doing what we have all wanted to do for years. This meeting of the First National and all the talk of combinations and mergers and controlling the stars as though we were chattels to be bought and sold, has brought it to a head. We are going to make pictures, and make them as we want to, without the hampering restraints of set dates of release, and we are going to put the distributing profits into the pictures, where they belong."

Sydney Chaplin came in just then with an important looking paper in his hand. Three signatures were already on the document, the names of Fairbanks, Griffith and Hart.

"All ready?" asked Doug. "Come on. Let's go. Let's get it all finished."

Go After Remaining Signatures.

Syd buttoned the paper on the inside of his coat, and Doug, telling me to Scenes from "The Millionaire Pirate" (Universal).

"Come along and get this thing straight," four of us, Doug, Syd, Bennie Ziedman and I piled into the machine—and off.

We stopped at Charlie Chaplin's house first, and at this point I am sorry to say that Benny eloped with the car to do some necessary phoning to a newspaper that was waiting for authority to set a seven-column display head and spread red ink all over its front pages in announcing the combination.

But before the ink of Charlie Chaplin's name was dry on the paper, Doug had borrowed Henry Bergman's car and we were on our way to the home of Little Mary.

And in fifteen minutes, at 2:45 P. M., on Wednesday, January 15, 1919, Mary Pickford's name completed the five signatures to the articles of agreement entered into by the United Artists' Association.

SELF-RELIANCE DEMANDED OF SELECT MEN

Exchange Managers Are Put Upon Own Resources To Secure Best Results from Their Territory

THE twenty-one men who are the executive heads of Select Pictures Corporation branches in as many cities throughout the United States are all distinguishable by one significant characteristic. This quality is self-reliance. Among the many considerations which have led to the selection of such individual man for the post he occupies at the head of some certain Select branch office, this consideration has been paramount: Is this man able to stand on his own feet? Can he think and act for himself? Has he independence of spirit? Has he initiative? In short—is he self-reliant?

Each Select branch manager conducts his territory as though the business of that particular exchange was his own. The home office does not hurry him with a thousand minor considerations, but dictates matters of general policy, arranges basic conditions for work, seeks to be a guide and a counsellor to the branch manager and to support his efforts. That is all.

Responsibility? Yes, and Authority.

The home office looks for results. To the branch manager is left the selection of ways and means. To the branch manager is left the choice between alternatives. To him, as far as possible, are left the decisions on contracts. Time and again when a branch manager is confronted with a situation in which the two courses which lie open to him seem to offer about similar advantages, the home office advises him in some such language as this:

"You are on the spot. You know your territory and the conditions obtaining in it better than we do. You know what will be the best thing for you to do, the best for your office and therefore the best for Select. We leave the decision in your hands."

The Select branch manager who cannot under such circumstances successfully exercise initiative and judgment of choice does not long remain at the head of a Select territory. Self-reliance is indispensible. The Select home office takes the stand that it has furnished its branch managers the tools and instruments necessary to the pursuit of their business. The use of these instruments is left to the men themselves. According to his skill can each one of them carve his and the company's success.

Happiness a Constructive Force.

There is another phase of the Select sales organization which gives a great deal of satisfaction to the officers of the parent organization. This is the happy frame of mind which is the habit among Select's branch executives. The managers, as a whole, form a happy family in which there is apparent none of the bickering, the strife, and the petty jealousy which have not been wholly absent from some of the notable sales organizations in the motion picture industry. Select believes that happiness is a positive and constructive force. Discontent breeds no sales—unless it be that healthy discontent which flows from a consciousness that one has not put forth one's best effort.

A reflection of these considerations is seen strikingly in the fact that the men at the head of Select's branch offices change infrequently. Some of these executives—in fact a majority of them—have been branch managers ever since the Select exchanges were established.

The splendid showing made by Select Pictures Corporation in the matter of net film rentals during the past six or seven weeks is due, Select feels, largely to the high quality of salesmanship which resides in the Select branch offices. That intelligent effort which is based on confidence in the high quality of the product which one has to sell, self-reliance, a happy frame of mind which fears no nagging hindrance from the home office, and a determination to administer the company's affairs as though they were one's own has been the determining element in putting Select's business over the top.

READ THIS AND PITY THE SCENARIOIST

Not Only Will He Be Unable to Drink Rum but Carl Laemmle Won't Let Him Even Write About It

By Carl Laemmle.

ON July 1 the nation becomes dry. Before this war measure is revoked the new constitutional amendment prohibiting traffic in liquor will go into effect. In other words, the liquor business in the United States has come at last to its end.

Nothing becomes obsolete, even archaic, as rapidly as a custom that has been outlawed. Screen and stage will both be compelled to discard the saloon, the private cellarette, the aristocratic buffet and all other liquor-dispensing institutions and devices, public or private, as incidents in the development of plots for plays or cinemas.

No longer will it be possible for the scenarist or playwright to send his hero for consolation to the cup that cheers. No longer will the plot maker be able to steel the nerves of his desperate villain by plying him with drink. No longer will dark conspiracies be hatched round the tables of drink emporiums.

John Barleycorn has been a good friend to the writer of plays and scenarios. He has helped them out of many a difficulty. And now—John Barleycorn is dead. He will serve no more.

A play or a photodrama depending even slightly upon the liquor crutch for scene or incident or motivating or stimulating cause will be, in a few months, passe. The critical, observing it, will immediately label it as a play of yesterday. It will bear a date tag reading "Prior to July, 1919." It will not be a play or a photodrama of today—of the new today. It will be a production of the past—of a bygone era. It will be what the critics call "historical," in the same class with "costume" plays.

Attention of all Universal scenarists and directors has been called to these facts. Because of them we have already pigeonholed some good scenarios. It can't be helped. The new day brings its new order, and we must labor accordingly. Scenarists who, in the future submit their products to Universal should likewise bear the facts in mind. The name of John Barleycorn is no longer on the programs.

Salesmen Root and Donnell Buy Kansas City Theatre

WELCOME two new ones into the circle of Kansas City exhibitors! They are well worth knowing—and they will be heard from, you may be sure. Root & Donnell is the new firm which has bought the Bancroft Theatre, and is starting out to make money with it.

Mr. Root is a former varnish salesman, and Mr. Donnell has been selling bonds. Both have been highly successful in those specialty lines. And they bring to the moving picture theatre business the best class of talent for studying a business, and for figuring out ways to sell service.

They frankly admit that they don't know a thing about conducting a moving picture theatre—and they promise that they are going to ask questions, and seek advice, until they learn the technical side.

"They are live ones," said an exchange manager. "They look good to me."

Laemmle Appoints Industrial Men.

Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, has ordered an enlargement of the industrial forces of the organization during 1919. In its first year the industrial department under the direction of Harry Lavey has made such rapid strides that Mr. Laemmle is appointing special industrial representatives among Universal exchanges all over the country.

Among the most recent productions prepared by the industrial department is "Keep the Home Fires Burning," produced under the supervision of the American Defense Society.

COMMUNITY BOOKING GOES OVER

Fox Plan Opens Increased Possibilities for Cashing In on Exceptional Features When Several Theatres Play Same Attraction Day and Date—Idea Succeeds in New York and Brooklyn

THE William Fox community booking plan again has demonstrated its success from the exhibitor standpoint, acording to a statement issued from the Fox offices. Manager I. Edelstein, of the Mount Morris Theatre —who, with several other managers in 116th street, Manhattan, ran "Salome" on the same days last week—is quoted as expressing great satisfaction with the result of the experiment.

"I could not have done a bigger business," Mr. Edelstein told a representative of the William Fox Exhibitors Service Bureau. "My house was crowded, and I am sure that the wide publicity given to the picture all along the street as a result of several theatres playing 'Salome' simultaneously was a help. Special features always bring in many new patrons, and I am strongly in favor of any plan that will give them the widest possible publicity. The more new patrons secured in a section, the better it is for the exhibitor."

Manager Emil Groth, of the Regent Theatre, is represented to have been equally well pleased. His house has large capacity and is only two blocks from the Mount Morris.

"Simultaneous" Idea Expanding.

The idea behind the community or concentrated booking plan is that, through simultaneous playing of one picture, several houses of a neighborhood or a city obtain the advantage of cumulative publicity and widespread advertising. The exhibitors, it is argued, get the full value of the initial announcement publicity, the regular patrons of all the houses obtain a first run showing, and the transient public is attracted in large numbers to all of the theatres because of the increased area and strength of the advertising.

Manager Louis Rosenbluh, of the New York Fox Exchange, who has introduced the idea in this territory, announces that it is being put to further test this week in parts of New York state outside the metropolis, and also in New Jersey. "It resolves itself into a matter of efficiency," Mr. Rosenbluh said. "Look at it from any standpoint, and you get the same result.

"No business can reach the limit of prosperity running part time; yet what we have been doing in the motion picture industry is to produce fine features and then book them so that only five or ten per cent. of the possible patrons in a given section see the productions. We book one theatre, giving it first run to the exclusion of other houses in the same section which charge the same admission price.

A Catastrophe, Not a Run.

"Use of the word 'run' in this connection, however, is a joke. Think of calling a three days' engagement of an attraction on the speaking stage a 'run.' That wouldn't be a 'run'—it would be a catastrophe.

"If any one picture house would give a production a real 'run'—would book it for an indefinite period, as long as business held good—then the old plan of exclusive bookings might be justified. One house then would reach in time a fair percentage of the theatre-going population. But under existing conditions no single house can book on this basis, because the exhibitor has led his regular patronage to expect more or less frequent changes of program.

"The absurdity of the old way of booking as applied to big features can be well illustrated with a question: what would be our opinion of a producer of a recognized success on the speaking stage if, after he had shown the play for three days, he should suddenly take it off while still doing capacity business, in order to make way for an untried production? Yet that is what has been done right along in the motion picture business.

Booking Should Keep Pace.

"This, perhaps, was all very well in the days of the 'two-reelers' with which our business started—when moving pictures simply were 'moving pictures'—but we now have reached a period in which we are producing great features that individually have patronage possibilities. Our booking methods, from both the exhibitor and producer standpoint, should be keeping pace with production advancement.

"The remedy is at hand. I predict that the time is not far distant when the whole country will be divided into zones and exclusive franchise rights will be based on ability and willingness to get 100 per cent. return from each zone. Fine features cannot continue available if, through obsolete booking methods, they are shown to only a small proportion of the theatre-going population.

"This plan I am advocating and trying to put into effect in this territory helps the exhibitor without upsetting house policy. He follows no competitor, and none of his competitors need follow him. The small house," said Mr. Rosenbluh in conclusion, "has an equal chance with the large one, and both large and small houses benefit from new patronages which, under present conditions, is lost to them."

OLYMPIA'S ALL HET UP OVER EPIDEMIC

Mayor and Council and Governor and County and State Boards and Lord Knows What Are Excited

Seattle, January 16.

OLYMPIA, the state capital of Washington, has been the scene of several controversies this week over the combating of the influenza. There are only three or four cases reported each day, but the mayor and councilmen of the town decided that all public meeting places should be closed last week for the second time.

Thereupon the theatre managers met and went to see the council in a body. The councilmen were persuaded that it was better to let the theatres open and help to educate the people by slides about how to care for themselves. Accordingly the theatres were allowed to open next morning. Immediately, however, the governor, who is presiding at the regular meeting of the legislature, which has just gone into session, asked the state health commissioner to make an investigation of local conditions.

This the doctor did and recommended that attendance at theatres and all public places be limited to half the seating capacity, that the rule of quarantining all cases be established, that children from influenza-infected families be forbidden to attend school for three weeks after the recovery of the last case, and various other regulation regarding dances and hotels.

County Board Throws Down Doctor.

The county board of health, who were supposed to adopt these regulations, refused to do it; and the state health commissioner has taken the matter up with the state board of health. Before this body can enforce the ruling over the refusal of the county board, it is necessary for the former to meet and formally issue an order. Actual legislative attendance is expected from the limited seating rule, but both House and Senate galleries fall under it.

In a talk with E. A. Zabel, manager of the Ray Theatre, the chairman of the county board promised him that, unless a like ruling was enforced in Tacoma, Seattle, and other cities and counties of the state, the Thurston County health commission would not accept any special restrictions on Olympia from the state commissioner. In taking this stand the Thurston County health officials have accepted the refutation put forward by the theatre managers of the governor's argument that the assembling of the legislature at this time creates an extraordinary condition that demands an emergency measure.

Why Close Olympia if Tacoma's Open?

The exhibitors pointed out to the commissioners that, while the theatres were closed in Olympia last week, a special train was provided each evening to take the legislators to Tacoma, where they were subjected to greater dangers at theatres and social gatherings in that city than they would have met in Olympia; because there are more cases of influenza reported each day in that city than in the state capital, and the crowds are much greater and more conglomerate. The theatre men insisted that, if restrictions were placed on amusements in Olympia, the legislators and their families would go to other nearby cities, like Tacoma and Seattle, and would constantly be subjecting themselves and other residents of the state capital to the danger of the epidemic. The situation will continue unsettled until after the meeting of state health board next meek, when it will be decided one way or the other.

COPELAND TALKS TO BROOKLYN DINERS

New York Health Commissioner, Guest of League at Victory Banquet, Thanks Exhibitors for Aid

THE Motion Picture Exhibitors League of Brooklyn and Long Island held its Victory Banquet at the Imperial, Brooklyn, on Tuesday evening, January 21. Dr. Royal S. Copeland, health commissioner of New York, was the guest of honor, in recognition of his wisdom in keeping the theatres and schools of New York City open during the recent epidemic and the attending benefit to the exhibitors.

After an address of welcome by Rudolph Sanders, president of the League, Dr. Copeland was introduced and said, in part: "A prominent business man said to me, 'If you don't close the schools and theatres I will have you indicted.' In reply, I said: 'I will also close the department stores and shut down the railroads'."

"I consider the well ventilated theatres safer than most homes. I wish to acknowledge the great assistance given the Board of Health by the use of your screens in the dissemination of propaganda; proper rules of warding off contagion and using all precaution against it, in the home and elsewhere."

The commissioner gave Mayor Hyland full credit for standing back of him in all he did, and added that the Mayor is in favor of motion pictures of the right sort and was a friend of all law-abiding exhibitors.

District Attorney Against Censorship.

District Attorney Harry Lewis was the next speaker. He said, "You have no board of censors in Brooklyn and that is a sure sign you are showing decent pictures. If you show proper pictures you will have no need of censors. I am not in favor of a board of censors. It will only place a great burden of taxation upon you; its members will draw salaries, and the public will have to pay them. So it is up to you. I do not say this to curry favor, for, believe me, I would not deal leniently with any exhibitor who came before me for violation of the laws of decency and morality. I am in favor of the right kind of pictures and always will be." He gave much credit to Sydney Cohn, the state president of the New York Exhibitors League, for his efforts in behalf of the exhibitors.

In quick succession, William E. Kelly, county clerk; William Brandt, Borough President Riegelman, John Manheimer, I. E. Chadwick and Attorney Gustavus Rogers of the Fox Film Corporation were called upon by Mr. Sanders to address the guests.

There were very nearly two hundred persons in attendance, among whom were the following:

Pathe Asks Dismissal of Suit Filed by Protective

IN the suit filed in the United States District Court by the Protective Amusement Company against Pathe Exchange, Inc., involving the film rights to the drama entitled "A Japanese Nightingale," the film company has filed its answer denying the main allegations in the complaint that it intringed upon the rights of the plaintiff.

The answer filed by Coudert Brothers, counsel for the film company, sets forth that the company acquired the film rights to the production from Darcy & Wolford, Inc., in September, 1917, for a consideration of $3,000 through a valid assignment giving the company exclusive rights to produce a screen version.

Darcy & Wolford, Inc., secured the film rights from Pat J. Casey, vice president of the plaintiff company, previously for $1,300, the film company alleges in the answer. Moreover, it is alleged Casey practically had entire charge of the business conducted by the plaintiff company and consequently the film company avers the plaintiff has no cause of action and asks that the suit be dismissed.

Berman Organizing New York State.

Samuel Berman, secretary of the New York State Exhibitors League, is on tour of the state, visiting towns and cities in the interest of organization. He reports a splendid response in Albany, Troy, Utica, Schenectady, Little Falls, Syracuse, Rochester and Buffalo, and feels he is justified in believing that a hundred per cent state league will be organized before he is a month older. Its attorney, Gustavus Rogers, whose vast experience in exhibitors' affairs makes his opinions authoritive, says: "I am impressed with the sane methods employed by the officers of the state league in bringing about a strong exhibitors' body. The conservative and careful manner in which they are handling the Sunday opening question gives every assurance of bringing it to a successful issue this spring."

Press Book for "Made in America."

The press book of "Made in America" is about ready to be put in the hands of the printer. It will contain a great number of valuable advertising suggestions and a deal of helpful publicity written from many angles. "Made in America" will be released February 16. It is an Ashley Miller production and is published and distributed by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation through Pathe Exchange, Inc.

EXHIBITORS TAKE OPERATORS TO COURT

Get Temporary Restraining Order Until January 23, When Each Side Is to Present Its Case

THE meeting of the Allied Amusement Association, referred to in my last letter, in the article on the moving picture operators' new demand, was held Monday noon, January 13, at Fraternity Hall, 19 West Adams street, with Peter J. Schaefer in the chair. About 150 exhibitors were present. Lewis F. Jacobson, attorney for the association, was also present and gave advice along the lines of legal action.

The meeting was called for the sole purpose of considering the situation caused by the demands of the operators, and during the discussion quite a number of the exhibitors present stated their views. It developed that although the entire matter at issue, so far as the association was concerned, had been placed in the hands of the special committee appointed for the purpose, about thirty exhibitors had signed an agreement laid before them by committees representing the operators' union, on Friday, January 10. A number of exhibitors, who signed this agreement, explained that they were influenced to do so because the operators' committees, previously referred to, represented that other exhibitors in the same localities had already signed. A number of the exhibitors who signed the agreement also claimed that they did so under threat. In a few instances, where exhibitors refused to sign the agreement, the operators were called out on strike Saturday night, January 11.

On Saturday, January 11, in response to a hurried call, quite a number of exhibitors met at the office of Peter J. Schaefer to consider the demand of the operators that their new scale must be signed on January 11, to prevent a strike on Sunday, January 12, and the closing of all the theatres. It was finally thought best to advise the signing of the operators' form of agreement, under protest, to avoid the Sunday closing and to bring up the question at the Monday meeting, which was done.

Will Institute Validity Test.

At the Monday meeting, the committee previously appointed to treat with the operators was continued, and given full power to act. Certain legal proceedings it was decided should be taken at once to test the validity of the actions of the operators.

On Thursday morning, January 16, at 10 o'clock, another meeting of the Allied Amusement Association was held in Fraternity Hall, during which Attorney Jacobson announced that he had arranged to go into court on Friday, January 17, and ask for an injunction restraining the operators from striking and thus breaking the contract under which they had been working.

The attorney took the position that as long as the conditions in the agreement entered into October 1, 1917, were being carried out by the exhibitors—and thus practiced, the agreement embraced the terms under which the operators were working. He also held that if an exhibitor had signed the so-called new agreement submitted by the operators under duress, in order to keep his house open and free from a strike on Saturday, January 11, the legality of the so-called new agreement could be questioned, and he expressed the belief that it does not supersede the agreement entered into October 1, 1917.

President Peter J. Schaefer then announced that the officers of the operators' union had invited exhibitors to attend the meeting of the union which was then in session in a hall in the Masonic Temple. As the operators had come on invitation to exhibitors' meetings on several previous occasions, it was considered that it would be only an act of courtesy on the part of exhibitors to attend, so all the exhibitors present at once proceeded to the Masonic Temple.

Exhibitors Address Operators.

On their arrival, President Reynolds, of the operators' union, received them courteously and then introduced, in order, Peter J. Schaefer, M. A. Choynski, August Krug, Samuel Gold, Joseph Hopp and Samuel Atkinson to discuss the contention between the exhibitors and the operators. The brief addresses made by these exhibitors were followed by others delivered by several of the operators, and the exchange of opinions and viewpoints apparently resulted in a better understanding between the opposing interests.

At the close of this joint meeting, the operators went into executive session, after promising to notify the Allied Amusement Association, through its officers, the decision agreed upon.

Business Agent Thomas E. Maloy, of Local 110, I. A. T. S. E., informed the writer over the phone Friday afternoon, January 27, that the result of the executive session of that body in the Masonic Temple, Thursday afternoon was: "The meeting went on record (and it was placed on the minutes) that no further business would be done with the Allied Amusement Association, but that Local 110, I. A. T. S. E., would do business direct with the individual owners of theatres only, and that no operators would be permitted to work in any houses for which the contract had not been signed."

Maloy Denies Existence of Contract.

In this phoned conversation Mr. Maloy denied that any contract had ever been made by Local 110, I. A. T. S. E., with the Allied Amusement Association on October 1, 1917, or at any other time. He denies that the A. A. A. was in existence on that date, and that the "understanding" was made by Local 110 with the members of Chicago Local, M. P. E. L. of A. and of the M. P. T. O. Association. He said he used the word "understanding" advisedly, as "no contract has ever been signed, either for five years or for five minutes, with either of the aforementioned exhibitors' organizations."

Late Friday afternoon, January 17, Attorney Lewis F. Jacobson appeared before Superior Court Judge Charles M. Foell for the Allied Amusement Association, and filed a petition for an injunction against the operators restraining them from going on strike or collecting salaries under the new agreement, which calls for 90 cents an hour and 50 cents additional each week for every 100 seats over 400. Attorney Thomas Nash appeared in court for the operators.

After argument on both sides, which lasted nearly two hours, it was agreed that a restraining order should prevail until the motion for an injunction was heard in the same court Thursday, January 23. On that date it is expected that a number of witnesses, both exhibitors and operators, will be placed on the stand.

Robertson-Cole Company Gets Close to Exhibitor

I HAD a pleasant chat with Percival M. Reynolds, traveling special representative of the Robertson-Cole Company, New York, in the Mutual office one day last week. Mr. Reynolds left New York December 28 and, in the interim, had visited Boston, Albany, Cleveland and Detroit, his next stop being Chicago, where he passed several busy days calling on Chicago exhibitors before I met him.

I became much interested in Mr. Reynolds and his work, because it touches a new angle in the relationship between the producer and the exhibitor. Mr. Reynolds is primarily interested in the exhibitor and he makes known to him that the Robertson-Cole Company desires to get into closer, confidential touch with him, not from a merely selfish motive nor yet from a wholly altruistic point of view, but simply that both may reap beneficial results from knowing and understanding each other better.

Mr. Reynolds does not try to sell the product of the Robertson-Cole Company; that he leaves to the exchange of the Exhibitors' Mutual Distributing Corporation in the locality visited. His object is to learn the needs of the exhibitor and just the kind of film subjects which his patrons like best, and also the kind they don't like. Also to learn why certain film subjects did not do so well with him as they had done with other exhibitors whom he had talked with in some other locality. In this way the Robertson-Cole Company is aiming to produce films which will make the widest possible appeal, increasing the demand for their product and at the same time winning and holding a constantly increasing number of patrons.

Giving the Exhibitor a Voice.

By this means the exhibitor advances to the position where he has an actual (though indirect) voice in the choice of stories which are used in photoplay production, and at the same time the Robertson-Cole Company is guided in its purchase of photoplays to meet the demands of the greatest number of their patrons.

The exhibitor is on the firing line of the moving picture trade, and no one is in a position to know better than he the attitude of the public toward a certain type or class of pictures at all times. There should be no guess work at this stage of the business just as to the kind of story or stories that will please the greatest number of photoplay theatregoers.

Mr. Reynolds spoke quite hopefully of the general aspect of the film business as far as exhibitors are concerned during his travels. He excepted Ohio, where "flu" conditions were bad, but tempered this by saying that the conditions were rapidly improving everywhere.

He reported encouraging receptions by exhibitors wherever he has stopped over and outspoken approval of the business methods of his firm.

After Chicago Mr. Reynolds will visit Milwaukee, Minneapolis, Indianapolis and Cincinnati and will finish his tour about the close of January. It is always pleasant to meet a gentleman of such pleasing personality as Mr. Reynolds possesses, and exhibitors and the rest of us will be glad to meet him again in the near future.

Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew Address Chicago Exhibitors

THE second "smoker review," given in the private projection room at the Chicago headquarters of Artcraft-Paramount, 845 South Wabash avenue, was held Tuesday afternoon, January 14, with a large gathering of exhibitors present, many of whom were from adjoining outside territory.

"Romance and Ring," the first two-reel comedy made by Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew for Paramount, was first run off, and it brought forth warm applause and many smiles. Following the showing of the comedy Mr. and Mrs. Drew, who were guests of honor for the occasion, interested their hearers immensely by talks on their comedy work and on what they contemplate doing in their comedy productions which are to be released in the future—one a month—to the Famous Players-Lasky organization for the ensuing year.

During their remarks they stated that they were firm in their determination not to include anything in pictures that would prove offensive to the public, and that in working out humorous situations the most careful consideration will always be given to the preservation of a wholesome atmosphere. This policy, they asserted, had greatly to do with the upbuilding of the popularity which they have been enjoying.

Columbia Theatre Site Leased for Picture House

LAST week the site of the old Inter-Ocean Building, on Monroe street, near Dearborn, was leased to William S. Barbee for a period of twenty-five years, beginning January 1, this year, at an annual rental of $50,000 for the first fifteen years, $60,000 for the succeeding five and $75,000 for the last five years.

The location was originally the site of the old Columbia Theatre, which was destroyed by fire in the later nineties. Some time ago the Ascher Brothers considered the leasing of the property for moving picture purposes, but finally concluded that the location was not just what they desired and they gave up the enterprise.

Since the lease was made it has been given out that Harry C. Moir, president of the Morrison Hotel Company, and owner of the Rose and Alcazar theatres, on West Madison street, and of the Boston, on Clark, between Washington and Madison, has secured the lease. It will be remembered that in a recent letter it was stated that Mr. Moir would erect a new theatre, seating 2,600 persons, in the addition which will be made to the Hotel Morrison in the near future.

Illinois Women's Clubs Ban Sensational Pictures

A MEETING of chairwomen of the Illinois Federation of Women's Clubs, representing over 65,000 women in this state, was held in the Hotel Morrison Thursday, January 16, for the purpose of bringing about concerted action on the part of every woman's club in Illinois against all forms of vice. Included particularly were moving pictures of the "slave" and child-birth control types.

It is the object to divert the work of every woman's club in Illinois from war-time work to that of reform and reconstruction, and pictures of the banned types specified will be fought to a finish.

It was announced during the meeting that plans have already been made for the introduction of a bill in the state Legislature at Springfield in the near future which will impose the most rigid censorship on moving pictures. It will be remembered that a similar bill was defeated in the last Legislature, but the women's clubs throughout the state are confident of success this year.

Mrs. Guy Blanchard, who was one of the most indefatigable workers for the passage of the last state censorship bill, stated during an address at Thursday's meeting:

"We are convinced that the people do not demand the sensational movie. The motion picture producers have diverted the mind of the motion-picture-going public and have made profitable a type of production that never should be shown. The people never wanted the low saloon, but still the saloon flourished and sensational movies are in the same class."

Finds "Finger of Justice" Good.

William C. McIntyre, manager of the Rose Theatre, Fayetteville, N. C., writes to Moving Picture World to report his experience with "The Finger of Justice," the film that has experienced difficulty in public showings throughout the country. Mr. McIntyre says he played the film Christmas Day to overflowing houses, and on request of 400 patrons repeated the picture on New Year's Day to further capacity attendance.

Henry Houry Finishes Bushman-Bayne Picture

THE finishing touches have just been given by Director Henry Houry to the new Vitagraph super-production starring Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne. The picture was written by Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, and Cyrus Townsend Brady.

This is the most important picture intrusted to Mr. Houry since his Vitagraph engagement and follows the splendid work he did with the Corinne-Griffith star features, which include "Loves Watches," "The Clutch of Circumstance" and "Miss Ambition."

Henry Houry came to Vitagraph with a varied experience. He hails from France and is a veteran of the great war, having seen service in the first battle of the Marne, and during the three years following was for some time on the staff of General Gouraud in campaigns of the Champagne.

He is a comedian of considerable reputation in France, having played at the Antoine-Chatelet, Sarah Bernhardt and Comedie-Francaise theatres.

He has played repertoire in London, Athens, Constantinople, Brussels and Madrid. His screen experience was gained in playing leads for Pathe and Gaumont in France and also directing some of the earlier successes for Eclipse.

One thing Director Houry kept in mind in the process of the production was the consideration of the angles of the different countries, since it is his theory that due recognition to each phase of the story and construction, with an outlook to the foreign markets, assures the possibilities of a greater success when presented in foreign countries.

GUARANTEES EXHIBITORS AGAINST LOSS

Colonel Levy of Louisville's First National Thus Demonstrates Faith in His Own Stuff

A GUARANTEE to exhibitors to make good any loss to them on productions they book from the Big Feature Rights Corporation of Louisville, owners of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit franchise for that territory, is the pledge of Colonel Fred Levy, president of the corporation.

The policy became effective on January 1. The only exceptions for which the Big Feature Rights Corporation does not assume full responsibility for exhibitor losses are those incurred as the result of strikes, epidemics or similar catastrophes.

Beyond this proviso theatre owners in Kentucky and Tennessee are assured of no monetary losses due directly to inferior quality or lack of box office value in any production they book from Colonel Levy's organization.

Apart from the fact that this guarantee is revolutionary in effect, and that it places the exchange in the position of a guarantor of profits to every account on its books, the action is epochal.

The policy was announced by Colonel Levy in a letter to Lee Goldberg, secretary and treasurer of the corporation. The letter reads:

"I have just looked over the expert's analysis of our business, and to say that I am delighted with the progress it shows is putting it mildly!

"It is particularly gratifying to note that we have on our books practically every responsible picture house in the territory in which we operate. And now that this has been accomplished, I would like to see our relations with these people cemented by making them feel that there is no better concern in the country with which to do business, that it is our policy to see that they make money on everything they get from us.

"To put it into more definite terms—if anyone should get a 'loser' from us we will make the loss good on the next picture, excepting where the loss is due to a strike, an epidemic or a catastrophe of any sort. I think it would be well for you to devise a slogan conveying this idea, something similar to 'You must make money on our features or we won't do business with you.'"

The policy was announced by Mr. Goldberg in the form of a letter to every exhibitor in Kentucky and Tennessee.

"It brought the quickest and biggest response I have ever known on a piece of mail matter," said Mr. Goldberg. "Exhibitor comments on it vary in form and construction, but I have not yet received a reply in which the writer has not voiced the basic thought that Colonel Levy's guarantee is the first real, definite form of standardization they have met in the motion picture business.

"Briefly, it means that if any exhibitor, running a production booked out of our office, can satisfy us that he actually lost money on the transaction he can collect it in the form of a deduction on the next attraction for which he contracts. There is to be no red tape, no arguing and wrangling, no stalling, and no excuses. We have made the guarantee, and we will back it up to the limit."

The guarantee policy applies to all of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit attraction that are being booked by the Big Feature Rights Corporation, as well as to the state rights productions to which Kentucky and Tennessee territory has been purchased by Colonel Levy's concern.

Galveston Shipping Boom Makes Exhibitors Smile

CAMOUFLAGED in all the hues of the rainbow great ocean freighters are pulling up to Galveston wharves for the first time since U-boat piracy made shipping risks hazardous a year or so ago. Thousands of workers, stevedores, shipping office employees, seamen, marine insurance men and all the multiplicity of trades which flock to an active waterfront are again in evidence at the Gulf port, which is on the boom now fighting has ceased.

"Galveston moving picture show exhibitors are enjoying a business unprecedented," declares C. E. Buchanan of Metro, who has been on a business trip to the great Texas port. "They expect that with the resumption of activities on the waterfront things will continue to swing their way indefinitely. Indications are that some new motion picture theatres will be erected in Galveston before many months."

Mr. Buchanan's trip took him also to Port Arthur, Orange and Beaumont, in the heart of the shipbuilding industry of the Southwest. He declares that red-hot rivets are still flashing and the pneumatic hammers are rattling with an energy as fierce as in wartime. Discharged soldiers are finding work in the Gulf coast shipyards, and there is no let-up in building a merchant fleet for America. The shipbuilding towns which boomed during the past few months are still prospering, and motion picture exhibitors, now that building restrictions are off, have architects busy planning for new theatre space through remodeling and by new structures.

FOX.

Miss Anthony Weds Army Man.

Clairette Anthony, the well known poster artist and magazine illustrator and the latest "find" in motion pictures, January 15 became the wife of Captain Howard Chesebrough Okio, of the Fourteenth cavalry, now on the Mexican border, after a courtship of five days.

The wedding was the culmination of a romance which took place in the Famous Players-Lasky studio in New York City, following a visit by the captain.

Geffen Resigns at Rialto-Rivoli.

Lewis S. Geffen has resigned as assistant to the director of publicity at the Rialto and Rivoli theatres. Mr. Geffen's future activities are yet to be announced, although it is understood he has made an important editorial connection. He joined the Rialto-Rivoli staff in 1917 as assistant to Hamish McLaurin, who is now abroad with the American Red Cross.

BREGSTEIN VISITS MONTREAL HOUSES

World's Traveling Representative Finds Good Business Being Handled by Canadian Exhibitors

NAT BREGSTEIN, travelling representative of Moving Picture World, has been touring the larger cities of the Dominion of Canada during the past month and has by this time covered the territory from Montreal to Windsor. In subsequent reports we will print references to his visits to Ottawa, Hull, Toronto, and cities in Canada West, where he called upon exhibitors and exchangemen, asked questions, gained information—and picked up subscriptions to Moving Picture World. For the present we confine his reports to his Canvass of Montreal.

Loew's Million Dollar Theatre was an "eye opener" to our man, although he went direct from New York to Montreal. Vaudeville and pictures are combined here with Manager Mills hustling. The largest organ ever put into a theatre in Canada is under contract and soon to be delivered.

Keith's Imperial, management of Mr. Conover, exclusively pictures, changed twice weekly; 12-piece orchestra and an organ costing $20,000. Daily matinees, 10 to 25; evenings, 15 to 50. Manager Conover is an expert and aggressive advertiser, with resulting good business to report.

New Grand, George Rotsky manager for Messrs. Allen. Was the first M. P. theatre in Montreal and business has never been better. Downtown house, but, strangely enough, gets more neighborhood trade than transients.

Holman; management Harry Pomeroy; 1,200; 15 to 25 cents. Right down where the crowd is and gets good patronage. Manager Pomeroy is great believer in newspaper advertising and handles his copy cleverly.

Midway; George Gladianos; congested downtown section; 1,200; 5 and 10 matinees; 10 and 15 evenings; excellent business. It was this house that gave the Broadway Theatre, New York, its present manager, Kashin.

Globe and Canada; both neighborhood houses; 1,000; 10 and 15; Joe Block, manager; excellent business.

Regent; one of the prettiest houses in Montreal; Frank H. Warnicker, manager; 1,025; select patronage; matinees, 10; nights, 15 to 30 cents.

Strand, Regent and Moulin Rouge; George Canetakos, managing director (best known in film trade as Mr. Nicholas); exceptionally good business reported for all three theatres. An up-to-date exhibitor in all particulars.

Mr. Silvio Lectures His Pictures.

Ouimetoscope; 800; 5 to 15 cents. Alex. Silvio, manager, credits good business to his permanent policy of lecturing on pictures (in French). His lecture on Fox's "Les Miserables" seemed to please his patrons as much as did the picture. The applause went for both.

Henry E. Jodoin, manager of Moulin Rouge, 700; 5 to 15; makes a feature of especially worked out slides. Mr. Jodoin came from New England to Montreal eight years ago (speaking only English), and is now as proficient in French as a native.

Others among the fifty or more Montreal theatres visited by Mr. Bregstein were: Crystal Palace, A. St. Germain, and Mount Royal, same management; Connaught, J. P. Smythe; Victoria Hall, Mr. Cousineau; Rex, A. Savatonio; Electra, Mr. Mercier; and Fairyland, Mr. Sperdakos, one of Montreal's most experienced managers.

Calls Upon the Exchanges.

H. Hooper, for Exhibitors' Mutual, just arrived and is making his way into some good business.

Montreal Exchange Managers' Association keeps the exchangemen in touch with the changing situation through frequent meetings.

Mr. West, manager for Fox, very optimistic and full of business. One of the late changes in the office staff was the promotion of James Pearson from shipping clerk to booker and salesman.

Canadian Universal, management of Phil A. Hazza, complains only that it is difficult to get films enough through to meet demands. One interesting exhibit in this office is a frame filled with checks that have been returned from various exhibitors—an argument for advance payments.

Wallace A. Sault has lately been shifted from Toronto to Montreal in the service of Exhibitors' Mutual. He's an eight-year-older in film business.

Eleven men travel in the interest of the Perkins Electric Company, sales agents for Power's and Simplex machines. General Manager Perkins reports an excellent 1918 business despite conditions; 200 machines. Recent installation are two Power machines in the Rex and two Simplex in the Family. That Mr. Perkins is a good "boss," witness a trip at company expense, to the south, by Alex. G. Miller, his Montreal manager, in recognition of good service.

Mr. Bregstein also made calls upon Exchange Managers Gagnier (Vitagraph); O'Loughlin (Regal Films and Suskind (F. P.-L.); all reporting business brisk. Montreal theatres show seven days a week with daily matinees and are getting the crowds—particularly in the downtown section.

Floyd Brown Says:

A FEW years ago an exhibitor in a remote hill town of Southern Kentucky exemplified the principle upon which every successful exhibitor must found his business. This hick-town Socrates of the silent art was a plain man of small words, slight of stature and uninspiring in appearance, but he wielded the power of a monarch in handling the public. He knew their weak spot as well as Charlie Chaplin and they flocked to his theatre at his command.

An abandoned church was his playhouse. The bell which formerly called the people to prayer was his newspaper. When he had a program of extraordinary merit which he was certain would measure up to his standard he would ring the bell.

This full page ad, disseminated, not by wireless but by a still great power, the mighty power of confidence, reverberated throughout the valley, and the people answered.

President Wilson's famous humanity messages were no more potent in appeal than this communication, for the people had implicit faith in the sincerity of its origin, and the promise which echoed from every hillside was fulfilled in the presence of a throng.

This philosopher of the screen was an advertiser.

FIRST NATIONAL IS STILL IN SESSION

Adolph Zukor Believes Stabilizing Merger Is Desirable—Tally Says Circuit Stands Alone

THE second week of the meeting of the First National Exhibitors, which began on January 6 in Los Angeles, was marked with less strenuous action than characterized the first week's session.

The widely circulated story to the effect that steps had been taken in New York weeks ago for an arrangement for Paramount and Artcraft films to be distributed through the First National's theatres, and that the final arrangements for this plan were now being worked out, is denied.

Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players and Artcraft, when asked if a combination between his companies and the First National was to be formed, said:

"Some sort of a combination between the bigger producers and distributers, something that would serve to stabilize conditions and discourage the Bolshivik element in the industry, would be very desirable, but so far nothing but idealistic and impracticable plans have been proposed."

T. L. Tally, vice-president of the First National, says:

"There is no alliance, nor any thought of forming any such combine. The First National stands alone. We have been having a conference, talking and planning, and watching the other fellows plan."

The same sentiment was expressed by J. D. Williams, of the First National.

"The First National is already a strong amalgamation," he said. "We own 200 theatres, and are affiliated with 600 more, all first run houses. We will not be dominated by any one."

First National Unaffected by Deal.

Mr. Williams, in speaking of the action of Fairbanks, Chaplin, Hart, Griffith and Mary Pickford, in forming their own producing and distributing combination, declares that the First National will not be affected.

"We have contracts with Mr. Chaplin for six more pictures. Of course these will be delivered to us. Miss Pickford will also deliver the pictures due under her contract. At the expiration of these contracts it was up to the stars to form whatever new alliances they saw fit, and their present action does not affect us. In fact, we congratulate the five stars. We believe their move is for the good of the industry and we most heartily agree with them that the public wants real pictures, and not the machine-made stuff. We expect that after the expiration of their contracts with us, we will be able to purchase their pictures as in the past. Certainly their films will be run in the first run houses of our circuit."

Will Buy Star's Pictures.

T. L. Tally, in commenting on the move of the stars, said:

"We are not hurt a bit. I always did believe in paying the stars all they asked for, and the First National still stands hand in hand with the stars, and still hopes to buy their pictures if they wish to release that way."

In spite of all the turmoil that is going on, the First National Exhibitors are enjoying the weather and looking at the sights of Southern California in between meetings. Vice President Tally has taken them to the Riverside orange groves and other points of interest.

Both Mary and Jack Pickford have been ill nearly all the time the visiting exhibitors have been in town, and as a consequence they did not get to see these two of their stars at work, but they have watched Anita Stewart making scenes on the top of Mount Lowe and other places, and were entertained by Lois Weber and Miss Stuart at an al fresco luncheon at the Weber Studios on Monday, Jan. 13.

Cameramen Form Society to Rise Standard of Art

AN organization, composed of the foremost of the moving picture photographers in the Los Angeles film colony, has been formed with the object of raising the standard of photographic art in motion pictures. It will be known as the American Society of Cinematographers.

Phil Rosen, photographer for George Loane Tucker, was elected president of the society; Charles Rosher, of the Mary Pickford Company, first vice president; Homer Scott, Harold Bell Wright Company, second vice president; Billy Foster, treasurer, and Victor Milner, William S. Hart studio, secretary.

On the board of fifteen governors are some of the best known cameramen in the industry, including Dal Clawson, Lois Weber's cameraman; Percy Hilburn, of Goldwyn; J. D. Jennings and Fred Granville, Fox; Robert Newhard, of the Dustin Farnum Company; Walter Griffin, National; Gene Gaudio, Metro; Guy Wilkey, with the Bessie Barriscale Company; Arthur Edeson, with Clara Kimball Young, and Joe August, of the Hart plant.

The motto of the club is loyalty, progress and art, and members of the organization will report upon each new feature that appears, when discussions and criticisms will be in order. Nearly a thousand dollars was subscribed at the first meeting to launch the society. Membership in the organization will be strictly by invitation.

Final Meeting of the M. P. W. S. A.

A final meeting of the Motion Picture War Service Association was held in Choral Hall, Clune's Auditorium, on Sunday afternoon, January 12, to wind up the affairs of the society and to return all funds in excess of $20,000 to the original subscribers.

The meeting was addressed by D. W. Griffith, Dustin Farnum, Douglas Fairbanks and Cecil De Mille. A talk was also made by Raymond Blathwaite, of London, who told of his work in behalf of the children of the blind soldiers.

Writer Gives Dinner for Zukor.

Jeanie MacPherson gave a dinner in honor of Adolph Zukor at her home one evening recently, and among the guests were Mary Pickford, Mary Miles Minter and her mother, Mrs. Shelby, Mrs. Charles Ray, Messrs. Zukor, Bayard Veiller, Edgar Selwyn, John Flynn, Douglas Fairbanks, Mr. and Mrs. George Beban and Miss Kaye Laurel. After dinner the party motored to one of the beach cafes for an evening of dancing as the guests of Mr. Zukor. Later in the week Mr. Zukor entertained the party at dinner at the Hotel Alexandria.

$2,000 Worth of Films Destroyed.

At the Goldwyn distributing offices on Olive street a few days ago an explosion destroyed films valued at more than $2,000 and caused minor damages to the building. The fire was extinguished before it gained much headway.

Presents Wife with $9,000 Car.

Jack Pickford got up from his sick bed at the Hospital to go and inspect the new $9,000 car he had purchased for his wife, Olive Thomas, when he was notified that the car had arrived. The new car was sent to meet Miss Thomas the next day when she got off the train from the East, and Jack again braved the danger of a relapse to go and meet his wife.

Grauman's Sister Killed in Wreck.

D. J. Grauman, proprietor of Grauman's Theatre in Los Angeles, was notified this week that his sister, Miss Cecelia Grauman, was killed in a railroad wreck in New York state. She was buried in Indianapolis.

Thomas Foss New Film Censor.

Thomas Foss, chief investigator in the city prosecutor's office, was appointed motion picture censor of Los Angeles, replacing Edward J. Purcell, who died a short time ago. Foss will remain chief investigator in the city prosecutor's office, and the censorship will merely be added to his other duties.

Clune Closes Film Run.

Musical comedy replaced "The Greatest Thing in Life" at Clune's Auditorium on January 20. The Griffith film was kept on five weeks instead of two, as was originally intended. "The Fall of Babylon," which was to have been shown at the Auditorium, will begin an engagement at the Kinema Theatre on January 20.

Mary's Godsons to Get Work.

From her sick room, where she was confined by an attack of influenza, Mary Pickford made an appeal to Mayor Woodman, of Los Angeles, that her godsons, the men of the 143d Field Artillery of California, be given employment immediately upon their discharge from the Army. Miss Pickford was assured by the Mayor that at least 90 per cent. of the men would be given their former jobs again, and that employment for the other 10 per cent. would no doubt readily be found.

Ruby Lafayette's Husband Dies.

J. P. Curran, one of the old-time stage actors, and husband of Ruby Lafayette, player of mother roles at Universal City, died at the Soldiers' Home at Sawtelle, Cal., on January 12, at the age of 71 years. Mr. Curran was a Civil War veteran, and he was buried with all the military honors. Last September, while working in a Thomas H. Ince feature, Mr. Curran became ill, from which attack he never fully recovered.

Film Notables Guests of Grauman.

Sid Grauman entertained a number of motion picture magnates at the Grauman Theatre on January 16. Among the guests were Adolph Zukor, Samuel Goldwyn, J. D. Williams, Robert Lieber, John Kunsky, the latter three members of the First National Exhibitors; H. E. Aitken, of Triangle and Aaron Jones, of Chicago.

Ruth, little daughter of Henry King and his wife, Gypsy Abbott, has just recovered from a serious siege of flu.

Herbert Heyes is leading man for Madeline Traverse in her new play, "Madame Rouge."

OUTSIDE, LOOKING IN, ON ADJECTIVES

Raymond C. Hill, Brooklyn Scenarioist, Speaking as an Observer, Offers Reasons Why Films Cannot Be Advertised Like Merchandise, and Draws Comparisons

WE present herewith a contribution bearing on another side of the subject of controlling adjectives in film advertising than has been presented in recent issues. It will be recalled that the Advertising Club of Los Angeles lately resolved that the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World would forthwith be asked to cooperate in a movement to protest "misleading advertising, the promotion of unknown and so-called stars and the featuring of unworthy pictures."

There was more to the original statement sent out in behalf of the Los Angeles club, but the sentence quoted was the "high spot" in the complaint against adjectives running wild in film advertising made by the professional advertising men of Los Angeles. In last week's issue we presented an interview, granted at our own request, in which R. H. Cochrane said, in effect, that the Los Angeles advertisers were entering upon a project that the film publicists and advertisement writers has already passed through.

Mr. Cochrane spoke with authority. He was an advertising expert long before he became associated with Carl Laemmle and was the first man to bring any intelligent effort to bear on film advertising. The contribution which follows was submitted by Raymond C. Hill, of Brooklyn, who is concerned in the film game only as a scenario writer. He makes no claim to expertness, but submits some thoughtful comment on the difference between advertising films and standard articles of commerce.

Here Follows Mr. Hill's Article:

Speaking as a bystander, a disinterested party who can regard advertising with an impartial eye so to speak, it seems to me that a parallel in defense of movie advertising and publicity is not a very good one, inasmuch as commercial articles such as automobiles or collars are a standardized product turned out by machine in large quantities, while each photoplay is a separate and distinct unit with its own merits and demerits, and must be considered as such by the person offering it for sale and the one buying it.

If you buy an AB collar and it suits you, regardless of how it was advertised, you are safe, generally speaking, in buying the same make of collar for years without giving the matter any further thought, for the collars are made of the same material by the same machine and can vary, at the very most, only a particle from each other. If you buy a CD motor truck, regardless of how it was advertised, and it suits your requirements, you can order ten or a hundred of them confident that they will all be alike, or near enough alike for your purpose.

Because a movie company produces a good photoplay, would it be safe or prudent for you, as an exhibitor, to order all that company's product, or as a theatregoer, to pay to see them all, in the same manner that you would order collars or motor trucks, on the assumption that they would all be good, all of the same even standard? Hardly. The one good play may be followed by several bloomers that would drive your audience or yourself into the nearest bevo parlor.

No. 1 and No. 2 Entirely Different.

If the manner of buying these commodities differs, and it must in the nature of things, then the advertising of them must differ. The manufacturer of the collar or motor truck, knowing his article is all right as to style, utility, material, wearing qualities, etc., can go ahead and advertise for an endless procession of collars or motor trucks, knowing his product will always have the same amount of merit even if his advertising is a bit extravagant.

The movie maker, however, after he has advertised and disposed of No. 1 production must treat No. 2 as an entirely different proposition, which it is —different is story, direction, acting, scenery, camera work, etc. While the maker may honestly think that the second picture is as good as the first, the fact remains that No. 1 is a success and No. 2 is a failure, that No. 1 is worth the price charged and is all its advertisers claim for it, while No. 2 is not worth a brass penny. But No. 1 collar and No. 2 collar are exactly the same, as are the motor trucks.

Have Seconds as Well as Firsts.

Furthermore, you, as a theatregoer, cannot tell if you like the picture till you have paid out your money to see it, and if you don't like it there is no refund. In the advertising of many commercial articles strong emphasis is laid on the "money back if you are not satisfied" feature. In addition to this, if one collar is below the manufacturer's standard, it is marked "Second" and sold for less money. It might be well to establish this custom with motion pictures, for there are certainly as many "Seconds" as "Firsts."

As to the method of advertising, when the collar or motor truck manufacturer advertises his product he generally confines himself to a statement of the merits of his product, a reproduction to show what it looks like, and the price. But when a new movie is advertised—Good Night! We get a regular flood of hogwash and twaddle; not only is the picture itself puffed and praised beyond all reason and belief, but everybody connected with it is slobbed over till a stranger to this earth would think from the uproar that some world-shaking event was taking place instead of just another movie, one that in six weeks is forgotten, and generally deserves to be.

"Blurbings of Word-Mad P. A."

It is true that the collar and motor truck manufacturer puts his product forth in the most attractive and favorable light, but in all cases you have the privilege of examining it before purchasing, and as noted above, in many cases you get your money back if not satisfied. Not so the picturegoer, he must buy "sight unseen" with no other guide than the blurbings of some word-mad press agent or a misled exhibitor.

Call for Rating Association.

Whether or not the A. A. C. W. will be the one to reform movie publicity and advertising I do not know or particularly care, but it is a cinch that a little reform would do the business no harm. It is a pity the pictures have no classification society such as exists for ships. If you are buying a ship, no matter how large or small, you can find out from the classification society its exact condition in terms of strength, seaworthiness, age, carrying capacity, etc., and thus tell whether it is the vessel you want and if it is worth the price asked by its owners. If it is not classified, you know you are taking a chance in buying it at all.

If you are buliding a ship and wish it insured, the classification society, which is operated by the marine insurance companies, has its inspectors go over your product from stem to stern, and it is classified according to its size, strength, seaworthiness, tonnage, etc. If it receives class A-1, you know your ship is as good as human beings can make it and will be insured for its full value, or is worth so much in regular money. As the vessel grows older and deteriorates, the insurance is reduced in proportion; when the ship is unseaworthy, the policy is canceled and your vessel is then junk film, so to speak.

With a scheme similar to this, the picture producer could have his product classified and insured according to its entertainment value, the exhibitor and theatregoer would know from its classification just about what it amounted to sans advertising bunk, and whether it was worth the price asked. If the picture was not classified, they would know they were taking a chance in spending money on it.

ROCHESTER HAS REAL WOMAN OPERATOR

Citizeness of New York Town Passes Test with High Honors—Husband Owns Rose Garden Theatre

JUST as pretty a young woman as ever played before an audience is now doing her part behind it, away up in the projection room of a Rochester (N. Y.) theatre. Where once the orchestra was her music, now it is the incessant click-click of a projection machine as reel after reel of film, from tragedy to comedy, is flashed upon the screen. That is not all either, for she has the distinction of being the first woman who ever received an operator's license in Rochester. It is also worthy of note that the records of the Department of Public Safety show that she passed the examination with the highest standing of any one who ever took the test.

The young operator is Mrs. Lorena Stahley, of 8 Aebersold street. She and her husband were until recently well known to vaudeville patrons, and their act, as well as the Stahley family, has for years been once of the most famous on the variety stage. Mrs. Stahley left the speaking stage only a short time ago and she is still partial to it, but she has developed a deep interest in the movies and intends to go still deeper into the work she has undertaken.

Husband Owns the Rose Garden.

Her husband is the owner of the Rose Garden Theatre in Portland avenue, so it was but natural that she busy herself about that house. It was not long before she wanted to try her hand on the battery of huge electric-driven projection machines. The law says that an operator must be licensed and must pass a severe test. Nothing daunted, Mrs. Stahley delved into the mysteries and the mechanics of the apparatus and passed the test in a way that made the examining board sit up and take notice that a woman had arrived in a new field.

The young woman does not seem to think she has done anything unusual in standing higher in the test than anyone ever stood before. Neither does she think it unusual that she should operate a machine. She regards her ability in a modest light and says that when her interest in the matter grew to such proportions, it was a simple matter to master the intricacies of the thing well enough to take the test for operators.

Mrs. Stahley played with Julian Eltinge, the famous impersonator of female roles, when he was on the vaudeville stage. She has many an interesting story to tell about people famous and otherwise with whom she has trod the boards, and she laughingly says that at that time nothing was so improbable as the idea that she would ever be a movie operator.

Make Grow Two Houses Where One Grew Before

IT has virtually been decided, after much discussion of the various possibilities of the situation, that the Colonial, of Cincinnati, for some years a popular house on West Fifth street, will be replaced by two moving picture theatres instead of by one large house, as it was for a time believed would be the better plan.

The reason for the final decision to build two houses instead of one was that it is impossible to enlarge the Colonial greatly without building a new structure of fireproof type, to conform to present city regulations, and, on the other hand, it is possible to build two houses, one on each side of a fireproof partition wall, giving each almost as large a seating capacity as the present Colonial.

It is estimated that one of the new houses, which will be controlled by the Huss-Riley interests, at present connected with the Colonial, will be able to offer a seating capacity of 275, and the other, or western section, of 250. Zettel & Rapp, Cincinnati architects, are in charge of the plans for the improvement.

New Orleans' Fire Burns Metro and First Exchanges

FIRE has completely destroyed the Metro New Orleans film exchange. The First National Exhibitors' Circuit was also a heavy loser, the two concerns operating a joint exchange. The fire occurred at the luncheon hour, and several of the employes barely escaped before the flames enveloped the entire interior of the building. In a manner the fire was fortunate from the fact that very few of the 700 or more reels in the exchange were destroyed or damaged.

Manager J. C. Briant was busy in protecting his exhibitors within half an hour after the firemen had subdued the flames, and he is proud to report that he had no miss-outs and very few substitutions were required. The Goldwyn and Select exchanges occupy adjacent offices, and there was a mad scurry to move out.

Fortunately neither of the latter exchanges suffered serious losses. All of the other exchange managers in the city came to the aid of the unfortunate ones with offers for the loan of films and any other assistance within their power to render.

Manager Creswell Strong in Service.

Among the recent appointments in the distribution department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation is that of Fred Creswell, who has been advanced to the position of branch manager at Chicago.

Mr. Creswell is no novice in the film business, having been one of the pioneer exhibitors in Indianapolis, where he operated two houses, later extending his activities to the management and ownership of a Nashville house. He then became interested in film distribution and entered upon an active campaign in the state right field in the South, later joining Paramount's Atlantic office.

Mr. Creswell has a genuine aptitude for business apparently untinged by prejudice and is a stickler for service.

STAR COMBINATION WAS UNEXPECTED

Miss Pickford Declares Formation of Organization Was Brought About by Distributors Themselves—Present Contracts of All Players Expire by July

WHEN Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks, Charles Chaplin, William S. Hart and D. W. Griffith formed the United Artists' Distributing Company, to make and market their own pictures, they undoubtedly executed a movement that was unexpected at this time.

The First National Exhibitors' Circuit, who were in executive session in Los Angeles at the time of the organization, were already in possession of contracts with Chaplin and Mary Pickford, and it was well understood that they were trying to sign Fairbanks.

In speaking of the movement Douglas Fairbanks said: "The step taken by us is based on our desire to market our own pictures to the American public. It is a step based on justice, common honesty and due to the public and to those actually making pictures. The step has long been in contemplation. I shall begin moving pictures next month under the new management, and as soon as the other members finish the films they are contracted to make they will begin for themselves under the co-operative plan. Exhibitors may rent each picture as they desire and will not be compelled to book other pictures in order to get them, as in the past. We can no longer be used as a club over the exhibitors by the film magnates."

Miss Pickford Blames Distributors.

Mary Pickford declares that "the need for the present organization was brought about by the distributors themselves. We are on the defensive and many people have asked us why we didn't do this thing long ago. The answer to that is that we were never forced to do it until now. But now, with the possibility of the merger of distributers looming before us, a combination that threatens to dominate the theatres of the United States, it becomes necessary for us to organize as a protection to our own interests."

David W. Griffith, in commenting on the new concern, says: "The dominant purpose of the movement is to provide protection for the American people who patronize motion pictures. The public, through the exhibitors, has heretofore been unable to see the pictures they most enjoyed without being forced to see pictures they did not want. We are willing to make certain pictures on which we do not expect to make money, nor care whether or not they do make money. The reward of fame and glory for advancing the art is sufficient. Under the program method we were forbidden to make pictures other than with modern themes and happy endings. This was almost without variation, simply because these types of pictures had been found to make the most money."

Big Five Join in Statement.

The following statement, which was signed by the five players entering into the new combine, has been issued:

"A new combination of motion picture stars and producers was formed yesterday, and we, the undersigned, in furtherance of the artistic welfare of the moving picture industry, believing we can better serve the great and growing industry of picture productions, have decided to unite our work into one association, and at the finish of existing contracts, which are now rapidly drawing to a close, to release our combined productions through our own organization. This new organization, to embrace the very best actors and producers in the motion picture business, is headed by the following well-known stars; Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks, William S. Hart, Charlie Chaplin and D. W. Griffith productions, all of whom have proved their ability to make productions of value both artistically and financially.

"We believe this is necessary to protect the exhibitor and the industry itself, thus enabling the exhibitor to book only pictures that he wishes to play and not force upon him (when he is booking films to please his audience) other program films which he does not desire, believing that as servants of the people we can thus best serve the people. We also think that this step is positively and absolutely necessary to protect the great motion picture public from threatening combinations and trusts that would force upon them mediocre productions and machine-made entertainment."

Declare Break Absolute.

Mary Pickford's contract with the First National will be completed in May or June. William S. Hart will be free of contract in July and Chaplin in the same month. D. W. Griffith's films will be available for the new organization in the early autumn. Attorneys for the various stars are now at work on the final organization plans and data. John Fairbanks, manager for Douglas Fairbanks, declares that the company will not release through Paramount, Artcraft or the First National Circuit. There is to be an absolute break with the present distributors and the present method of distribution.

First Meeting Held January 14.

The fact that the big meeting of the First National Exhibitors, which was going on at the time and the fact that this body was trying to secure the services of other big stars to their list; and that Artcraft was trying to hold Douglas Fairbanks; and the possibility of a merger between several of the big producing and distributing concerns, was the cause of the combination being formed by the five players.

The first meeting which resulted in the organization, was held at the home of Sydney Chaplin on the afternoon and evening of January 14. All of the players interested were present with the exception of Mary Pickford, who was represented by her mother. The organization was completed that night and the next day articles of agreement were signed and the news was made public.

SCHMIDT IS NAMED DISTRICT MANAGER

Long Time Power's Exchangeman Will Anchor at Cleveland and Keep Eye on Nearby U. Offices

ARTHUR A. SCHMIDT, a veteran in the ranks of film salesmen and exchange executives, has been appointed district manager for the Universal in the Central States territory, succeeding Joseph I. Schnitzer, who recently became general sales manager for the Universal organization.

Mr. Schmidt entered the film business in 1907, opening P. A. Powers' exchange at Rochester, N. Y. Later he opened the Buffalo and Cleveland offices, and when the Indianapolis and Cincinnati exchanges were opened by Mr. Powers Mr. Schmidt was made general manager of all Powers' exchanges. A little over a year ago Mr. Schmidt left the film field for other lines of commercial endeavor, but he readily accepted the offer to succeed Mr. Schnitzer in the Central States territory.

Cleveland will serve as Mr. Schmidt's headquarters and the exchanges under his supervision are those at Cleveland, Cincinnati, Buffalo, Detroit and Pittsburgh.

Goldman Heads Chicago Territory.

In appointing Mr. Schmidt Universal has rearranged its territorial districts for divisional managers. In the future Indianapolis will be added to the Kansas City, Oklahoma City and St. Louis divisional managers' territory.

Sidney J. Goldman has been appointed divisional manager for the Chicago, Milwaukee, Minneapolis, Omaha and Des Moines territory, and he is also making a swing around the circuit for the purpose of getting acquainted with conditions at the present time. Like Mr. Schmidt, Mr. Goldman is one of the veteran film salesman of the country. While Mr. Schmidt started his film activities in the East, Mr. Goldman began his film work in and around San Francisco. Having made his headquarters at the Chicago Universal exchange for almost a year Mr. Goldman is well known in the Middle West.

Gus A. Metzger, who was appointed divisional manager for the Pacific Coast territory recently, has now begun a visit to the Salt Lake, Denver, Butte, Spokane, Seattle, Portland, San Francisco and Los Angeles exchanges which are under his jurisdiction.

Divisional managers for the Eastern and South Central territories are to be appointed shortly.

The Ruination of Motion Pictures.

NOW that Old George Booze has been rudely hit on the head his use as an aid to scenario writing reaches the zero stage. Stories with strong drink as an impelling motive will soon become obsolete. This may be bad enough, but matters might be worse—much worse. Suppose there should be passed a law to prohibit the use on the screen of:

The telephone.
The automobile.
Revolver-in-the-desk-drawer.
"The papers."
Locket-and-picture.
The Old Flag.

Then indeed would the scenarioist be up against it.

1 Beer equals 1 admission;
1 Varnish equals 2 admissions;
1 Booze means 3 admissions;

1 Scotch gets 3 admissions;

ROWLAND AGAIN LEADS METRO FORCES

At Annual Meeting Joseph Engel Is Re-elected Treasurer—Tooker and Rhodes Are Directors

AN enlarged policy, involving bigger and better productions, was definitely decided upon at the annual meeting of the Metro Pictures Corporation held at the Hotel Astor last week. Definite announcement of the policy in its entirety will not be forthcoming until a subsequent meeting, which is to be held to perfect certain details of the adopted plan.

At the stockholders' meeting the following directors were elected: Richard A. Rowland, Joseph W. Engel, H. J. Cohen, Charles K. Stern, David Stoneman, E. H. Hulsey, James B. Clark, Joseph H. Tooker and James D. Rhodes. Of this number Mr. Tooker, of New York, and Mr. Rhodes, of Pittsburgh, are new members, the others being re-elections. An arrangement was made for an amendment to the by-laws allowing an increase in the directorate of three members, and anticipating this amendment Maxwell Karger, W. E. Atkinson and J. Robert Rubin were selected.

Immediately after the election of the directors the following officers were elected for the ensuing year: President, Richard A. Rowland; vice presidents, James B. Clark and E. H. Hulsey; treasurer, Joseph W. Engel; assistant treasurer, Charles K. Stern; secretary, J. Robert Rubin.

Metro's year, just finished, has been the greatest in the organization, which was founded four years ago. The success, both artistic and financial, of the big special productions, together with Metro's understanding of present market conditions, brought about the decision for the enlarged and specialized policy of releases. The plan adopted is a farsighted one, depending upon the merit of each production as an entertainment. It is sufficiently elastic to admit of the supplying the public through the exhibitors with productions that have timeliness and which will satisfy popular taste for the best in screen entertainment.

During the year Metro has moved all of its production activities to the Pacific Coast and has just completed the erection of one of the finest studios in the world. The plant is equipped for the largest productions and is now in active operations at Hollywood.

Metro has several surprises in store for the motion picture industry during the coming year, and before the beginning of its new season in September these surprises will be announced to the trade.

Following the formal meeting of the directors several of the coming releases were screened, and the results of perfecting the producing organization were manifest.

MRS. PICKFORD HEADS TWO COMPANIES

Mother of Famous Trio of Screen Players, in Background Heretofore, Comes Into Limelight

MRS. CHARLOTTE PICKFORD, already famous through being the mother of Mary, Jack and Lottie Pickford, and well known in the Motion Picture industry, has added another item to her list of achievements by the organization of the Jack Pickford Company, which will star the youngest of the family in his own productions, released through the First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

Mrs. Pickford, the most prominent feminine figure in the business end of motion picture circles, now occupies the position of president of the Jack Pickford company, as well as president and manager of the Mary Pickford Productions, and it is she who is the business genius of both organizations, which have contracted to produce their own pictures, independently of any other film manufacturing organization, and releasing through the First National.

It was Mrs. Pickford who at the time of the completion of Miss Pickford's Artcraft contract engineered the deal whereby Miss Pickford's pictures were to be produced by the Pickford Corporation with its own capital, and likewise she who lost no time in organizing the second company and contracting for the release of the first series of pictures. Mrs. Pickford has arranged for studios for both companies and personally attends to the engaging of directors, writers and supporting players for both stars.

Mrs. Pickford entered the motion picture field as an independent producer with nine years of motion picture experience. Previous to that she, with her three children, had been on the stage for a number of years, appearing under the management of the best known stage producers. In connection with the phenomenal success which the Pickfords have attained in motion pictures Mrs. Pickford points with pride to the fact that the position which they have reached has not been through sudden good fortune but as a direct result of the gradual building up of the popularity of the Pickford stars since they started their stage career at the age of five.

And despite the fact that Mrs. Pickford is the head of two flourishing companies, is the grandmother of Miss Lottie's daughter, and is at work every morning, she has yet to achieve her first gray hairs.

To Show Welfare Motion Pictures.

The Western Electric Company has leased the Lexington Theatre for the evenings of January 20 and 21 for a showing to its five thousand employes in the New York district of its four industrial motion pictures. This is an entirely new departure in welfare work. The pictures deal with all phases of the company's work. "A Square Deal for His Wife," made by Harry Levey, manager of the Industrial Department of the Universal, for the Western Electric, is expected to arouse unusual comment as it is a photoplay rich in dramatic appeal and gets across its message in a subtle manner. The experiment is being watched by many big employers of labor who are considering films in their welfare and efficiency departments.

Dennison Again With General.

D. Leo Dennison's return to General Film Company is announced, he having just assumed charge of the Detroit branch office of the company. Mr. Dennison was manager of General's Pittsburgh branch six months ago, but resigned to handle the branch of another concern. Mr. Dennison is a graduate of the legitimate theatrical business, having been for seven years engaged as company or as house manager for various enterprises. He was two years a manager of Harry Davis' houses in Pittsburgh, and thus became acquainted with motion picture affairs, after which he handled "Quo Vadis" road shows. He was several years with Paramount at Pittsburgh, Detroit and Chicago, and later, for the same company, supervised the central states branches.

REVIEW BOARD HOLDS TENTH LUNCHEON

Two Hundred Guests Enjoy Feast of Food and Eloquence at Hotel McAlpin, New York City

THE tenth annual luncheon of the National Board of Review was held at the Hotel McAlpin on Saturday, January 18. Nearly two hundred members of the Review and National Advisory Committee met with the Board of Governors, Lester F. Scott, presiding. Mayor Peters, of Boston, was represented by John F. Casey, commissioner of licenses.

Henry E. Jenkins, district superintendent of evening schools, New York City, in speaking of the impressions of a motion picture fan said, "I wonder if motion picture producers realize what a wonderful effect on general education they have the opportunity to exert through the medium of the motion picture. The whole subject of education is going to be drastically revolutionized. The motion pictures will lead it. Put them into the schools as part of the education process; even though this should temporarily do injury to the business outside, eventually it will stimulate interest in the best productions and attract to them an enlarged audience."

Anita Loos was introduced as "the woman who made Douglas Fairbanks famous." In answering the question, "What does the public want in moving pictures?" Miss Loos gave some interesting examples of her personal experiences while working with Douglas Fairbanks.

Audience Intelligence Ignored.

S. L. Rothapfel described his entrance into the motion picture field, continuing, "There is a great slogan in the trade 'Give the Public What It Wants.' To my mind that is all wrong—it cannot be done. First, because you do not know what the public wants, and, second, because it does not know what it wants itself. Directors of motion pictures are too busy to-day trying to control the industry. There is not enough idealism—entirely too much commercialism and not enough respect for the intelligence of the audience. I believe the motion picture will not make great advances until we get more subtlety and idealism into it. I believe Charlie Chaplin is the greatest artist of our generation. His greatest success is in the practical application of psychology to the motion picture. There are too many pictures to-day which are nothing but illustrated titles."

During the discussion which followed the addresses, Dr. Talcott Williams, a member of the board's national advisory committee, in speaking of motion picture productioin said, "The moving picture is essentially the interpreter of its day, it reflects its standards, feelings and emotions. To keep the home fires burning during the crisis passed, there has been no agent comparable to the motion picture. It has spurred men because they felt they were seeing the same things that others elsewhere could see. They have had their emotions multiplied. It has made victory not only possible but certain. There are moments of depression for you who are working in the motion picture industry; I hope you will remember that this great art had in the war the beginning of its empire. It too deserves the sword and laurel. It has been one of the soldiers in this conflict for liberty."

A number of motion picture players attended the luncheon as guests of the board, including Mme. Petrova, Alice Joyce and Alice Brady. The luncheon was declared to be a great success.

FREEMAN ENGAGED BY FAMOUS PLAYERS

Will Be District Manager of Three Southern Exchanges—Chamberlain a Special Representative

Y. F. FREEMAN, formerly general manager of Triangle, has been engaged by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation as district manager of the Atlanta, New Orleans and Dallas exchanges. Mr. Freeman has been closely associated with S. A. Lynch for some four years and started in the motion picture business shortly after leaving college, when he became connected with the Atlanta offices of the Lynch Enterprises, handling Paramount pictures.

Although Mr. Freeman is only twenty-seven years old he has made rapid progress in important work affecting motion picture distribution. He succeeds C. E. Tandy, who has been district manager of the Southern Paramount offices for some time.

F. V. Chamberlin, exchange manager of the Atlanta branch for a year and a half, has been promoted to the position of special representative for the department of distribution. Mr. Chamberlin has gained all his motion picture experience in selling Paramount and Artcraft pictures and despite the short period of time he has been connected with the business has become widely prominent as an expert film man. Prior to his affiliation with motion picture enterprise he was connected with the automobile business for some eight years, where he gained his knowledge of modern business and salesmanship.

Mr. Freeman will take charge of the Atlanta, New Orleans and Dallas exchances immediately. Mr. Chamberlin, shortly after his promotion last week, when he was called to the New York home office, left for Washington, where he will consult with local Paramount-Artcraft representatives.

Dan Michalove continues as branch manager of the Dallas branch office, with Dave Prince as his assistant. The Atlanta and New Orleans exchanges are under the direct management of Louis L. Dent and H. F. Wilkes.

Flu Still Threatens North Carolina.

The influenza situation in Wilmington, N. C., is daily growing worse and sessions of the Board of Health are almost nightly occurences. Two to three hundred cases are said to exist in the city, and a movement has been started to again close the schools, although no mention has yet been made of the theatres.

There will undoubtedly be a legal battle as a result should the authorities again attempt to close the Wilmington theatres without closing all business in the down-town section. It is contended that local department stores and other retail stores are more dangerous to the public through inefficient ventilation than the well ventilated and sanitary motion picture theatres.

Many larger cities up state have been closed during the past week, Asheville having closed this week for an indefinite period, as also New Bern, Goldsboro, Raleigh, and Winston-Salem. Fayetteville, Greensboro and Charlotte are threatened by their local health boards.

Eddie Lincoln Didn't Like These Court Room Settings

THE release of the inaugural "S.-L Picture," starring E. K. Lincoln, came perilously near to being delayed when the popular film actor received a notice recently to appear in the United States District Court for jury service, but through the courtesy of Alexander Gilchrist, Jr., clerk of the court, he was excused from service temporarily.

When Mr. Lincoln received the notice requiring him to appear for jury service his producers were worried lest the completion of current releases on schedule be unavoidably delayed, but when the situation was explained to Mr. Gilchrist, who is commissioner of jurors in the Federal Court, he readily consented to excuse the film star until such time as it will not interfere with his moving picture duties.

In extending his appreciation to Mr. Gilchrist for the respite granted him the actor assured the commissioner that he will be happy to acquire first-hand information of life as illustrated by a study of criminal characters in court when the opportunity presents itself.

Rio Productions Formed.

Rio Productions, Inc., has been formed with Clyde Colt, president; Robert A. Fulmer, secretary; Miss Nonette Rio, treasurer. The executive office is at 1552 Broadway, New York. The studios are at 498 Fulton street, Brooklyn, and 875 Broad street, Newark, N. J. The company will produce and feature Miss Nonette Rio, an actress able to portray any of the Latin types. She is a late star of the Theatre Tebidabo, Barcelona. Miss Rio was born in Malaga, Spain, and educated there in a convent. She speaks English, Spanish, French and Italian, and has traveled extensively.

Miss Elsie Grey, who has played with all the prominent producing companies, will be featured in comedies. The brand of releases will be known as Rio Productions, Inc.

Here's a New One—And Rags, Too.

Geraldine Farrar appears in rags of great cost and style in "Shadows." Learning that she would be required to wear a worn, plain gown and knowing that she never wears anything that long, she went to the man who creates all her gorgeous frocks and commissioned him to make a dress, torn and stained. His workers had a grand time counterfeiting a cast-off garment for the star whose clothes even they marvel at.

ENGLISH PICTURE POT BOILS

Signing of Armistice Has Immediate Helpful Effect Upon Business—Politics Threaten Screen's Integrity—Pathe Is to Produce

By J. B. Sutcliffe

English activities, or prospective activities, in the international moving picture industry provide the most interesting topic of conversation in American film export circles at the present time. Rumors galore, some of them so well founded that they are likely to crystallize into facts having an almost revolutionary effect upon the moving picture industry in the United States and throughout the world, are afloat; all are related to the question in every person's mind as to whether or not Great Britain, with its closely related colonies which combine to make the British Empire one of the most important fields for moving pictures from the standpoint of the distributor, will become a more or less self-supporting producing unit prepared to use its own product largely to the consequent disadvantage of foreign made product.

Kinema Now Ranks with Newspapers.

London, England.

THE armistice with the enemy proved a decided stimulant to the moving picture industry immediately after it had been signed. The picturegoing public had come to regard the visit to the kinema as a necessary and supplementary issue of the daily and weekly newspaper since the various topical and war films had been organized on a businesslike basis. It would therefore be almost superfluous to add that the moving picture seems destined to figure more prominently in the final act of the great struggle than it did in the prologue. In the interests of posterity and as a duty to the generation yet unborn we should neglect not the least opportunity of impressing into service the silent, omnipotent records of the death struggle of Germania and her military Moloch.

Suggests Screen to Adjust Strikes.

To such an extent has the moving picture been developed for propagandist purposes during the war that it would not be surprising to find the organizing heads of rival political factions contemplating designs upon the film as a powerful and likely agent for the service of their parties. This possibility is suggested by a question asked in the House of Commons a few weeks ago: "If the Minister of Munitions would consider the propriety of using the kinemas throughout the country for making known conditions under which strikes arise, the merits of each case, and the disastrous results of such disagreements, seeing that fifteen million people a day could be so approached." Now any suggestion to press the moving picture into the service of the country or any worthy private cause has hitherto had the whole-hearted support of every section of the industry, but to talk of fashioning it into a trade or political weapon is an entirely different matter. Political propaganda films would materially lower the high standard of integrity the screen maintains and identify in the eyes of the public different exhibitors as the underlings of political bosses. Sensation and caricature in print are bad enough at election time, but a moving picture election "frame-up" would be too utterly degrading to the industry to contemplate.

Picture Man Wants Parliament Seat.

A. E. Newbould, president of the Kinematograph Exhibitors' Association, contested the Leyton district as Parliamentary candidate at the general election. It is more than time an important industry like the moving picture trade had its representative in the "House," although professedly, Mr. Newbould is placing his plank in the radical platform.

Foremost among the post-war developments of the moving picture industry in Great Britain will be an extension on this side of new and existing producing interests from abroad, mainly American. Indications of this activity have already occasioned much speculation on the subject of introducing outside capital. Some time ago I referred to the Board of Trades' inquiry into the requirements of limited liability company law in respect of its application to the incorporation of foreign money in British industrial enterprises. A report of this inquiry has been issued and affords ample evidence that the Government does not wish to place any obstruction in the way of capital influx from abroad, excepting always from enemy countries or sources. The report cites America as chief contributor and disposes of certain objections thus—"to impose restrictions aimed at our present enemies with the result of deterring the flow of capital from America would be a policy highly injurious to the economic recovery of the country after the war."

Municipal Competition on the Increase.

The town council of Clydebank, near Glasgow, has decided to exhibit pictures in the Town Hall as a municipal enterprise in competition with local exhibitors. This makes about a dozen boroughs in this country exhibiting in competition with those against whom they draft legislation.

British Screen Club on Sound Footing.

The British Screen Club has come into being, and from the eminently practical support given at the inaugural gatherings by manufacturers, renters, and exhibitors bids fair to be the most outstanding development of the industry during the year. It is more than five years since the first attempt was made in Wardour street by a handful of exchangemen to establish a screen club something along the lines of the New York organization. For want of unity of purpose and object, it failed dismally, and until the opening of the Manchester club early in the year interest in the proposal had remained latent. But the success of the northern enterprise provided the required stimulant, and another few weeks at the most should see the British Screen Club as firmly founded and certainly as worthy of purpose as any of the city livery companies.

Stiff Deposit Causes Complaint.

One of the conditions of membership of the Kinematograph Renters Society of Great Britain and Ireland, Ltd., the reorganized commercial union of leading exchange interests, is a cash deposit of £100 in addition to the annual subscription of £26 5s. Quite a number of exchangemen, mostly those who release independently, consider the charges excessive and even prohibitive to the provincial or "state right" man in a limited way of business. The promoters point in fixing a substantial fee is, however, a laudable one, to eliminate the back-attic element and the "five-shillings-per-thousand-feet" exclusive merchant from the scope of the society.

Sarrados Appointed Pathe Director.

I mentioned a few weeks ago the intention of the house of Pathe to begin the production of multiple-reel features in England almost immediately upon the termination of war. J. Sarrados has now been appointed director of Pathe's Anglican producing enterprise and is in London engaging a company of players for the initial productions.

Hepworth-Kimberley Ready to Operate.

The Hepworth-Kimberley co-operation, by which Captain Paul Kimberley becomes responsible for the distribution in Great Britain and disposal abroad of Hepworth productions, has now assumed a working stride. It is only one of many similar post-war arrangements pending between producers and distributors in London, but is a representative one of the trend of future developments in the British trade.

Influenza Hurts Business.

The serious epidemic of Spanish influenza with its multifarious complications throughout town and country has had its reactions upon the industry, the exhibiting side in particular. In many towns with the closure of the day schools an order was made excluding children from attendance at moving picture theatres. A restriction like this falls heavily upon the shoulders of the showman.

Gerard Sequel Excites Comment.

"Count Bernstorff's Secrets," the unconnected moving picture sequel to Ambassador Gerard's "Four Years," promises fair to have as extensive a screen circulation as its forerunner. When the Bernstorff film was shown privately at the New Gallery Kinema to diplomatic and foreign representatives a well known and highly critical member of Parliament remarked that timeliness alone made the production an asset of incalculable good to the Allied cause; coming out at a time when the public needed a stimulating reminder of Bernstorff's atrocious attempts to create disrupture in America in the early years of war. The release of the film to exhibitors at the moment when the terms of peace are being deliberated is an indorsement of this view.

Moving Picture Chaplain Dead.

The death occurred recently of the Rev. Thomas Horne, chaplain of the Showman's Guild and unofficially chaplain to the moving picture industry, since he was a familiar figure at trade functions. The Rev. Mr. Horne was a stalwart champion of the moving picture in the days when its clerical friends were extremely few and the advent of the itinerant "penny gaff" found him starting the organization that now flourishes as the "Showman's Guild."

London and Paris Together for Y. M.

The London headquarters of the moving picture department of the American Y. M. C. A. are quartered in Montague Street, Bloomsbury, W. C., under F. H. Lawton. It is from this address, in cooperation with a similar establishment in Paris, that the moving picture films supplied to the Y. M. C. A. camp theatres in Great Britain and France are controlled and distributed.

Educational to Film Piave.

E. M. Newman, of the American Educational Film Corporation, experienced a few busy weeks in France during the last sweeping drives eastward. Before returning to New York he plans taking a few feet among the Italian Alpini along the snow-capped ridges of the Piave, the most attractive theatre of war from a scenic artist's point of view.

"A Kentucky Cinderella" Commended.

Of the many feature films that have entertained the men of the British navy during their four years' vigil over the watery wastes separating the old Country from her enemies none has received a warmer testimonial than "A Kentucky Cinderella." "This is indeed a picture that will live in our memories and as we have four shows a week of usually very medicore stuff we are au fait with the proper constituents of a good film," wrote the paymaster of H. M. depot ship Cyclops to H. J. Boam, of Phillips Film Company. "'A Kentucky Cinderella' fulfilled our requirements in every respect."

New Color Process Being Developed.

A new company has been registered in London called Colour Movies, Ltd., with a new and patented process for producing colored films. The leading spirit in the technical development of the process is the well-known war cameraman, G. H. Malins.

Kansas Film Man Seeks Plan to Protect Theatre

C. A. MADDUX, manager of Universal Exchange, Wichita, Kan., has written to the Motion Picture World his views on the closing order of health boards in various states discriminating against the moving picture exhibitor. Mr. Maddux expresses the belief that to the film industry the plague of influenza has been a problem of as great moment as the world war has been to civilization itself.

"It may be said that the preceding statement," says Mr. Maddux, "was made by a man during an irrational moment; but give thought to the progress the industry has made in a comparatively few years and then realize that for a period of three months the whole industry has been practically at a standstill. It should be a subject for careful thought. The business must be protected in future from like epidemics or other occurrences which cannot be governed by the act of man.

"Had other industries of various kinds ceased to operate," continues Mr. Maddux, "and had there been no discrimination against the motion picture business we would have no comment to make. It is true other commercial interests were affected, but certainly not by closing orders from health boards, both local and state. The way in which they were affected was by their employes contracting the disease and causing nothing more than the inconvenience of help shortage, but in no instance closing their business."

Mr. Maddux expresses the hope that before another epidemic shall come the various organizations within the industry will undertake some sort of cooperative measure that will see that moving picture theatres are not the first and only places of public congregation that shall be affected by the rulings of officials. But how this shall be done Mr. Maddux does not venture to opine.

Co-operate With Labor Department.

At the request of David K. Niles, chief of the motion picture section, Division of Information, Department of Labor, the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation distributed to its exchanges ten thousand slides advertising enrollment week of the United States Boys' Working Reserve, which opened January 20. The exchange managers were requested to distribute these slides to all exhibitors in their territory and to urge them to show them throughout the week.

The issuance of these slides, which were furnished by the Department of Labor, is part of a campaign to interest boys of the country to go to work on the farms next summer to help harvest the crops. The United States Boys' Working Reserve is the branch of the United States Employment Service in charge of mobilization and placement of boys between the ages of sixteen and twenty-one in civilian war work.

Gloria Swanson Signs With Paramount.

Pursuant to her recent splendid work in C. B. DeMille's Artcraft special, "Don't Change Your Husband," Gloria Swanson has been placed under two years' contract by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and will continue to appear in important roles in Paramount or Artcraft pictures.

Herbert M. Dawley.

Cromelin Has Rights for World on Dawley Films

PAUL H. CROMELIN has secured the world rights on "The Ghost of Slumber Mountain," first of a series of films showing creatures of prehistoric times. Inter-Ocean Film Corp. will distribute the subject in the foreign field and the matter of American distribution will shortly be announced. Herbert M. Dawley, a newcomer to the films, is the creator of the idea and the pictures.

In producing his novelty subject Mr. Dawley has made a rare contribution to the motion picture art. The screen has had subjects showing the animated inanimate object produced by means of stop motion work. This stunt is almost as old as the art itself; but it remained for Dawley to conceive and carry to completion the idea of depicting the creatures of the prehistoric world in such a manner as to excite admiration and wonder.

Dawley a Designer and Sculptor by Profession.

Being a designer and sculptor by profession, possessed of an inventive mind and considerable ability as a writer, plus a working knowledge of the technique of the stage and a store of patience and determination, Mr. Dawley has been able to carry his ideas to a completion.

Encouraged in his first efforts by practical motion picture men, he set about the work of producing a film. Dawley quickly realized that it costs money to make pictures and that in order to accomplish his purpose the utmost economy would have to be practiced. This he considers a blessing in disguise, as it forced him to consider and weigh every factor carefully.

It required weeks of research among the skeletons and books at the American Museum of Natural History, before beginning active work. In this work Mr. Dawley received the warmest cooperation from Dr. W. D. Matthews, and also Dr. Barnum Browne, in charge of field work.

Missouri to Watch Ads.

Kansas City, Mo.

CAPT. GEORGE M. HUSSER has been appointed secretary of the Kansas City Protective Bureau (the vigilance committee of the Advertising Club) and will devote his entire time to the investigation of advertising which he considers is not up to the ethical standard of the moving picture men. Captain Husser formerly held this position, but his work was so good that he was called by the Government to head the National Vigilance committee. Now that the armistice has been signed, he has returned to Kansas City and resumed the work he so successfully prosecuted.

During the past year Oliver Wroughton, secretary of the Graphic Arts organization, with the assistance of volunteers from the Advertising Club, has done much toward the suppression of those advertisements which are forbidden by the law of Missouri, but with the new influx of business in 1919 it was found necessary to secure a man who could devote his whole attention to the work of clearing the field of the class of advertising which deceives the public.

Priscilla Dean Winning.

Few motion picture stars have increased their popularity among photoplay followers so rapidly during the past six months as has Priscilla Dean, the Universal star.

"The Two Soul Woman" about six months ago started the wave of Miss Dean's popularity, and "The Brazen Beauty," "Kiss or Kill," "She Hired a Husband" and "The Wildcat of Paris" brought her added laurels.

Two other Dean features soon to be released and bearing the tentative titles "The Rose of the Dark" and "The Silk Lined Burglar" are said to be exceptional. Under the direction of Tod Browning Miss Dean has just begun work on "Raggedy Ann," and other good stories have been secured for her.

George J. Schaefer.

Schafer Tops List of Managers in Bookings

A REMARKABLE record of bookings is indicated in the announcement by the Division of Films of the Committee on Public Information of the result of the prize contest engaged in by exchange managers and salesmen of the World Film Corporation in bookings for "America's Answer," the second official United States war picture. The contest began September 14, 1918, and ended December 31. The exchange manager's prize is awarded to George J. Schaefer of the New York office. H. E. Friedman of the goes to Ben S. Morgenroth, also of the New York office. H. E. Friedman of the New York office ran Mr. Morgenroth a close second.

Mr. Schaefer will receive a green gold case, full jeweled, open face watch, inscribed with his name and with the words "Manager's Prize, 'America's Answer' Contest, 1918—Division of Films." The prize to Mr. Morgenroth is a solid silver cigarette case similarly inscribed.

Award Based on All Theatres.

The contest provided a prize for the exchange manager of the World Film Corporation securing the highest percentage of contracts, the percentage being based on the number of theatres in his respective territory. The salesmen's prize was to be awarded to the salesman securing the highest percentage of contracts on the basis of the number of theatres in his territory.

In view of the fact that a large number of theatres were closed during this period by reason of the influenza, the managers and salesmen of the World Film have made a remarkable record in the bookings. In figuring the percentages no allowances were made for closed theatres, the full number of theatres in each territory, whether open or closed, being used in the computations.

The splendid patriotic spirit and cooperative effort of the World managers and salesmen are evidenced by the high percentages obtained. As a result of their combined efforts, "America's Answer" has a booking record surpassed by very few pictures, if any.

Gain may be temporary and uncertain; but expense is constant and certain—Buy War Savings Stamps.

FACTS AND COMMENTS

Not All Statistics Make Dry Reading

CONTAINED in the statistics issued by the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, and which will be found on another page, are figures that provide matter for congratulation. These tell of the extension of the activities of the American film man into the great territory in South America. While for the eleven months of 1918 covered in the report there is indicated a falling off of film exports for nearly every other part of the world, Argentina and Brazil show a substantial business. Australia, too, has increased its importations from the United States from 6,590,959 feet in 1916 to 8,687,340 feet in 1917, while for 1918 the total is 10,469,565 feet—a showing that is worth while.

The exportation of exposed film to the world at large fell practically one-half from 1916 to 1918. The respective figures are 142,672,556 feet, with a value of $6,440,624, in the former year, and 72,323,729 feet, valued at $4,140,564, for 1918. It will be noted that the loss of business with the United Kingdom in the two years is represented by the respective figures of 77,884,168 feet and 13,796,235 feet. France, too, shows a drop from 15,489,229 feet to 1,093,927 feet. As to these latter figures, of course, "it is the war." Not all statistics form dry reading, and it is likely the report of the Commerce Bureau will be found a notable exception.

The Passing of Frank Cannock

THE death of Frank Cannock will come as a shock to a host of firm friends, gathered to him in the course of a long and busy and honored career in the field of projection mechanics. On another page Mr. Richardson tells us of what Mr. Cannock had contributed to the upbuilding of the photodrama—for surely until there was real projection there could be no photodrama in the genuine and the best sense. Here we prefer to recall him as he was on the social side—a comrade it was a privilege to know and a man the trade at large can ill afford to lose.

Los Angeles Chirking Up

OUT in Los Angeles the natives—a comparative few by birth and the great majority by adoption—love to refer to their city as the mecca of the motion picture pilgrim, the hub of the cinematographic universe. There have been doings out in that part of the country during the past few weeks which lend color to their claim, which would seem to make good some of the assertions they are so prone to publish as to their dominance in the production division of the industry. This time it has been on the business side that interest has been concentrated on the City of Angels. What with the meeting of the directors of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, the formation of the United Artists' Distrbuting Company—one of the larger events, perhaps, in the history of the trade—and the merger of the World Film Corporation and the United Picture Theatres of America, there have been several things doing every minute. The Chamber of Commerce of the hustling city will not fail to take note of all this activity, and capitalize it.

Stop Swearing at the Operator

PICTUREGOERS who have acquired the habit of indulging—under their breath—in a mild form of profanity whenever there may be a seemingly long wait between pictures, when the string of announcement slides extends beyond the patience of the short-tempered "fan," or when there may be a break in the film, will have to clap on the mental lid, so to speak. Enters the woman czar of the temple of machinery, symbolic of the ever-widening field of female endeavor. Who, however, after looking upon the likeness of Mrs. Lorena Stahley, as presented upon another page, can imagine any one in the house in front of so charming a woman being even inclined to mutter harsh words at anything which may happen on the screen! Come to think of it, as Mrs. Stahley passed an examination reported to be the highest in that community, there is small likelihood there will be any untoward occurrence furnishing ground for unfavorable comment. We may be sure the projection in the Rose Garden Theatre, in Portland avenue, Rochester, will be A1.

SCHEMES AND SUB-TITLES

By Robert C. McElravy.

"He has been known to wipe his spectacles fifty times and still leave the reader unconvinced that the matter has been well attended to."

Thus humorously a writer in the current number of "The Unpopular Review" speaks with reference to what he terms an "automaton," or a typical character in the American short story. The writer of this article, which is entitled "The Short-Story Bacillus," dwells at length on the ineffectiveness of so many of our short stories, saying, among other things: "Our short story has acquired so many of the externals of good writing that it has dulled us to what good writing is in itself."

What he has to say with reference to the value of special scenes we think will interest screen writers: "One seems to have heard that the plot of a book rarely stays in mind; that what survives the reading is the pleasure got from the individual scenes, from the way a thing chances to be said in the individual line." And again: "To our American quick narrative the good line—more especially the good scene—does not often chance. The writer has to know so well where he is going and how soon he must be there that interest shifts. The end becomes desirable; the leisure of wayside detail almost unknown. The scene of the average American story has now become so short that it is rarely actuated before the plot has hurried on. The characters are analyzed—most certainly!—but they are given little time to think or act in any sustained fashion for themselves. In fact, everything is done for them except to allow them time in which to live."

Importance of Identifying Your Characters

TOO much cannot be said of the importance of getting characters thoroughly identified with the story and with themselves before the plot gets to boiling. It is the breathless hurry to get into the action that robs many a story of its rightful charm and significance. There is a play on the legitimate stage in New York just now which we think suffers from this very thing—"The Crowded Hour." The cast of characters is literally dumped on the stage in the first act. They do a lot of talking and perhaps explaining, but it is all so ineffective that two whole acts transpire before the observer gets into sympathetic touch with them. From that point the play succeeds admirably because it is big in theme and possesses dramatic situations of real worth.

There is something wrong with the story or the play when we do not at once come to grip with the characters, for we cannot possibly develop an interest worth while until we do. So long as the characters lack special identity we are not impressed with the importance of what they are doing.

"The Heart of Humanity," for Example

CONSIDER now in contrast Allen Holubar's film drama, "The Heart of Humanity," which matches up in theme and treatment with the best modern plays of the season, and is far ahead of most of them. Here we are plunged at once into scenic effects of rare beauty. Before the characters are brought on we have been submerged and entranced by a special atmosphere. When the characters appear each one of them is skilfully woven into the pattern of the story and occupies an unforgettable place in it. They get a hold on one and never let go.

There is no doubting or confusion, all due to the fact that the director took time to make the right impression at the beginning. There is a lingering touch and the scenes progress without haste. Gradually the action rises and breaks into dramatic episodes that have been properly timed and prepared for.

Plot is not everything in a story; it is not even the most important thing. The great achievement of any story is to tell what it has to offer with effectiveness and charm. We should not forget "the pleasure got from the individual scene, from the way a thing chances to be said in the individual line." If the manner of putting a thing in pictures is improved by the use of sub-titles they should be employed. The screen has often been challenged to tell its stories without sub-titles, but it is under no obligations to accept the challenge. When it aids characterization to utilize them they should undoubtedly be used.

UP ON THE GREAT DIVIDE

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

THERE is a parting of waters in motion picture production, on one side only backsliding to failure, or a frail hold on mediocrity; on the other a rough and tortuous journey to an ever-increasing flood of success. There are two paths over the summit, one of practice that seems easy, though it is long and rugged; the other of applied science that seems difficult, though it is merely the utilization of observation and experience. These two paths differ at the start, but they finally converge in one.

By the first path came Griffith, Porter, Blackton and Ince.

By the second came Collins, Thomas, Beach and DeMille.

All eight finally used the grand path of study and experience.

The pioneers were vital sources of energy and invention, but it was not possible for them to be effective if detached from experience, and they had to be largely guided by their own — manufacture their precedents as they progressed. Those who came in later and exhibited the rare wisdom of applying study and observation to what had already been done and to future requirements of production are now safely over the divide.

All eight of these men and others can look securely backward.

It is for them to decide how much we depend upon convention.

From them we may expect a reaching out toward finer ideals.

Future Depends on Such Men

NONE of them will probably attempt to exactly determine how much loyalty we owe to cherished products of the past, its finest examples, Griffith's marvels of contrast and grandeur of conception, Porter's unfailing font of originality, Blackton's artistic and spiritual beauty, Ince's breadth of view and development of dramatic essentials; and none may outline what the future promises. It is theirs to continue careful study and experiment, to prove and disprove, to bring budding ideals to full blossom.

Yet largely on such men our future depends.

What is to be their attitude toward future development?

What is to be the attitude of the public toward their work?

The brain of any man capable of exercising it for the highest objects of our existence has a peculiar sensitiveness to whatever is mean, low and base in commercial procedure. This does not mean an aversion to the essentials of publicity and distribution, but it does mean an antipathy to political trickery and false conceptions of what is meant by "good business," for this business defeats its own ends wherever it crushes artistry.

At the root of the whole business is skill of production.

Every element of productive skill should be constantly encouraged.

It has to be nourished in order to grow, yet we find commercial heads still cherishing the delusion that old lamps can be sold for new; still afflicted with a suicidal tendency to subordinate intrinsic merit to billboard notoriety; still slavishly deferent to a star system that permits the stars to cut off nearly all the dividend coupons

Must Keep Step With Growing Intelligence

THE whole future of business may depend upon real leaders. Only such will go to the edge of a precipice to scan the way. That there are better ways to finer success no one doubts.

It is not at all impossible for genuine leaders to bring about an equitable clearing house, bearing some such relation to the industry that the Federal Reserve does to banking; not a scheming political organization, selfish and self-annihilating in the end, but one adapted to the sane and solid adjustment of vexed questions continually bubbling up from the old residuum of ignorance and stupidity. There is a very unattractive scum of the movies which needs skimming off.

We are dealing in a highly specialized product of artistry.

There is nothing in favor of our dissipating energy on past performances of any kind except for historical preservation in cans. We are addressing wise fans of today and bright minds of the future generation, so we had better keep step with common growing intelligence.

THE MIDDLE CLASS MOB

By Edward Weitzel.

CLASS distinction in its social or political aspects is not the subject of this article. The middle class mob referred to is that dominating factor of moving picture patrons whose standard of art, good taste, dramatic value, screen entertainment or whatever it may be called, is the mark at which every producer aims when he sets out to make a photoplay.

Unlike the stage, the screen has no "Little Theatre Movement," no school of reformers that turns its back squarely and uncompromisingly on the demands of that portion of theatregoers known as the general public and directs its efforts at a small and financially unproductive minority known as highbrows. Screen fiction is manufactured with but one end in view—to please the greatest number of paying patrons that can be induced to leave their money at the box office window.

Such being the case, it is evident that hitting the mark with any class of screen story is never a happy accident, but the result of expert knowledge gained by practical experience as to what the general public wants along certain lines.

In other words, showmanship! It is this sort of skill that enables a producer of stage plays to add to his bank account, year after year; and forced one refreshingly frank critic to admit the other day, under his own signature, that, as a general rule, the plays he condemned enjoyed long life and bountiful prosperity, while those he praised almost always ended their public career in a week or so and were carted off to the limbo of forgotten things.

The Showman's Book of Rules.

CAREFUL study of the screen will show that its standards of popular taste are identical with those of the stage, and the moving pictures that are returning the big profits are governed by the same rules of showmanship that are followed by the makers of all the successful spoken dramas. The stage showman always endeavors to follow the path of least resistance to the pocketbook of the public. And it is quite within reason that the screen producer is anxious to travel along the same road.

To do this safely, to win the support of the middle class mob—the body of screen patrons that requires clean, sane and easily digested entertainment—it is necessary that the producer keep a file index of the situations in mimic life that never fail to win the public, and also of those that are always rejected by this same capricious but self-determinate mass of amusement-buyers. The moving pictures that pay no attention to the showman's book of rules are the ones that cause the exhibitor to consider the advisability of changing his line of goods.

Watching Censorship In the Tar Steel State

FOSTERERS of the North Carolina censorship bill are awaiting the psychological moment to introduce their measure before the State Legislature, and Secretary H. B. Varner, of the North Carolina Exhibitors' Association, is expecting to hear the news about January 25. Mr. Varner has just returned from a two days' "scout" trip to Raleigh and reports everything set for the fight the state exhibitors will stage whenever the bill is introduced.

Mr. Varner, in a conversation with the Moving Picture World correspondent expressed entire confidence that the measure would never become a law. "I feel confident that we are going to kill the censorship move, and by persistent work and by using the right kind of propaganda we may even prevent the bill from being introduced. But we must not go to sleep. If we had not done what we already have, the situation would not look so favorable right now; but we have gone up against the proposition good and strong and if the people understand the facts they generally try to do the right thing."

Oscar A. Morgan, president of the Washington Exchange Managers' organization, is addressing letters to all exhibitors in the North Carolina territory urging them to do their bit. He details the hardships that such a law would impose, giving as an example the fact that whereas the Washington exchanges now carry from two to four prints, the passage of the censorship bill would make only the one print which had been made to conform to the censorship board's ruling available to exhibitors. This would make it impracticable to obtain early dates on new productions as released since this one print would have to work the entire state. BAIN.

King Jars Mr. Manana.

Charles S. King, new Universal manager at Havana, Cuba, took up his work at the island exchange with a rush recently. The first week at the exchange he added several new accounts to the books and gave the natives a good idea of Universal "pep" by filming the reception given officers and sailors of the French ship Gloire in the afternoon and having the pictures running in several theatres the same evening.

Mr. King is now making a trip around the island getting acquainted with exhibitors and conditions.

"Maybe Stone Has It"—Films So Old That They Are New in Present Comparison

IF we live long enough and things last long enough, most things that we have can be used all over again. This is the case with a set of five thousand feet of short length film negative recently purchased by Abram Stone from a member of the old International Film Company once of 44 Broad Street, New York City, and which stopped producing in 1898.

This concern was at that time making films of current news value, and of a width that can be used on the projection machines of today. These films were advertised in a catalog of twenty years ago as films for the standard or Edison gauge projection machines. Among the subjects in Stone's possession are scenes on Fifth Avenue, Broadway, Battery Place, and the Bowery, and which are especially interesting as contrasted with pictures of the same places at the present day. Glen Island, that is no more, and scenes at the old Rockaway are also in the collection. President McKinley making his inaugural address and other scenes pertaining to the McKinley inauguration and including other prominent personages such as Grover Cleveland are also there. There is a picture of the famous prize fight between Jack Downey of New York and Frank Paterson of Boston, and a picture of the Cunarder "Teutonic" at the docks. One of the choice bits which points emphatically at modern progress is a picture of the late Wilbur Wright winning the world's prize for a 300-foot flight in his aeroplane. Could it be imagined that so remarkably short a period of time could bring about such rapid and wonderful developments in aerial flight as have been accomplished? The Greater New York police patrol with their horse and wagon equipment of only a few years ago, the New York Fire Department in action, a New York band in parade up Fifth Avenue, the old 71st regiment of New York taking part in the McKinley inaugural parade and also the Black Hussars, McKinley's personal escort, are shown in lengths of this remarkable old negative. These and many other subjects are among this interesting old collection in which we can compare scenes of twenty years ago with those which surround us today.

"A Prizma Color Visit to Catalina."

One of the "Little Journeys" which the Prizma, Inc., is releasing via the World Film takes us on a trip to Catalina Island, and introduces us to its most attractive features. The Prizma color method by which these pictures have been taken gives an unusual tone to the photographic quality of the scenes, which include bathing scenes, showing pretty bathers in brilliantly colored costumes, birds of the island, and glimpses of the rocky coast. This picture was exhibited at the Rivoli Theatre during the week of Jan. 12.

"In The Woods of Paris."

Scenes in the Bois de Boulogne, one of the most beautiful of the parks of Paris, comprise this release of the Educational Films Corporation of America. The picture is a hand colored one and is exceptionally beautiful as regards subject matter and photography. The shady drives and wooded streams, the picturesque edifices scattered here and there, the waterfalls, fountains and gardens are all things of beauty which are delightfully portrayed in the film. One of the features of the Rivoli's program of the week of Jan. 12.

"Montana Mountain Adventures."

Another number of Major Jack Allen's Outdoor Series was exhibited at the Strand Theatre, New York City, during the week of Jan. 12. This number photographed in the wilds of Montana illustrates the cares of a single day in the life of Mrs. Bob Bakker, wife of the noted Montana wild animal roper. The picture shows Mrs. Bakker looking to the protection of her hen coop and felling a meddlesome bear with one shot from her trusty gun. We also see her making the round of the traps from which she gathers the day's spoils in fur neck pieces, etc. Taking the children to school includes a row across the river every morning, and an occasional adventure with a mountain lion. All of this picture is authentic and not staged; it is merely a page in the life of a Montana woman.

Universal Screen Magazine Items.

In the 102nd release of the Universal Screen Magazine will be found a series of interesting subjects including scenes in the forests of the American Northwest, showing U. S. Signal Corps men engaged in the logging industry on a large scale, providing spruce for our army's aeroplanes. "Gold Mining at Coney Island" shows evidence of many lost articles of jewelry turned in by the sea. This number closes with the usual series of "miracles in mud" by Willie Hopkins.

Scene from "The Broken Law" (Fox).

Scene from "Regeneration" (Fox).

"Wooden Shoe Kiddies."

The children of Holland as shown in the Educational Films Corporation's picture in natural colors are quaint in their picturesque Dutch costumes. Considerable comedy has been worked into the subject by well-worded subtitles which accentuate the incidents of the film. This picture formed a portion of the reel entitled "The Woods of Paris," as shown at the Rivoli Theatre.

"Japan of Today, No. 2."

This Pathe-Post number presents one of the most interesting subjects that has yet come out of Japan, as it goes into intimate details in picturing the amazing industrial energy of the country. Not only are the various pursuits interesting in themselves, but the methods of producing manufactured articles differ greatly from our own. The manufacture of rope from rice straw, match boxes, Damascene work, Japanese lanterns and matting is illustrated; also the breeding and raising of gold fish.

"Official War Review, No. 30."

Distribution of food and cigarettes by Red Cross workers leads this issue. It gives a number of interesting views taken at the front, showing a march of American troops between Vesle and the Aisne in the face of an enemy bombardment. Captured guns and munitions are pictured. Other views include close-ups of General Haig, the King of Italy and the Duke of Aosta. A Pathe release.

"The River Gray and the River Green."

A scenic study by Robert C. Bruce, and which was exhibited at the Rivoli Theatre, New York City, during the week of January 5, was presented by the Educational Films Corporation of America. The picture is a beautiful one, which follows the story of two rivers from their different sources—one starting high up in mountain glaciers, and the other originating in a spring in a green meadow. The River Gray, heartless as the source from which it came, rushes along in a noisy, careless manner; while the River Green flows silently and harmlessly along its course, even to the edge of the precipice, over which it falls gently, devoid of the noisy ostentation of the River Gray.

Exhibitors' Mutual Field Changes.

A. S. Kirkpatrick, assistant general manager of Exhibitors' Mutual Distributing Corporation, announces the following apopintments in the field:

R. C. Herman, formerly with Mutual in Omaha and with Universal in Milwaukee, has been appointed branch manager at Oklahoma City.

L. L. Ponnybaker, branch manager at Oklahoma City, has been transferred to the managership of the Kansas City branch.

H. L. Conway, a salesman for Select at Milwaukee, has been appointed branch manager at Indianapolis, vice Isaac Boitman, who had been acting branch manager and who returns to the road.

Fred G. Sliter, formerly branch manager for the Mutual at Albany and later at New York City, who resigned to become film commissioner to Mexico for the Committee on Public Information, has been appointed special salesman and assigned to the Pittsburgh territory.

CIRCLE'S INFLUENCE TO BE EXPANDED

Owners of Indianapolis Theatre Aim to Make House an Institution of National Interest

AT the annual meeting of the Circle Theatre Company and the Monument Realty Company, owners and operators of the Circle Theatre, at Indianapolis, the following officers were re-elected for the ensuing year:

A. L. Block, president; Robert Lieber, vice-president and treasurer, and R. S. Norwood, secretary. In addition to these officers, Fred C. Gardner, Leox Rappoport, H. P.. Lieber and Meyer Efroymson were elected as directors, Mr. Gardner and Mr. Rappaport being the new members of the board.

The Circle Theatre, which is now entering into its third year of operation, has been kept in perfect physical condition, improvements being constantly made in the equipment to make for more efficient service and better productions. The decorations and furnishings are kept in such a manner that the house is in as perfect a condition as the day when it was opened.

The plans for the new year outline a program of even more notable achievements than in the past as it is the ambition of Mr. Block, the president, and the other officers of the company that the Circle prove more than a mere commercial enterprise as it has been since the start, that it be developed into an institution of national interest and civic pride.

The reports of the President, secretary and treasurer all showed a successful year, and the report of the president referred to S. Barret McCormick, manager, as one of the two most capable theatre executives in the country. The Circle is now presenting the film "Cannibals of the South Seas" for two weeks and is drawing excellent crowds.

Arnette Opens the Liberty.

James Arnette, who for the past three years has been manager of the Rex Theatre, West Frankfort, Ill., has leased a building just being vacated by a large grocery firm in that town and will reconstruct the interior to meet the requirements of picture exhibition. Early in February he will have the work completed and will open the Liberty Theatre. Harmon Kinison will be his machine operator and Glee Hall will be pianist.

Zukor at Coast Reports Conditions Are Improving

ADOLPH ZUKOR, president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, is now busily engaged in conferences with Cecil B. DeMille, D. W. Griffith, Douglas Fairbanks, Thomas H. Ince, Mack Sennett and other allied producers for Paramount and Artcraft at the California studios. This is Mr. Zukor's regular winter trip to the Coast.

Adolph Zukor,

President of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation; Edgar Selwyn, who has written a play which Cecil B. De Mille is now producing for Artcraft, and Mr. De Mille, at the Lasky Studio, Hollywood.

"I visited a number of cities on my way to the Coast," said Mr. Zukor, "and found that conditions in the industry are improving generally following the period of uncertainty during the recent epidemic. This is subsiding everywhere, I found, and business is picking up generally. The future as I see it is most reassuring."

"Do It Now" Is Good Stuff.

That motion pictures, like hay, should be made while the sun shines is the conviction of Maxwell Karger, director general in charge of production activities at the new Metro studios in Hollywood. Karger's business slogan, anyway, is "Do it now." Hence the appearance on the Metro stages the other day of two large white signs bearing these words:

"Exteriors companies must leave studios not later than 8:30 a. m. Interiors companies must start shooting not later than 9 a. m."

And with Karger, 8:30 means 8:30; 9 o'clock doesn't mean 9:01 or 9:02. The Metro stars working in Hollywood, incidentally, made no complaint, as Karger himself is invariably prompt.

Teachers Praise "Little Women."

Preceding the public showing of the Paramount-Artcraft Special, "Little Women," in Boston, where it is now being presented to capacity audiences, the Boston Exchange of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation gave a special pre-release showing of the William A. Brady production to about a hundred representative members of the Boston Teachers' Club, including the various publicity committees of the school teachers of Greater Boston.

"To say the teachers were delighted with the production," writes John P. McConville, of the Boston Exchange, to the Home Office, "is putting it all too lightly. They were all enthusiastic."

TALKS OF CONDITIONS IN THE ORIENT

Famous Players Representative Speaks of Status of Industry in Japan, China and the Philippines

IT is an interesting story—how the moving picture was introduced into the Orient; interesting indeed as related by J. W. Allen, special representative of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, who spent the season of 1916-1917 in Japan, China and the Philippine Islands.

Mr. Allen, who is visiting the office of Louis Marcus, district manager in Salt Lake City, Utah, deserves credit for promoting the introduction of up-to-date pictures in Japan, and his success came about in an unusual manner. His was not the first effort to place motion pictures in the Orient, no, indeed not. This is the way he succeeded.

Crossing the Pacific Ocean on a honeymoon trip, Mr. Allen made the acquaintance of a Japanese nobleman. The Japanese gave Mr. Allen to understand that he would be glad to meet him when he should come to Japan. That acquaintance was a lucky thing for Allen.

Reaching Tokio, Mr. Allen decided to see what he could do to introduce the motion picture. While at a theatre there, he was unexpectedly informed that he was wanted outside. To his surprise there stood the acquaintance of his ocean voyage bedecked in the apparel of Japanese royalty. About him the Orientals were bowing in homage, and Allen immediately realized the importance of this Japanese in his own country. The evident friendship between the Japanese nobleman and Mr. Allen was enough—that landed the moving picture in Tokio, and incidentally sent Mr. Allen from the San Francisco office to the New York office of the Famous Players-Lasky corporation. In speaking of the motion picture industry in the Orient, Mr. Allen said:

Philippine Theatres Poorly Built.

"When I visited Japan, China and the Philippines in 1916-1917, high-class motion pictures had not been seen in those countries. I succeeded in placing Paramount and Artcraft pictures in all three, however.

"The theatre in the Philippines is built with the idea of barely furnishing protection from the rain. The sides are usually open, but may be closed when the heavy tropical rains come.

"The Filipinos have an artistic temperament. When we showed 'Carmen' an orchestra of native instruments played the music of 'Carmen.' The Filipinos were greatly pleased with pictures, many having studied art under the Spanish. They appreciate things of this nature which are really good.

Forty Theatres in China.

"In China there is one theatre for every 10,000,000 inhabitants, there being not more than 40 theatres in the country. These theatres are located at the treaty ports which are governed by the white man's law. It is next to impossible to establish a theatre in the interior of China. The Chinese do not want conflict between the civil and military authorities, and the soldiers insist upon free admission.

"If this were allowed the theatre would be full of soldiers all the time. When it is refused sufficient soldiers pay for admission to get inside and wreck the house. The civil authorities refuse to interfere.

"Then, too, the average Chinese lives by barter. Some do not have a copper cent once in a year. They have just enough to exist on and they can not pay to attend a picture show. So the motion picture theatre for the interior of China is a long way off.

Japan Holds Bright Prospects.

"In Japan the percentage of theatres is much greater than in China. They are protected in interior cities, and the industry promises to prosper in that country. While exhibiting a picture the Japanese have what they call the 'katsuban' to explain it. They do not translate the subtitles as that would be difficult in Japanese. They interpret the story their own way and frequently give it a most unique meaning.

"The western picture such as the 'Bill' Hart feature they interpret to be a story of the Shogungs, the ancient troublemakers of the Orient. Thus, adapted to the age of the feudal rulers, the picture is given an entirely different meaning, but it is explained in such a manner by the katsuban, that it seems plausible. In other words, they give to the Occidental story an Oriental setting.

"The Japanese decorate their amusement houses elaborately. In cherry blossom time they are beautifully decorated with cherry blossoms. They like serials best because they are more like the Japanese play which ordinarily runs about 100 nights, a fraction of the plot being presented each night.

"There are now two motion picture producing studios at Tokio and the industry has got a start which promises big results in the not too distant future. At these studios they are making short comedies. They have Japanese actors who imitate our comedians, Charlie Chaplin, 'Fatty' Arbuckle, and others with amusing accuracy. The Japanese like comedies and are progressing fast in this line."

Count Tolstoi to Appear in Rivoli Productions

A FEATURE of special innovation to the film industry is the signing of Count Illya Tolstoi by S. Fox, of the Rivoli Film Producing Corporation, for a series of pictures based on the count's works and which provides for his personal appearance in all the productions:

Coincident with this feature is also the engagement of A. J. Bloome, who will direct the entire series of these pictures. Mr. Bloome has just completed direction and editing of "The Question" for the Rivoli corporation, with James K. Hackett, Irving Cummings and Ormi Hawley, and it is a picture of timely interest, in which Mr. Hackett plays the dominating part.

Mr. Bloome's first identification with the film industry was in the introduction of "Satan," released in 1912, and one of the first pictures presented as a theatrical attraction and also to charge one and two dollar admissions. Mr. Bloome also will be remembered for his beautiful productions with the Savoia Film Company of America.

A studio has been secured for the Tolstoi productions; work has already been started on the first script, and several well-known artists are under consideration.

Virginia Pearson Starts Work.

The Virginia Pearson Corporation will produce photoplays of a higher type, with vitally interesting and absorbing stories, at the same time suited to Miss Pearson's personality, the kind of pictures that give one a feeling of time well spent, and not soon to be forgotten.

The corporation started work on January 20, having selected the Thanhauser Studio in New Rochelle. The first release will no doubt be in March and will be a five or six reel film. The title is "The Bishop's Emeralds," taken from the novel of that name by Houghton Townley, which had such a tremendous sale in England and has been out of print for a long time.

Baker Loses Perfectly Good Beard.

First it was his appendix, then it was his beard. George D. Baker, who directed Nazimova in "Revelation" and "Toys of Fate," lost his vermiform and hirsute appendices in California. And he doesn't miss either of them.

It was along about last April when a Los Angeles physician operated on Baker. He relieved him of his abnormal appendix and a slice of his subnormal bank account—the latter having already suffered from war bond and war charity drives. A lowly Hollywood barber rendered his chin hairless for twenty-five cents and a tip.

Courtesy.

DON'T forget that there is a difference between courtesy and ostentation. Ostentation may impress a few patrons, but courtesy appeals to all. You can tog your ushers out in gold and broadcloth, you can have thick carpets on the floor and an orchestra of fifty pieces, but if your house employes lack courtesy, if the seats are dusty or hat racks are permitted to hang by a single screw, if your projection is poor and your doorkeeper a grouch, you will not win. You may not be able to afford cloth-of-gold suits for your ushers and perhaps your floor is bare, but you can insist that your house people be friendly, you can go over the house every morning yourself, you can make it homelike and comfortable and appealing, and in the long run you will do more business. If you will be half as particular about the character of your employes as you are about the entertainment value of your films, you can sell service along with the features, for amusement is not merely film, but film seen under the most advantageous conditions of comfort, and comfort and luxury are words with different meanings.

How About This?

Harry Pomeroy, of the Holman, Montreal, is noted for his lobby showings, but we think that this pair of photographs offers something new. He ran "Where Are My Children?" and offered this house display:

A Lobby Display from the Holman, Montreal, for "Where Are My Children?"

The film made so good that it was held over for a second week. The initial display was still good, but to emphasize the rebook an entire new display was arranged with the exception of the one sheet in the extreme right hand frame. All the rest of the display is brand new and worded to drive home the fact that this is a second week. It will be noticed that the first picture was taken after a rain while the second shows a snow effect. The picture would be better were it possible to get that trolley pole out of the way, but we take it that Mr. Pomeroy would rather be on the trolley line than get a good photograph. A third picture shows the display for Carmel Myers in "A Society Sensation." Here the same decorative scheme is carried out in all of the displays. It is not always easy to carry out this idea with a variety of frames and it requires a very pronounced effect to get the scheme over, but Mr. Pomeroy has not only done this successfully, but he has gained a striking display. He does not indicate the color scheme used, but the bannerette suggests that this is a Victory Loan week and it is to be presumed that the colors are red and white. The frame to the left of the trolley pole announces "Mary Pickford, 100 Per Cent. Canadian," in allusion to the fact that she was born in Toronto. Mr. Pomeroy is not overlooking any bets, it would seem.

From a Press Book.

Somehow it is seldom that you get really practical ideas from a producer's campaign book, but this half page for

A Half Page Designed by the Pathe Press Department for Pearl White That Is Above the General Press Book Average.

Pathe's "The Lightning Raider" is good enough to warrant reproduction. It is clean, restrained and has selling power. Keeping the proportions and using a smaller cut, it would go as well in an eighth-page or in any width from three columns up. For that matter the press book as a whole is more practical than usual, for most of the press stories are written to be printed and not merely to impress the manager. Some of the paragraphs are objectionable in that they expose the climax of the chapter in the advance notice and so spoil the surprise, but they are all written in newspaper and not in circus English.

Franklin's Patriotic Ad.

For "Under Four Flags," Harold B. Franklin, of the Hippodrome, Buffalo, departed from his usual form of displays and took a four elevens for this very sightly display. Both in layout and text this advertisement is excellent, avoiding the sensational and yet inspiring the desire to see the picture. The frame holds it away from all the other displays on the page and its size obtains for it a preferred position, though it does not really need any advantage of position, for it will show in any part of the paper. It cannot well be overlooked. The line, "The Nations report to the people on how the victory was won," is timely and appealing. It cannot be offered as a war subject now. It is indeed a report, and the description is apt.

Lately we showed some excellent results obtained by Harold B. The singles try to tell rather too much, for six and eight point banks are less likely to be read in a single than in a double, particularly where an excess of your surface suggests that the selling has all been concentrated in the pictorial display. This would not hold good in a smaller town, but in Chicago, and on the theatrical page, we think that the appeal must be bold and instant, and we do not think that a type bank will be read in the single, though it probably will be in the double, largely because that is more closely connected with the cut. In the singles the use of the main title between the attractor cut and the bank of type does the mischief. If the attraction was sold—and we think it was—it was sold by the upper portion of the display. It would have been better to have let the title fall to the bottom of the display letting in the type directly under the cut. Three more examples are shown in single fives. That on the right is for Mildred Harris in "Borrowed Clothes," and, oddly enough, the line for the scene sketch reads, "Why make a fuss over a few orange blossoms?" To be consistent the house brackets "Mrs. Charles Chaplin" in letters so small that they are practically lost. It is not possible to get good results with a reverse cut where the letters are smaller than twelve point, and not then if the imprint is bad. Here the black is more nearly a gray, and the line is lost. The black and white of Chaplin is a much better idea, even better than the display for "Bread," though this is well lettered and clear. The Casino takes an unusually large space and sometimes drops several inches more, particularly when they are about to change the bill, when the house signature is dropped to the centre of the space and the coming attraction is advertised above and the passing attraction below.

Raises and Reserves.

The next time you have to raise prices, try reserving a few of the choice rows at a slight increase. If you go from fifteen to twenty cents, for example, have three or four rows of reserves for twenty-five cents and put these on sale a week in advance. That extra five cents will care for the printing of the tickets and the usher to take charge of the seating, and in no time at all you will find that your reserves sell best. Then you can increase the reservation, row by row, until the major portion of your house is sold in advance. But don't slide your scale to meet the feature. Don't reserve five rows regularly and ten for a feature. We used to work for a theatre which had two grades of seats on the orchestra floor, but you never knew until you got there whether the first ten or the first twenty rows would be fifty cents, and the man who came in early and sat in the eleventh row for thirty-five cents one night was sore if he came next time and had to sit in the twenty-first row. The seats were not reserved, but a stub passed the holder beyond the rope barrier, and this barrier was put up each evening in accordance with the management's ideas as to what the business might be. If it promised to be large, twenty rows were shut off. If it was raining or the bill was poor, from ten to fifteen rows would be reserved. It took only six months to put the business all to the bad and the house was a year getting its patronage back on an all-seats-the-same-price basis. On the other hand, if you increase the reservations permanently in response to demand, there will be no complaint, and this can very easily be done. If you run two shows a night, have the coupons a different color for the first and second shows, and have it understood that the reservation is good only for the performance indicated on the stub. Rack the seats so that you can get at any ticket quickly, and if your advance sale is large, have a special box office for the advance and sell from another window for the show then running. You will find, in most instances, that the reserved seat will bring out a new class of trade.

Well Built.

There are several points about this advertisement of the Rialto, Indianapolis. Just below the house signature appears the announcement, in full face: "The management of this theatre does not desire to interfere with any religious service on Monday morning, and will not open on Sundays until 12 noon. Week days at 9:45 A. M." Another feature is the slogan, "Let's go to the one o'clock show," which is a variant of come early. But the best point is that centre panel with a striking line from the story. This probably did more to sell the show than all the rest of the space, but the rest of the space is essential to the proper display of the panel, and good use is made of the lines below the title, which tell of the play's stage success. It is a very well built advertisement from every angle.

Something New.

Arthur J. Sykes, of the Andrews Theatre, Sherman, Texas, sends in something new for a program. It is four inches wide by eight inches for the last page. Each preceding page is half an inch shorter, to provide a drop, and below the cover these are listed as "First week," and so on with "Xmas week" instead of "Fourth week," and Cleopatra, which was the Christmas day attraction on the last page. The front page is shown in the cut. The back page is given over to house announcement. The whole is tied with holly ribbon threaded through two eyelet holes. The front and back pages are card stock, grey, the front printed in red and green with a Christmas design, while the back page is printed in one color. The inside pages are lighter stock and are printed in black with the tabs in red. The days are not dated, but with this exception it is one of the most complete folders sent in for a long time. There was a time when fancy folders were common, but since the war such examples have been very uncommon. Such a program is worth what it costs. More than once it has been demonstrated that even so simple an expedient as tying a program with a common pink cord will cause a much greater percentage of them to be taken home for future consultation. There is the suggestion of real value, which works in favor of the decoration.

Steve Was Ready.

Steve Farrar was ready when the health authorities opened Harrisburg, Ill. The same paper that announced the relaxation carried his regular advertisement and a special, the latter the "Hey Skinny" from this department. The newspaper story announced that the Grand did not know what it was going to have, but it would be "something extra," but it was able to announce that the Orpheum, Steve's house, would have Geraldine Farrar in "The Devil Stone" and Sennett's "Two Tough Tenderfeet." There was no question as to what Steve had. He was there on the front and back page both, the Skinny dropping four inches immediately below the announcement of the opening with a four sixes on the back page, and we think that he drew the bulk of the business because people knew what they would see there and did not have to speculate on a mysterious something. That's the sort of a manager Steve is. He was closed down nine long weeks, yet he did not go to sleep and was ready with his show the moment the order came. Steve is one of the best examples of the small-town hustler. He was right on the job, and he watched the department for material for his opening campaign. That "Notice" at the bottom of the display advertisement is also taken from an advertisement reproduced in these pages. He profited by the example of those who got an early release from quarantine and was all ready with copy to jump right in. We have missed Steve lately, and we hope that now he keeps right on coming in. He staved off the closing as long as possible, and now that he is open again it is to be hoped that he is permitted to keep open.

They're Wise to Bleich.

The Inquirer, of Owensboro, Ky., gives a column and a half to the disbanding of the local Four Minute Men. It incorporates the statement of the chairman, and nearly half of the chairman's remarks are devoted to George A. Bleich, who owns all of the theatres in that town, and who, moreover, is well to the fore in any local movement. Mr. Sutton says:

> "And George Bleich! There is a man, a patriot, an American, every inch and every minute. My Four Minute Men were the boys with the guns and he was the army Back Home. Without him they could not have gone anywhere or have done anything. With him they fought and won the war in Owensboro. George Bleich and the Empress deserve well of the people."

We have spoken before of Mr. Bleich's participation in the public movements in his town. He is not merely the man who runs the picture theatre, he is one of the solid citizens, and he gives to the pictures a real distinction. If all exhibitors were like Mr. Bleich the picture business would be ten times as prosperous as it is, because Mr. Bleich feels the same sense of obligation to his business as he does toward his fellow citizens. He gives to the business of exhibition all that is in him. He manages his houses instead of merely running them.

A Difference.

Dayton, Ohio, had two sets of pictures of the surrender of the German Fleet. The Dayton Theatre ran them unannounced as a special in order to get them on the bill quickly, and the newspaper accounts of the showings at that and another house are so strongly contrasting that we think the second house would have been better off without their set of pictures.

Manufacturers' Notice.

IT IS an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be indorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication, it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second sets of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

fact that the average union contains members whose knowledge of their profession is very largely imaginary. A really competent examination would stick them before it was well started. They blunder through their daily task somehow, but in the process do inestimable damage. Strained, abraided sprocket holes, oil-smeared films, wasted power in the form of light and abnormal flicker tendency are a few of the deep footprints left in their trail of destruction. Weakened eyes and lessened enjoyment in return for the money paid by the audience are others. Yet in all too many cases these men carry union cards. All too often they flash a union slide on the screen, followed by work which even the veriest tyro in the audience knows is anything else than high grade.

The union card should stand for high-grade work. I would even go to the length of pulling union men out of houses where a penurious or dishonest management will not supply equipment necessary for first-class projection, or compels the ruining of screen results in other ways. Radical! Sure, I know it is, but RIGHT

Fine Projection Plant.

Over at Loew's Metropolitan Theatre, Fulton Street, Brooklyn, I found Brother George Mauro rendering the production "Mickey" on the screen. The Metropolitan, seating 4,000, was filled to capacity. Projection was excellent, except that it was at one speed, whereas "Mickey" needs many changes of projection speed to be at its best. However, considering that the "Met" is a combination vaudeville and picture house, and that in a schedule it is a foregone conclusion that the picture will get the worst of it, the results were distinctly to the credit of neighbor Mauro. He has a fine room, two Power's 6-B projectors, arc controllers, running water and every convenience. The observation ports are (wonder of wonders) of ample size for the local condition. Must be at least 18 inches high by ten wide. The throw is 150 feet, and Mauro is using 110 amperes D. C. through rheostat. I believe I can, and propose to see if I cannot, get him equal screen results with 75 amperes. Maybe I am in error, but I am not yet convinced that those very high amperages represent any gain at all, if we take everything into consideration. Remember, it is possible to locate the 75-

Mr. Robin's Speed Indicator.

John Scwerengin, Truesdale, Mo., says: "While in Chicago recently I saw a device called the Robin Speed Indicator, or some such name. It is designed to keep the projectionist informed as to his speed of his projection mechanism. Is it a thing which you recommend?"

That depends on what you mean. Mr. Robin has never officially presented the matter of his speed indicator to this department, hence this department cannot make any recommendation on it as a mechanism, though from cursory inspection the editor would say it is mechanically well made. But why a speed indicator to tell the projectionist his speed of projection when he already has the only right speed indicator in front of him all the time—the screen. What is the projectionist for, unless to so guage the speed of projection that artistic rendition of the action of the artists on the screen be secured? The use of a speed indicator, under present conditions, means just this: the manager wants to "run to schedule." He finds there are 8 reels of film, estimated at 1,000 feet per reel. He wants to begin, let us say, at 7 and close at 9. He does a simple problem in arithmetic and finds that by running at fifteen minutes to the thousand feet just two hours will be consumed. Fine! He promptly phones up to the projection room this order: "Run 'em 66 feet per minute," and sits back in his chair, knowing his installation of a speed indicator will allow the projectionist no excuse for any disobedience of his art-smashing order. And the projectionist, deprived of all initiative, sets his motor going 66 per minute and pounds out the "show" (which in spots will most likely be a holy show), with puppet actors and actresses paced through their parts by a motor. If they seem to float along in spots, and in other places fly around like mad, that is no concern of the projectionist. If the funeral procession goes at a squirming wiggle and the race drags along at snail's speed, he should worry. Sixty-six feet per is the order, and the speed indicator is right in front of him Under this condition the projectionist becomes indeed a mere "operator." He loses all ambition. The motor is the important item. He is a mere thing, tolerated in the projection room that the motor may be kept in order. High-class screen rendtion and speed indicators are mortal enemies. The speed indicator and the art-wrecking "schedule" are fast friends. If you want high-class screen results, friend Schwerengin, watch your screen and govern your projection speed by the action of the artists. That man does not live who can tell you at what speed any given reel should be projected, unless he has already projected it and timed it according to its action. As I have repeatedly pointed out, the only correct schedule is the schedule made up by having the show projected at the speed its artistic rendition calls for, that time to be the projection time of that particular show. In high-class houses, where a "show" is run for three days or more, it is increasingly the custom to time the show as above, and then cut out padding (of which there is usually plenty, to make the show fit the schedule, thus: suppose we have a schedule time of two hours, but the artistic rendition of the show we propose to run require two hours and ten minutes. Easy! We have watched the films and have made note of such things as may be cut out without harm, and often with benefit. We proceed to carefully amputate ten minutes worth of film, tagging it for replacement, of course. On the other hand, we find the show only runs one hour and fifty minutes. Again, easy. We add a single reel comedy, topical or scenic and reduce, as above, by that amount which the show now will overrun.

What? Too much trouble? Well, yes, maybe—for you. Houses which do this are run by real, live showmen, who thoroughly understand that superior excellence in the line of amusement is not had without great labor. They perform the necessary labor and get the price as a reward. Do you for one moment imagine the Rivoli or Rialto of New York City runs reels the way they are received from the producer? Not on your merry go round. Mr. Reisenfeld cuts, rearranges and fits his films to the time, and to eliminate padding and undesirable scenes. As a result he gets sixty cents now and is talking about getting a dollar before the year is over. But you bet he does not get it by cocking his feet up on a desk, looking wise and letting a cussed old motor, governed by a speed indicator, run his show, though there are speed indicators (Robins) in his projection rooms. The only right speed indicator is the screen!

Ninety per Cent. of the Game.

Steve Long, Toronto, Ontario, speaks thus, while we children all listen, with all of the ears that we have:

"Notice in recent issue of department an article by Marion Long (remains to be seen how long "she" will remain Marion Long, brother—Ed.) in which she boosts projection in some theatres and slams it in others. I would like to ask the lady did she examine the projection rooms of the theatres which met her disapproval? You and other projectionists well know that good equipment is 90 per cent. of the game, since without it the best of us cannot produce high class results. You have often said that yourself. Anyone who has worked in Guelph (the man who invented that name should be executed at dawn. I spelled it three ways in three minutes the other day—Ed) knows the kind of equipment the theatres named have. A firm operating a theatre in Guelph has its head office here in Toronto. I have seen bigger dog houses than the projection room of their theatre here and their projectors would have gray hairs if they had any at all. If the outfit here is a sample no wonder their small town projection is on the bum. Give the poor fish who has to project with hoary antiduluvian Altman Taylor threshing machines instead of real projection equipment a chance."

Which point is well taken, provided Brother Long has the right dope on the Guelph outfit. We have no sympathy with those managerial misfits who compel their projectionist to render the productions of today on decrepit old rattletraps which are merely kept running in order to cheat the junk man. However, let me interject this thought: while it is entirely true that the best projectionist cannot get the best possible results with worn-out or old-type projectors, still the high-class man can, if you can get him to work with them at all, doctor up old machines and get very good results, for a time at least, whereas the low-class projectionist cannot get good results, and get them efficently, even though he be given the best equipment in the world. Toronto seems to be long on Longs. I'm waiting for a reply to a letter, whereupon I may tell you something interesting about Miss Marion Long. Indeed, it looks as though "she" may be a very interesting personage indeed.

Here Is One for You to Answer.

Suppose you took charge of a projection room and found that by changing your condensers, at a cost of say $4.00, moving your lamphouse to proper distance from film, and moving the revolving shutter to aerial image of the condenser, you could reduce its main blade by one-quarter of an inch; then suppose that by increasing your projection lens diameter you could save 6 per cent. of the total light, what would this represent in saving in one year, current costing 8 cents per k. w. hour and you running 11 hours a day? We will assume it to cost eleven dollars to change projection lenses—trading in the old one. Now, gentlemen, get busy and let's have your answer to this. It is getting right down to brass tacks in application of knowledge. Of course all this will give you a better balanced revolving shutter, hence less flicker tendency, as well as saving the boss' money. Note: In considering this matter you may take the shutter of your own machine as a basis for figuring percentage saved by one-quarter-inch reduction of blade; also as to whether or not the main blade reduction will allow of some corresponding reduction of flicker blades. In some cases it would and in some it would not. I would like to have your full data. If you fear publication, I will suppress that or not use name or address. Also we will, later, give the correct answer, assuming a case where average shutter is used.

Wrong Condenser Combination.

D. J. Davis, Punksutawney, Pa., says he is using A.C. on two Powers lamps and has trouble. Says condenser lenses are both 6.5 and flame persists in blacking and breaking them. I would refer Brother Davis to the lens charts just published and suggest that he at once apply them to his projector optical systems, whereupon the trouble should cease from troubling. If it does not advise me and I'll undertake to fix you up. Oh, yes, bye the way, be certain that your carbons are large enough for your amperage. Too small carbons would cause excessive flaming. Think trouble is in your lens system, however.

Wants to Use a Five or Six Thousand Foot Reel.

Charles Tuegel, Dubuque, Iowa, propounds the following:

Is it possible to use one reel carrying 5,000 or 6,000 feet of film on a Simplex projector? Will the motor recommended for this propector do the work? The idea is to save purchasing two projectors. Have a 48-foot throw. What size screen would you advise? What kind and size carbons do you recommend for 12-foot picture, A. C.; Day and Night screen"?

There was more about the reel proposition, but there was no use in printing it, because a reel of that size, while possible, of course, would be very poor practice. In the first place, should a fire occur and get into the magazines, there would be the price of a projector gone right there in the film burned; also with that amount of film burning, the projector would probably be ruined. Besides that there would be continual trouble with the takeup. A 3,000-foot reel is the largest I have ever known of, and the use of it has been, so far as I know, discontinued. It might be possible to get special 3,000-foot magazines for the projector, but I would advise against it. Would not advise a picture larger than 12 feet with a 48-foot throw. A 14-foot picture would call for about a 3-inch E. F. lens, and a lens of that short focal length is not at all likely to give you high class results. You could get fair results with a 3.5 E. F. lens, which would give about an 11-foot picture (provided you can get such a lens now, which I doubt), but I would stick to the 12-foot recommendation if I were you. For A. C. up to 60 amperes use two 5/8-in. cored carbons, either the Speer Alterno or the National White A. C. Special.

One Can't Drive a Nail with a Sponge.

This particular editor has been criticised, in some quarters, because of the vernacular at times used in this department; also, because of the emphatic language used and our brusqueness in the matter of criticism.

To such critics we have absolutely no apology to offer. In explanation we would, however, respectfully and humbly refer them to the title of this article. When a man desires to drive a nail into a board he does not grab a wad of chewing gum, a nice resilient rubber doll or a sponge and try to push friend nail in. Verily I say unto you he does not! Instead he lays hold upon an iron hammer, with tempered face, spits on his hand and proceeds to lam the nail on its head with a jolt which may be heard for quite some distance.

Admitting that we may be a bit rough at times, we are out to get results, and by the beard of the prophet, we gettum! And there you are.

For Framing.

E. F. Moritz, East Orange, N. J., presents an idea for consideration. He says:

"Following idea will, I believe, interest a great many brother projectionists. I have installed it on both of my Power's projectors, but it can be readily attached to any make of machine. As every projectionist knows, one of his many difficulties is framing the title when threading, especially with the so-called 'trick' titles they are producing these days, which same certainly do deserve their name.

"I have fastened a flash lamp bulb directly behind and just above the aperture. Current is controlled by means of a small switch, connected with the lower film shield in such way that opening the shield automatically lights the lamp, and closing the shield extinguishes it. The lamp not only aids in framing, but illuminates the sprockets, tension shoes, etc., so that one may instantly see whether or not they are clean and in good order. A small shade behind the bulb prevents the light from reaching the lens, which might produce a ghost in the other picture. The battery is attached to the upper magazine. I derive much benefit from and find great pleasure in reading our department. Have copies dating back four years."

All of which is respectfully referred to our readers for consideration. I see no reason why the thing is not excellent. There are many who place a battery lamp inside the projection mechanism to aid them in framing, but the advantage claimed for this lies in its location.

New and Wonderful Discovery.

Recently, in examining a candidate, the examining committee of Local Union 306 asked where the revolving shutter should be located with relation to the lens—distance from it. The candidate replied that the aerial image of the condenser should be found, either by experiment or as per the handbook, whereupon one of the committee announced: "That is not necessary." Asked by the candidate where the shutter position should be, the examiner replied: "If you have a five-inch lens put it five inches from the lens; if a four-inch lens, then place it four inches from the lens, etc."

Marvelous. Might I presume to ask this very competent examiner upon what he bases his new and very wonderful discovery? Might I ask him why the revolving shutter should be placed a certain given distance from the lens, and what difference it makes what distance it is from the lens anyhow? He is an examiner, hence surely ought to know. I will put it this way: Will the mere changing of distance from lens to shutter make any difference at all?

Put Lots o' Pep in Him.

H. L. Straub, Mansfield, Ohio, orders the question booklets and remarks:

"You sure did put a lot of pep in me when you addressed us a few weeks ago. You showed me just how little I really did know."

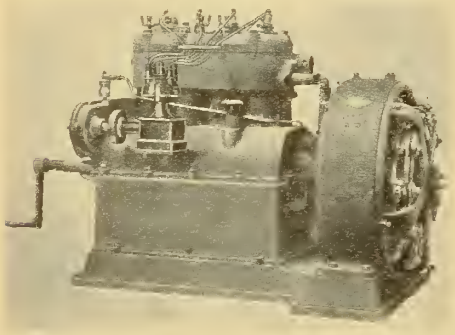
That is precisely the point, brother Straub. The one thing I try to accomplish when I address projectionists is to prove to them that they still have much to learn with regard to their profession. There is nothing more deadly in its effect than that well known "I know it all" state of mind. I not only try to show the men, as a whole and individually, that they still have much to learn, but prove it to them. When you receive the question booklets and see what a lot of things it is required that you have knowledge of if you are to be thoroughly competent, don't get discouraged, but buckle down to it with a will. The more you study the easier you will find it to be to advance. My regards to all the Mansfield men.

Tips for the House Manager

Conducted by E. T. KEYSER

An Isolated Lighting Plant Is the Theatre Man's Friend

THERE are two conditions under which the proprietor of a motion picture theatre can use an isolated lighting plant to advantage. The first case is one in which there is no available current to be obtained from public service corporations, and the second is where a public service corporation supplies juice. In other words, an independent lighting plant of one's own is a mighty good bit of equipment under any circumstances.



Stationary Type Atwater Kent Ignition.

Any one who has ever lived in a small sized town has keen recollection of times when the electric current failed and no one, not even at the central station itself knew when it would be turned on. As an illustration of the convenience, compactness and general good qualities of these independent lighting stations the apparatus put out by the Universal Motor Company of Oshkosh, Wisconsin, will serve most admirably. These equipments are assembled in two types, stationary and portable. The former, which weighs 500 pounds, is of four kilowatt capacity and consists of a four-cylinder, four-cycle internal combustion motor, which may be operated with gasoline, kerosene or gas as fuel. The cylinders are 2½ inches in diameter and 4 inches stroke and the motor is connected direct to the electric generator. The motor is automatically governed for speed to prevent racing on a light load. The throttling governor is provided with means of regulating, within a limited degree, the maximum speed. The portable type, which differs from the stationary model in that it is equipped with an auto radiator with fan and a five-gallon gasoline tank, weighs 650 pounds. It is complete, ready for operation and will stand anywhere without being bolted down. This model is particularly adapted to the use of traveling shows. These generating plants may be supplied with switchboards or the switchboard can be dispensed with and the rheostat supplied with the generator conveniently set up instead. The standard ignition equipment on both types is the Atwater Kent using a battery, but the Bosch D U 4 magnito may be substituted at an additional cost.

The combination of the four cylinder motor with the special type of oil packed governor allows a smooth, even torque which produces a steady and flickerless light. The entire oiling system is automatic, reducing the care of the motor to the minimum of effort.

These generating sets are built to produce current at 60 volts or at 110 volts as may be designated by the purchaser. Under ordinary circumstances the 60-volt outfit with or without switchboard is recommended by the manufacturers, unless fans or other apparatus requiring a voltage of 110 is used, there is no return for the excess fuel required for the production of the higher voltage which must be dropped down to 55 for the best efficiency at the arc lights.

It would be better, where it is possible to use the 60-volt outfit, to change the house lighting system to 60 volts to suit the more economical outfit.

The following diagram shows the Universal's fuel consumption in pints of gasoline per hour as compared with the wattage output of its direct connected generator.

It will be noted that at 500 watts the motor uses three and one-half pints while at 1,500 watts it is five pints, while at 4,000 watts it is but seven and one-half pints per hour.

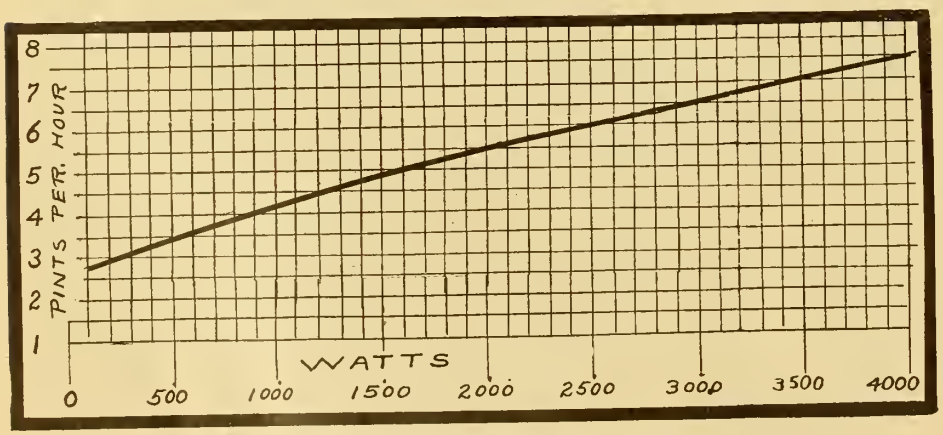


Chart Showing Fuel Consumption of Universal Motor Per Watt of Current Production.

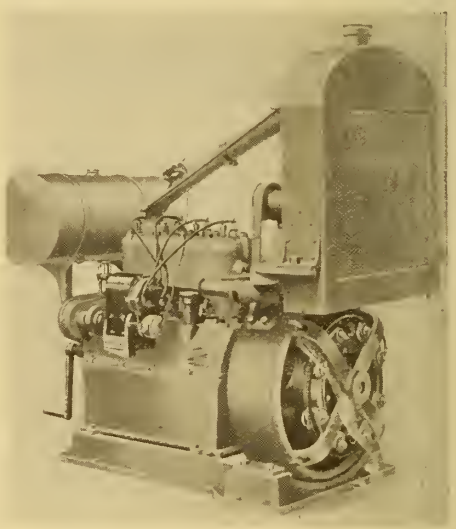
Another Tool Kit.

Last week we printed a tool equipment which inventoried 143 items of hardware, and suggested that any one who had a better list in mind would find us in a receptive mood.



Portable Type Magneto Ignition.

Along comes another list which, although it does not stack up as strong numerically as list number one, has many good points to recommend it.

One pair 9-in. carbon pliers, 1 pair 6-in. carbon pliers, 1 pair 8-in. linemen's pliers, 1 pair 6-in. linemen's pliers, 1 heavy carpenter's hammer, 1 light carpenter's hammer, 1 machinist's 15-in. screwdriver (magnetized), 1 6-in. machinist's screwdriver, 1 5-in. machinist's screwdriver, 2 10-in. carpenter's screwdrivers, 1 8-in. carpenter's screwdriver, 1 10-in. hack saw, 1 12-in. hack saw, 1 24-in. rip saw, 1 Simplex wrench, 1 6-in. monkey wrench, 1 142 pipe wrench, 1 52 pipe wrench, 1 5-in. rat-tailed file, 1 7-in. flat file, 1 10-in. flat file, 1 12-in. rasp, 1 7-in. triangular file, 1 3-in. center punch, 1 6-in. center punch, 1 6-in. cold-chisel, 1 carpenter's chisel, 1 automatic screwdriver with drills and leather punches, 1 brace with bitts, 1 vise, 1 oil can, 2 fire extinguishers. Now let us hear from the rest of you people who are prepared for anything from a fuse blowout to putting a new front on the house without stopping the show.

To the House Manager.

This department is yours. In it from time to time will appear descriptions of accessories and equipment—outside the projection field—which will interest you and save you time and money.

When you put over a stunt in house arrangement or furnishing that would help the other fellow, tell us about it and we'll publish it.

When you are pleased with any particular line of theatre supplies, tell us so that we may pass the tip along.

When you are puzzled as where to procure any equipment for your house, write this department and we will dig it up for you—if it is made.

Music for the Picture

Conducted by GEORGE W. BEYNON

Keep All Your Popular Music! Some Day It Will Be Valuable

THERE is a cry throughout the realm of filmdom for new music. Orchestra leaders everywhere are scurrying from publisher to publisher, from music dealer to music dealer, looking for new material with which to fit pictures. The supply of contemporary selections is fast being used up; repetition is frowned upon and improvisations must be good else the patronage will complain.

A little computation will show the strain on the music libraries usually found in the picture theatres. A fair average is found to be seventy selections necessary to cover a show. For those theatres that change daily, four hundred and twenty numbers are needed in the week of six days. These picture houses are usually neighborhood houses where the same clientele pays admission every day and continued repetition of musical numbers become as obnoxious as the player piano next door which has a repertoire of but seven rolls.

New music is certainly needed and as the film industry expands, the need will become more urgent. It will be impossible to supply the demand from the shelves of the high class publisher. Much time is required to create and bring forth in printed form the melodies of composers. No publisher accepts everything that is presented to him. There are certain standards of art which must be maintained before he would consider affixing his name as sponsor for the effulgent effusion. He must see a possible market for the piece before he brings it forth and places it for sale on his counters. The composer must come well recommended through performance or hearsay before he may expect to gain audience with the publisher, for the latter is a busy man and cannot see every would-be Wagner.

Americans are being taught to conserve and become thrifty, a trait that we have never been accused of before. The war has taught many lessons of self-denial that will bear rich fruit in the future. The expansion of the film industry places upon the owners of picture music libraries a duty that cannot with wisdom be overlooked. Keep your popular music hits.

How many times has there been a scene that called for "Sweet Sixteen" and you had to play something else because it was not available? Many times you could have used "Hiawatha" or "Tiger Lily." How many libraries contain "Bluebell," "On The Sidewalks of New York," "Bedelia," "East Side West Side," and "Good Old Summer Time?" Even "Alexander's Rag Time Band" is seldom heard in orchestras. "School-days" by Edwards, is a number that should be in every picture library, but the plates have been broken and only a few fortunate ones have a copy.

"Last Night Was the End of the World" has a significance—in spite of its long title—that constantly arises in features. "In the Garden of My Heart," "My Little Dream Girl," "Can't You Hear Me Calling, Caroline" and "Jingle Bells" all have a meaning that has been firmly established, and which may be used to good purpose in picture fitting.

When the publishers send you music, don't throw it away. Try it over and classify it according to atmosphere or emotion. A number once rejected frequently becomes the hit of the season and because it doesn't appeal to one is no reason for destroying it. File away these popular song orchestrations. They have big possibilities as themes even if they never become popular.

Then popularity makes them an invaluable asset to a library. While a song is popular use it as much as possible. When the people tire of it, and in their fickleness look for new tone sensations, file the "hit" away for future use. After a quiet sleep among the musty folios of passe numbers, it will come forth again to fit a scene that nothing could so well fit, and be welcomed by the auditors as heartily as an old and tried friend returned from a long journey.

David Mendoza, Violinist, at Rivoli.

William Faversham made his debut as a screen actor at the Rivoli during the week of Jan. 12th. "The Silver King," one of the Paramount features, was his vehicle.

In the early portion of the picture, the music was appropriate but as the interest increased, the suitability decreased in exact ratio. When the climax came and the murderer was exposed, with the people sitting up and taking particular notice, the music petered out almost entirely and only a few strings kept up a desultory scratching.

The Second Hungarian Rhapsody by Liszt was well played. Mr. Rapee conducted and drew from the musicians a fine round tone in keeping with the gravity of the number. The results accomplished were somewhat remarkable because Mr. Rapee still uses his "short arm" and elbow movement. The Czimbalom solo was played by Bela Nyary, in his usual fine manner.

Miss Gladys Rice, the "popular" soprano, rendered "The Rosary," accompanied by organ and harp. The stage setting was the work of John Wenger. We liked the stage setting.

The best part of the musical program was the violin solo, Meditation from "Thais," played by David Mendoza, concertmaster of the Rivoli Orchestra. Without any affectation or temperamental outburst, he got right down to business and played with that artistic touch seldom heard outside a concert hall. His intonation, his beautiful bowing, and his interpretation showed a propensity for deep thinking. His presence has made a great improvement in the general ensemble of the orchestra.

There was also an entr'acte when the orchestra offered selections from "The Three Twins" by Hoschna. We make no comment. Joseph Klein officiated at the conductor's desk and that is always sufficient guarantee of a fine performance.

Synchrony is still strong in the work of picture fitting at the Rivoli. More power to it. During the Pictorial, there arose some tricky flashes, showing soldiers from Belgium, France, Scotland and America. The scenes were very short and the average musical director would have selected a march to run through and cover them all. Not so in the Rivoli. Each scene was perfectly fitted atmospherically and synchronously.

Good Musical Scores Strongly Favored.

Another prominent orchestra leader has come forward strongly in favor of musical scores, and we feel that his letter should be given verbatim in order that exhibitors may know of the growing enthusiasm for this class of music service:

Plaza Theatre,
Madison Avenue and 59th Street,
New York City, N. Y.

My dear Mr. Beynon:

Permit me to say a few words on the subject of the musical score for Martin Johnson's "Cannibals of the South Seas."

In my opinion, this is a most difficult kind of picture to set to music. I am frank to say that I would have been at a loss but for the score.

The audience here at the Plaza responded with frequent applause, and it is my belief that their enjoyment of the picture was greatly enhanced by the excellent musical interpretation.

The labors of the painstaking director would be greatly lightened if scores of such excellence were furnished with every feature. The results in better music would be reflected in the success of the particular feature in each instance.

Very truly yours,
EUGENE CONTE.

Mr. Conte is an experienced musician with a large library. He is most particular in his choice of good music and welcomes any help from the producer that will tend to enrich his presentation of the picture.

Musical scores do not insult the intelligence of the leader, but are provided to help him. He may change a number here or there if his judgment of the musical requirements of a scene does not coincide with that of the arranger. Nevertheless the score will save him hours of time and give a variety to his already well-worn program. Every exhibitor should personally test out the various forms of music service and demand from the producer that which he believes will best suit his purpose.

Trumpet Oldest Brass Wind Instrument.

Through an authentic history dating back over two thousand years before Christ, the trumpet has been intimately associated with Chinese life. It also occupied a prominent place in the royal life of ancient Egypt, and the Hebrew prophets were familiar with its use, as it assumed a leading role in the downfall of Jericho. Greece possessed it at the time of the Trojan war and it flourished with chivalry in medieval history.

The Court of Henry VIII of England had practically the first approach to our modern band. This musical aggregation consisted of fourteen trumpets, ten trombones, two viols, three rebecs, one bagpipe, four tambourines and four drums.

The great popularity of the trumpet led to the formation of a "Trumpeters' Guild," which society contained members of the highest rank and came to be recognized as the oldest musical union. This guild existed down to the beginning of the nineteenth century. The membership was confined to the nobility and each person was compelled to undergo a rigid test of his ability as a trumpet player before his application for membership received any consideration.

The Lituus, one of the ancestors of our modern trumpet, vanished with the Roman Empire. But its successor, the cavalry instrument of the fifteenth and succeeding centuries, was evolved from the straight Busine. Judging from paintings of the period, the Busines were not all made with the same caliber bore, some having the wider bore of the trombone. They abound in illustrations of the fourteenth century and were used by trumpeters afoot and on horseback and as instruments of angels and heralds. Fra Angelico painted angels holding trumpets either with straight or zigzag tubes, the shortest being fully five feet in length. These are considered authentic as to size.

The ancient trumpets were formed of one piece only and could not by any possibility be adjusted to any variety of pitch. Consequently they were difficult to associate with other instruments. The credit of having bent the tube of the trumpet into three parallel branches creating its modern form has been attributed to a Frenchman named Maurin. But the transformation was really made much earlier, probably in Northern Italy. The first marked improvement occurred in the eighteenth century. This resulted in a practical mouthpiece, the invention of Meyer, of Hamburg. In 1780 Wogel added tubes by which the trumpet could be played in tune with other instruments. Wiedenger, the court trumpeter in Vienna, added stops in 1801. These were so placed that it was possible to reach two octaves in the chromatic scale. But the trumpet did not assume the form with which we are conversant until Sattler of Leipsig invented the first keyed trumpet.

The scores of Bach and Haendel frequently called for many trumpets. In their time it was necessary to employ a number of trumpets of different sizes, as one could not play all the notes required.

At one period in the life of the trumpet there were three varieties of the instrument: the natural trumpet, in which the length and pitch were varied by means of crooks; the valve trumpet, in which the desired results were acquired by the use of piston valves; and the slide and double-slide trumpets, like the trombone. The first and third are practically obsolete, the valve trumpet being the one universally used.

The trumpet, like the clarinet, cornet and French horn, is a transposing instrument; and, in the work of the old masters, the key signature was not used. But modern arrangers score the trumpet like the cornet and have recourse to key signature. This instrument is distinguished from the cornet in length of bore and quality, although they are similar in shape. The cornet is gradually ousting the trumpet as an orchestral and band instrument, as its execution is by far easier and the results obtained are practically as good. The slight difference between the trumpet and the trombone is due to wider bore of the latter. In playing the trumpet the performer's lips vibrate against the mouthpiece at a speed governed by the length of the tube, the pressure of the breath and the firmness of the embrouchure. Firm lips and hard blowing produce the highest harmonics.

"Kisses" Used in "Wanted For Murder."

It does not require imagination to appreciate "Kisses" as a theme for Elaine Hammerstein. But it is something of a shock to find it associated with even this dainty star in a picture entitled "Wanted for Murder." However, "what's in a name?" This Harry Rapf feature is a romance, with war and its grim atmosphere well in the background. It is being booked by the Independent Sales Company and they are to be congratulated upon the choice of this song which brings out the desired contrast so effectively and presents a startling publicity angle at the same time. The ballad, written by Lynn Cowan and published by McCarthy & Fisher, is extremely popular and its association with this remarkably successful picture, "Wanted for Murder," will serve to add to its laurels.

Score for "Woman" by Dr. Riesenfeld.

Exhibitors are offered remarkable opportunities in the exploitation of the musical angle of Maurice Tourneur's epic production, "Woman," which depicts the evolution of femininity throughout the ages.

When "Woman" was given its premiere at the Rivoli Theatre some time ago, Director General S. L. Rothapfel had a special and elaborate musical score prepared for the production by his musical director, Hugo Riesenfeld. Arrangements were immediately made to have this musical score obtainable for exhibitors throughout the country.

This musical score, unusually ambitious even in these days of de luxe musical settings, was highly praised by the New York newspaper critics when they enthusiastically welcomed this production as the most artistic screen offering of the year.

It is interesting to note that Dr, Riesenfeld, who built the score, has just succeeded Mr. Rothapfel as managing director of the Rivoli and Rialto theatres. This fact gives the score extraordinary interest.

Several New Witmark Song Successes.

Few songs with an oriental flavor have more to commend them than "My Persian Pearl." It is easy but unusually effective and a fine number for costume effects and great for a double.

"That Wonderful Mother of Mine," by Hager & Goodwin, is a splendid mother song in every sense. It has a remarkably strong appeal and is fast becoming a great vaudeville favorite.

A number that combines excellent advice with a snappy lyric is "Have a Smile for Everyone You Meet and They Will Have a Smile for You." It is one of the most acceptable of the new popular songs and Witmark & Sons, who are the publishers of all three songs, believe that it will have a long run of popularity.

Expert Film Man in Organ Business.

There has been, during the past few years, an almost phenomenal forward stride in picture music. Men who formerly were successful exchange men and producers are among those who are turning their attention to the musical end of the business.

Prominent among the former is J. D. Wheelan of Dallas, Texas. This gentleman was a pioneer in the film business in Texas, having conducted an exchange before the day of the Patents Company. Later he handled the business of this company until it took over the state rights when Mr. Wheelan opened Mutual offices throughout the South. He was also interested in the Paramount for a time.

Being in such intimate touch with the film business for so long a time, Mr. Wheelan appreciated the vast possibilities of picture music. Feeling that the musical field offered excellent opportunities in a business way, he disposed of his other interests and devoted his attention to musical instruments.

Mr. Wheelan carries picture theatre organs, including the Seeburg and American Fotoplayer. He is sole owner of his business and has already built up a business reputation which should be a source of much satisfaction.

More Appreciation Needed for American Music.

According to the International Musician, the Globe-Democrat of St. Louis has come out strongly for American music. It enthuses over the remarks made on the subject by Glenn Dillon Gunn, conductor of the American Symphony Orchestra of Chicago. In part, Mr. Gunn says: "It was somewhat of a surprise to read, in a headline that 'The American is a timid soul,' until investigation proved that the characterization was confined only to our quality of courage in musical composition."

Director Gunn goes on to prove the truth of his statement by enumerating our many acts of subservience to European ideas of musical composition. He stated that there were many cases on record where American composers had consented to have their work submitted to European revision and criticism. The Italians resent any French or German attempts to dominate their national music and the same attitude is assumed by the other European musicians regarding their neighbors, for each has a natural pride in its own standards.

It would appear that the time is ripe for us to assert our national rights and acquire faith in our ability without help or interference from abroad. Already people are conscious of the fact that there are good music teachers in this country and the idea that one has to live abroad to get into the true atmosphere of music has long since been exploded. Of the musicians who have succeeded through foreign study, we hear much. Of the many who have starved or fallen by the way side there is no public record. The wonder is not that we have failed to develop high national standards of music but that we possess any music of worth while laboring under such a depressing handicap. The war has wrought many changes. One of them is the undeniable fact that we have learned to know our ability. There is a spirit abroad among us which can be expressed in great music. The consensus of opinion is that the next decade will witness a growth of American music that will rank favorably with the old masters.

HOW NOLAN BOOKED "VIRTUOUS WIVES"

To Convince Visiting Exhibitors He Calls in Denver Fans to See Trade Showing—Book Film

JOE LEE writes from the far west to report to Moving Picture World the success of a plan devised by Swanson & Nolan, of Denver, Colo., in booking Anita Stewart's 'Virtuous Wives" to exhibitors in the mountain district. There is a new and interesting angle to the proposition which should prove of benefit to the exhibitor in giving him a line on what the public wants.

"I arrived in Denver four hours late," says Mr. Lee, "and found Harry Nolan, of Swanson & Nolan, engaged in extolling the merits of 'Virtuous Wives' to an exhibitor who had come some distance to be present at our trade showing that was set for the next day at the Broadway Theatre. Mr. Nolan and the exhibitor were having a heated discussion pro and con regarding Anita Stewart and 'Virtuous Wives. Several important questions were asked by Mr. Nolan regarding the picture, and at Mr. Nolan's suggestion I started to give the exhibitor a little information regarding the merits of our proposition.

"The exhibitor claimed our trade show was a very good idea, but it did not satisfy him (as we were not then catering to the public), and he booked his features for the public and not himself. He was frank enough to advise us that he would be and was very much interested in 'Virtuous Wives,' but he desired the verdict of the movie fan, as he was the fellow who paid the freight.

"Mr. Nolan looked puzzled and worried, for he certainly had us thinking some. We had to admit Mr. Exhibitor was right, for up to this time (which was December 20) on 'Virtuous Wives,' outside of the trade showings and a few private screenings, the most important verdict of all, which is public opinion and the box office statement, had not been rendered.

Finding 300 Picture Fans.

"Mr. Nolan put the proposition to me regarding what I thought of getting a few hundred movie fans (if such a thing were possible) to be present at the showing, which was to be held at the Broadway Theatre the next day. I agreed that this was perfectly satisfactory to me, but wanted to know what good that would do and how we could really tell what the public thought.

"'I'll attend to that,' replied Mr. Nolan, and calling in the stenographer gave her the following instructions:

"'Have about three hundred invitations struck off on a multigraph machine. Get the city directory and pick at random 300 names. Mail those that can be reached by special delivery and get the messenger service to deliver the balance that we cannot reach with a special delivery stamp.

"'Take 300 postal cards and at the top of the card have the following wording:

"'Dear Folks: You were so kind to accept Swanson & Nolan's invitation by being present here this morning to review "Virtuous Wives" that we take the liberty of requesting you to write your opinion (which we value highly) in the blank space on the bottom of this card. Sign your name and drop in any mail box.'

"I readily agreed with Mr. Nolan that so far the idea was very clever; but would it be practical? And would the people to whom we had sent invitations attend the trade showing? To make matters more pleasant the next morning a heavy snow was falling, which gradually increased as the time drew nearer for the performance to start.

Anyway Nolan Got the Cards.

"Not all of the 300 who received invitations were present, but without any exaggeration it would be safe to say that 175 of the 300 who received invitations were present. Mr. Nolan seemed very happy, and I was very skeptical, as I informed him, and until we received the postal cards we were still in doubt, and we had at least twenty-four hours of watchful waiting.

"The day after the trade showing I entered Mr. Nolan's office and found him sitting with a smile on his face reading a number of postal cards which he had just received. The jury had returned the verdict, and that verdict was favorable. Yes, Mr. Nolan booked the exhibitor, and he still has the collection of postal cards, which he refuses to part with.

"I believe Mr. Nolan hit upon a new idea in getting the verdict of the public. The postal card system has been used by programs with the exhibitor, but to my knowledge this is the first time in the picture business the public were invited as critics at a private performance of any motion picture feature. And after all, why should not their verdict be taken as final, for they, the public, are the people who make successes or failures?"

DETROIT SEES FIVE SPECIAL PREMIERS

The Week of January 12 Breaks Attendance Records in Several Prominent First Run Picture Houses

By Jacob Smith, 719 Free Press Building, Detroit, Mich.

THE week of January 12 saw five big special features given their premier among the first-run theatres of Detroit. All opened to capacity and record business, and each did an exceptional week's business for the theatre. At the Madison was "Virtuous Wives." There was a line of people a block long afternoon and evening the first day. At the Majestic, "The Midnight Patrol," a Select special, broke the Sunday house record since "The Unbeliever." Manager Charles Branham is entitled to a great deal of the credit for his special lobby, stage and musical effects, and newspaper advertising, giving the whole presentation a Chinese mandarin atmosphere, in keeping with the story and scenes in the production. "Woman," at the Colonial, broke the Sunday record by $300 and had a big business every afternoon and evening. This picture is controlled in Michigan by the Arthur S. Hyman Attractions. "The Greatest Thing in Life" did a very large business at the Adams. "Under Four Flags" had its first Detroit showing at the Opera House on the Campus in conjunction with a local picture, "The Battle of Vimy Ridge." Edgar Garson was in charge. "Fit to Win" played to men only the same week at the Washington Theatre, and did record business. At the time of writing, the management was seriously considering holding it for a second week.

Arthur S. Hyman has definitely decided to move into the new film building. He is now located in the Owen Building. He has taken space on the second floor, adjoining the Exhibitors' Mutual, and has let contracts for the alterations, which will be completed in about two weeks. Mr. Hyman has enjoyed phenomenal success as a state rights buyer the past year with some of the biggest productions released, among them "Redemption," "The Whip," "Raffles," "Wives of Men" and "Hearts of the World." His latest is "Woman."

Fred DeLodder, president and general manager of the Del-The Amusement Co. operating the Del-The Theatre, on Mack avenue, has leased the Young Theatre, Mt. Elliott, near Gratiot avenue, taking possession January 19.

Morris Lynch, of the Catherine Theatre, Detroit, left January 12 for an extended Southern vacation in Florida. It is his first real vacation in many years.

Branham Is Popular.

Charles P. Branham, the new manager for the Majestic Theatre, Detroit, has already made a warm spot for himself in the estimation of the theatregoing public, exhibitors and exchange managers. He is a successful showman and a live-wire newspaperman. He has already demonstrated his ability with his unique advertising copy and, since his coming, the Majestic has shown a big jump in the receipts.

M. W. McGee, former managing director of the Majestic, is now manager of the Coliseum Amusement Company, operating the Pier, a dancing place, and a number of adjoining concessions which do a thriving business during the spring and summer months.

Charnas Visits Detroit.

Harry Charnas, president of the Standard Film Service, was a Detroit visitor January 12 and 13, spending his time with J. C. Fishman, Detroit manager. To the World correspondent Mr. Charnas said he had purchased several state rights pictures for Michigan and Ohio, and that while his firm lost heavily during the flu shutdown, he was optimistic as to 1919 and looked for a record business in all three exchanges.

Denniston Gives a Film Night.

About 30 Detroit film managers, salesmen and ladies attended Film Night at the Family Theatre, Monroe, on Wednesday, January 6, given by J. R. Denniston, proprietor, to celebrate anniversary week. The Detroit crowd went down in motor cars. Entertainment was under the auspices of Harry Abbott, who represented the film exchange managers' association. Among those on the program were Robert Cotton, World manager, who delivered his famous sermon, colored style, "Why Old Mother Hubbard Went to the Cupboard"; Joe Ferte, Goldwyn salesman, sang; Fred Gebhardt, Pathe manager, rendered several violin selections, and Mr. and Mrs. Harry Abbott and Lloyd Hammond put on the famous "Kissing Scene." It was a most successful party. Mr. Denniston served lunch at midnight and the Detroit guests reached home at three in the morning.

Detroit Notes.

P. M. Reynolds, special representative for the Robertson-Cole Company, was in Detroit recently for the purpose of talking with exhibitors, finding out what they wanted in filmdom, what kind of titles, stories, etc. He is on a tour of the exchange cities operated by the Exhibitors' Mutual, and he expects to take back to the home office hundreds of suggestions and good ideas.

Charles H. Darrell, manager of the Adams Theatre, has booked the Photoplay Supplement through the Educational, first-run in Detroit.

A representative of Prizma pictures was in Detroit for several days recently, and those who saw the first release marveled at the natural color photography.

J. S. Applegate is now covering the western half of the state for Vitagraph.

Capt. J. O. Brooks, former manager of the Liberty Theatre, Camp Sherman, Ohio, and now manager of the Liberty Theatre, Camp Custer, Mich., was a recent Detroit visitor. He is booking some of the biggest vaudeville acts and is on the lookout for big special film productions. He has rebooked "Hearts of the World" for the third time.

The week ending January 12 was the best in the way of business and collections at the Detroit branch of the Fox Film Exchange. Congratulations to M. S. Bailey, the genial manager.

The Majestic Theatre, Detroit, has booked a Select special, "One Woman," for early showing, a solid week. The Colonial has booked "The Still Alarm" for the week of Jan. 19. This picture is Michigan-controlled by the Strand Features. Tom Ealand has booked "The Accidental Honeymoon" from Joe Horwitz for the Regent Theatre, week of February 10.

Charles H. Powell is again with the Madison Film Exchange, Detroit, covering the northern part of the state.

Rochester News Letter

By L. B. Skeffington, 61 Main Street, East, Rochester, N. Y.

Sarr Picks Another Winner.

MANAGER FRED J. SARR, of Fay's Theatre, has a true showman's instinct for picking winners when it comes to booking films. His ability in picking good ones is not confined to pictures. His latest display of good judgment is his selection of his new head usher, Miss Marion Hofer, known to thousands of picture fans through her connection with the Grand Theatre, who is now gracing Manager Sarr's house.

Picture Houses Aid Returning Fighters.

One of the most far-reaching campaigns ever undertaken in Rochester is now being launched with the object of providing a job for every one of the 20,000 soldiers and sailors who are returning to this city. As in most other recent campaigns the moving picture theatres have been called upon to put over a great deal of the publicity. Films, slides and even speakers are impressing upon the public the seriousness of the situation that will arise if the returning men are not immediately absorbed into industry.

Fay is Optimistic.

Edward Fay, proprietor of Fay's Theatre, blew into town last week and was brimful of optimism and good cheer regarding the business outlook of his theatres. "All of my houses," said the Providence man, "are doing exceptionally well. In fact since Peace Day we have played to capacity very frequently and indications are that the big business spell is going to last for a while." The local Fay house is doing a capacity business.

Farren Goes to New York.

Jack Farren, manager of the Victoria Theatre, is down in the big city on one of his periodical scouting trips. He will spend a week or two in and about New York getting a line on feature films.

"Cleopatra" Fills the Rialto.

"Cleopatra" ran all last week at the Rialto to capacity business. This film has been shown here several times before but at top prices in the legitimate houses. The Rialto put the picture over in good style at popular prices and cleaned up strong.

THE BUSY EXHIBITOR

Will find great benefit in pages of MOVING PICTURE WORLD if he will take the time—make the time—to read carefully every department.

OMAHA FILM SHIPPERS ARE UP IN ARMS

Complain That Express Service is Inadequate and That Transportation Officials Are Incompetent

By Guy Leavitt, World Herald, Omaha, Neb.

FILM men in Omaha, Neb., where thirty exchanges ship thousands of boxes of film daily, are up in arms over the express service. Their chief reasons for complaint are frequent misshipment of film; failure to make prompt deliveries from the depot to the exchanges; collection of outgoing film early in the afternoon before the incoming film arrives; absolute ignoring of complaints, and a reckless, indifferent and careless attitude of employes toward expensive boxes of film.

Manager J. H. Calvert of the Universal Exchange has evidence showing that a box was put on the express by Exhibitor Fred Dethlefs of Manning, Ia., bound for North Platte, Neb., and that the expressman, making a mistake, pasted on another label, designating the package for Chicago, where it ultimately arrived. Hawley & McGovern of North Platte and Exhibitor Ebersole of Wakefield, Ia., were robbed of shows because of the blunder. The express company appeared indifferent, and uttered its stereotyped, "We will take the matter up," when Calvert registered a complaint.

The General Exchange in Omaha complained that the driver was picking up film for the last time daily at 3:15 p. m., necessitating the expense of a messenger to send to the depot film intended for later shipment. The collection, the complaint said, was made before the afternoon's incoming shipments were delivered —and any exchange manager knows what that means.

Sioux Falls, S. D., exchange men for two weeks were compelled by the express company to prepay all shipments. None could be sent C. O. D.

"General Agent W. S. Warner of Omaha is incompetent to handle the situation," said Manager J. H. Calvert of the Universal. "His chief clerk is an overbearing joke, whose chief purpose in life seems to be to keep you waiting when you are in a hurry to get an order for a shipment that has but a few minutes to make a train."

Blames Government Control.

Manager Calvert said conditions were bearable up until the time the government took over the express companies. "As soon as that was done a 'public be damned' policy was adopted," he said.

Jack Solomon of the Select exchange complained to the company that it is making collections of outgoing shipments before delivering incoming film.

"We tried parcel post service, but that was worse," he said. "You couldn't depend on the postal system at all. I guess we'll have to wait for airplanes.

"During the first three days this week we lost out on three shipments to Des Moines, Ia., 146 miles away. One of the shipments never got past the depot here. They returned it, with 75 cents' charges, just now.

"When the express rates were raised we had hopes of better service. It has been steadily getting worse ever since."

The exchange men say the worry, loss of business and the disturbance in their office systems caused by the rotten express service is bad enough, but another bad feature is that exhibitors are constantly afraid that a film shipment will fail them. Exhibitors are reported getting white-haired over the service, and, say the exchange managers, many of the exhibitors blame the exchanges.

The Nebraska and Iowa film industry wonders if the same lack of adequate service is felt elsewhere.

Baby Marie Hits Omaha.

Baby Marie Osborne, touring the country, was given a royal two-day welcome, Manager White of the Pathe exchange, with the exhibitors of the city and the newspapers, playing host. She was in Omaha Monday and Tuesday, January 13 and 14, arriving from Des Moines, Ia., where she had just enjoyed a splendid visit.

Her first experience in Omaha was to meet Mayor Ed. P. Smith for a little chat.

She appeared at all the large downtown theatres in Omaha, and a number of the smaller houses, specializing at the Sun, where her picture, "Dolly's Vacation," was being played, and at the Brandeis, where the Pathe production, "Infatuation," was being shown.

Monday afternoon she was the guest of honor at a children's party given at the Sun Theatre by the World-Herald, local newspaper. Manager Goldberg of the Sun threw open his theatre to the children, admitting them free for half an hour's reception by Baby Marie, and then to the picture, which was screened for the children's benefit.

"Borrowed Clothes" at the Brandeis.

While "Borrowed Clothes" was playing a week's run at the Brandeis Theatre, Omaha, Neb., Manager Joy Sutphen ran on the big electric sign over the entrance, "MRS. CHARLIE CHAPLIN." A big display window in the Brandeis department store, the largest in Omaha, was given over to a display advertising the picture. Exhibitor Sutphen employed scenic painters to decorate the stage curtain surrounding the screen to look like the beach scene in the picture, even to the big bathhouse and the name prominent upon it. Sawdust scattered about the stage, with the ocean painted in the background, and huge umbrellas here and there about the "beach" added to the effectiveness of the setting.

Business Does Not Fall with Mercury.

The first severe cold of the winter failed to depress business in Iowa and Nebraska during the week of January 1 to 7. Manager William O'Hara of the Rialto Theatre, Des Moines, Ia., says while each day grew colder the crowds also grew larger each day at his theatre, where he was showing Nazimova in "An Eye for An Eye." The Garden, showing "Arizona," and the Palace, showing "The Hell-Cat," also reported big business for the week. Similar reports were made by exhibitors in Omaha, Neb., who said they were surprised how business held up, even when the thermometer registered 18 below zero.

A Paying Bit of Publicity.

Showing "For Husbands Only," Exhibitor A. K. Pay of the Colonial, Sioux Falls, S. D., secured the display windows in three haberdasher stores on the main street of his city and put in displays of bridegroom's clothes. Signs in the windows said: "Oh, girls! These are for husbands only. Think it over!" The picture made a hit in Sioux Falls.

Adams Crowds 'Em In.

When he showed the first episode of "The Lure of the Circus," Exhibitor O. C. Adams of the Olympia Theatre, Sioux Falls, S. D., also advertised "The Geezer of Berlin" and "The Sinking of the Lusitania," on the same bill. He showed the first episode to 1,700 people in his small house. When he showed the second episode he also advertised the picture, "The Surrender of the German Fleet," and got a huge following for the serial.

Exhibitors, exchange men and others in the Omaha, Neb., territory on January 12 estimated that ninety per cent of the theatres in Iowa have reopened following the influenza restrictions, while about twenty-five to thirty per cent of Nebraska's theatres are still closed. While the great majority of the closed houses are in towns from which the ban has not been lifted, a number remained closed after the ban was lifted.

Exhibitor Nathan Dax of the Model Theatre, Sioux City, Ia., has never been known to comment upon the merit of a film shown at his house, but a letter to the Universal exchange in Omaha, Neb., last week praised highly the picture, "Kiss or Kill."

J. F. Tillen has bought the Temple Theatre, McCook, Neb., from C. W. Martin, taking possession January 6.

John Jones of Barnes, Kan., was in Omaha, Neb., recently booking film for a new theatre which he is just opening. His is the first new house to be opened in the Omaha territory during 1919.

Flu Cuts a Wide Swath.

FILM ROW is feeling the inroads of the influenza quite severely, and there is scarcely an exchange that has a full working staff on hand.

E. H. Emmick, and Mrs. Emmick, of the Peerless Film Service, recently contracted the disease in Los Angeles, but have returned home again.

T. L. Haines, Jr., of the Atlas Educational Film Corporation, has suffered a light attack of the disease, while Mrs. Haines has been quite seriously ill.

Mrs. Floyd St. John, wife of the local manager of the World Film Corporation, passed away and the funeral was held at Patterson, Cal.

Ralph Radnor Earle and Mrs. Earle have also been on the sick list and have been unable to attend to their laboratory duties of late.

A booker, shipping clerk and stenographer were absent from the Metro offices at one time, throwing an unusual amount of work on the rest of the staff.

Tam Film Company to Reopen.

The Tam Film Company, whose place of business at Sixth and Market streets was destroyed by fire a short time ago, has taken over the quarters at 111-113 Golden Gate avenue, formerly occupied by the Triangle, and will resume business as quickly as equipment and stock can be gathered together. This concern makes animated cartoons, slides, titles, and engages in general moving picture work of an advertising character. W. D. Tam was at Jackson, Cal., at the time of the fire, his brother and sister-in-law having died recently of influenza, and the new quarters are being fitted up under the direction of his partner, W. T. Porter, Jr.

Air Hero Back on Job.

Lieut. Arthur Frolich, formerly with G. A. Metcalfe, has returned from France, where he served in the air service with great credit, having brought down fourteen Hun planes. He received the Croix de Guerre, the Certificate of Merit and the Distinguished Service Cross. He has resumed his former position with the local house.

Former Rialto Manager Goes to New York.

Howard J. Sheehan, former vice-president and general manager of the Rialto Theatre, has severed his connections with this house and has gone to New York to accept an executive position with the Fox Film Corporation. Tivoli Launched Ambitious Enterprise.

E. M. Asher, manager of the T. & D. Tivoli Theatre, announces that on January 19 the first of a series of Sunday twelve o'clock concerts will be given by an orchestra of sixty pieces directed by Dr. Carlos De Mandil. The services of Katejan Attl, the great harpist, have also been secured, and this artist will be heard over the entire T. & D. circuit. Regular prices of admission will prevail at the San Francisco concerts, patrons being privileged to remain for the regular screen program following the musical numbers. The services of Clarence Reynolds, formerly organist for the city of Denver, but more recently of Detroit, have been secured for the Oakland house.

Popular Film Girl Engaged.

The interesting announcement was made recently of the engagement of Miss Sadie Litzenstein, head of the office department of the Triangle, to Melvin Korn, a young business man of this city. Miss Litzenstein has a wide acquaintance among exhibitors of the Pacific Coast and is exceedingly popular in the trade. She has been connected with the business for about seven years, the period having been divided about equally between the General and Triangle exchanges.

He looks for a big business when the influenza epidemic is over and declares that the Metro is turning out some wonderful pictures to be released shortly.

Booker Has Thrilling Experience.

Sam Samuelson, booker for Pathe at the Seattle branch, is due to arrive shortly at San Francisco from the Orient. He enlisted in the merchant marine and sailed for the Far East, but when near Guam the vessel was struck by lightning and the survivors were compelled to take to a life raft. A typhoon drove them to the Philippine Islands, but during the twenty-four days they were adrift eighteen of the thirty-four men aboard the raft perished from exposure.

Pathe Giving Speedy News Service.

Instead of sending pictures of local happenings to New York to be developed and printed, as was formerly the rule, with a loss of two weeks' time, these are now being finished here and are sometimes available in less than three hours, to the great satisfaction of exhibitors. L. C. Hutt, Pathe cameraman, has his offices with the local exchange and developing and printing is being done in the same building.

New Division Manager Expected.

T. W. Chatburn, formerly of Pittsburgh and Chicago, who has been appointed division manager for the Greater Vitagraph Company on the Pacific Coast, succeeding the late H. D. Naugle, is expected to arrive here at an early date.

News of San Francisco and Vicinity.

Clarence A. Kells, formerly with the General Film Company, is now booker at the Pathe Exchange, Inc.

Gets Prints of German Fleet Surrender.

The Greater Features Company, of Seattle, which handles, besides its own films, those of the Consolidated Film Company, of California, has secured the European prints of the surrender of the German fleet. These pictures were made by the Gaumont Company, of Paris and London, and they are now being shown at the Clemmer Theatre in Seattle.

NEWS FROM THE MARITIME PROVINCES

Exchange Managers and Exhibitors Meet and Discuss Paper Cost and Theatre Closing

By Alice Fairweather, "Standard," St. John, N. B.

TWO meetings of interest to film men have taken place in St. John, N. B., recently. The first, January 6, was a joint gathering of exchange managers and exhibitors, held at the Universal Exchange, on Union street. It was the regular meeting of the Exchange Managers' Association, with the president, G. A. Margetts, in the chair. A number of exhibitors, including several from other towns, attended.

Among the matters discussed were the propositions on the prepayment plan and the advance on the cost of paper which has been imposed by the Motion Picture Board of Trade, at Toronto. This has been thoroughly discussed at the meetings of the Association before, and it has been shown that the new rates when worked out make an exhibitor who used only one sheet of paper pay $5 for that one sheet. The charge is 7½ per cent. on the price of contract, and this with the paper an exhibitor is obliged to take with his film and which he does not always use, makes the price at which the theatre manager has objected.

Those attending from out of town were R. G. McAdam, of the Casino, Halifax; J. M. Franklin, of the Strand, Halifax; J. J. Gaudett, of the Happy Land, Summerside, P. E. I.; W. W. O. Fenety, of the Gaiety, Fredericton; Meyer Herschorn, of the Imperial, Halifax. A meeting of the local men was held at the Opera House in the morning, after which F. G. Spencer entertained at luncheon at the Sign o' the Lantern. The visitors had supper at the Dufferin Hotel after the afternoon's meeting, and the executives of the Motion Picture League of the Maritime Provinces met in the office of the secretary, W. H. Golding, at the Imperial Theatre, in the evening. Those present were W. C. McKay, who presided; R. J. McAdam, vice-president for Nova Scotia; J. J. Gaudett, vice-president for Prince Edward Island; W. W. O. Fenety, vice president for New Brunswick, and the secretary, W. H. Golding.

A full account of the motions passed will be published as soon as they have been forwarded to the persons to whom they are addressed and an account of the minutes of the meeting is now in the printer's hands and will be ready shortly. Until then no details of the proceedings are to be given to the public. Your correspondent learns that one of the resolutions concerned the action of the Board of Health in closing the theatres and allowing the churches to remain open during the recent epidemic. The executives claim that the Board of Health discriminated in favor of the churches. Another discussion was on the matter of compensation for wages lost by theatrical employes during the epidemic. It was stated that the Province of Manitoba is now considering granting 55 per cent. of the wages lost. This percentage is placed upon the indemnity provided in the Government's Workmen's Compensation Act. New Brunswick has a workmen's compensation act, but it does not state that workmen shall be compensated for wages lost while out of employment owing to a Government measure.

Compensation for Lost Wages Considered.

The Maritime executive will probably present to the Government a memorial urging that in the case of a shutdown of the theatres by the Government to conserve the public health and not through any fault of the theatres, at least a proportion of the wages lost might be returned as compensation.

In St. John more than 250 families were affected by the ban, and the wages lost were in the neighborhood of $3,000. As many employes as could be retained were kept employed about the theatres, but there were many who suffered severely.

In regard to the proposed new Allen Theatre in St. John, one of the St. John newspapers put the matter as follows: "It is said that the theatre situation in St. John may take on a new complexion if the plans of Messrs. Allen, of Toronto, mature as outlined. They are the Canadian rightholders of Paramount pictures on an agency basis, and in proposing to erect a theatre in St. John and Halifax say it is a move to protect their agency and to market their own films, a dispute having arisen between them and important exhibitors as to prices and the nature of the contract they were asked to sign."

Maritime Notes.

Mr. Rothenberg's financial representative has been in the Maritime Provinces and has been arranging for sites or leaseholds in New Glasgow, Moncton and Sydney, as well as Halifax. It is rumored that an offer was made for the Imperial Theatre, but the management states that the Keith house will be run as at present.

Albert Donaghy, manager of the Exhibitors' Distributing Corporation, at St. John, had quite an experience on his trip to the Sydneys, recently being in a train wreck in which four cars were overturned. Fortunately, the passengers escaped with only scratches.

Sydney, C. B.—In Sydney the Casino Theatre, under the management of E. R. Lynn, is doing splendid business. The house has been newly decorated, the artistic green wedgewood designs being renewed, and new chairs being installed. Music is made a feature at this house, the orchestra having among its members a cornet player of much ability who was formerly one of the Coldstream Guards Band. R. G. McAdam, of Halifax, the owner of the theatre, who visited Sydney recently, expressed himself as much pleased with business there.

New Orleans News Letter

By N. E. Thatcher, 2801 Canal Street, New Orleans, La.

THE influenza situation in New Orleans is growing steadily worse and there is apprehension among theatre managers that the theatres may again be closed. They were hit pretty hard as a result of the closing during the first siege of the epidemic and the managers have felt that they were made to bear the burden. It is predicted that any attempt to close the theatres a second time without taking action to regulate department stores and other centers of human congestion will be met with obstinate resistance, even to the point of the managers submitting to imprisonment. In short, the theatres will be kept open unless other points for congestion are to be closed by the same order.

E. M. Clarke of the Baker Grand Theatre at Natchez, Miss., has acquired control of the new Marion Theatre at Clarkesdale, Miss., and is making a success of the enterprise.

Manager J. B. Bryan of the Vitagraph Exchange has gone to New York to hold a conference with the home office.

General Supervisor S. T. Stephens of the Mutual is on a business trip to Dallas and other Texas points.

E. V. Richards, Jr., general manager of the Saenger Amusement Company, is in California on business in connection with his extensive motion picture interests.

P. E. Blankenship has been the manager of the Ivy Theatre since that suburban playhouse was acquired by Ernst Boehringer, former manager of the Liberty Theatre.

George C. Heck has taken over the entire management of the Trymore Theatre, one of the houses in the uptown section.

MINNEAPOLIS IS FEELING OPTIMISTIC

New Garrick Plans to Hold a Style Show— Dickenson Joins Fox—Woman Runs Nicollet

By William Edward Mulligan, Minneapolis Journal, Minneapolis, Minn.

THAT the year 1919 will go down in history as one of the biggest and most prosperous in the motion picture business is the optimistic prediction of Benjamin Friedman, president and general manager of the Friedman Film Corporation, of Minneapolis.

"There are many reasons for this view," he said. "The war is over and the people's minds have been set at ease. Our boys who went 'over there' are returning home in great numbers, and their mothers, sisters, brothers and sweethearts are now in a happier mood. Consequently, they are in a better mood to patronize places of amusement. This will naturally bring about a larger percentage of theatregoers than we have had in the past.

"During the past year we have made expenditures to the extent of approximately $150,000 for our film and, in spite of the fact that our business has been hampered by the influenza epidemic, we have enjoyed a tremendous business."

New Garrick Plans a Style Show.

"Virtuous Wives," First National production, has been booked for a week's run at the Minneapolis New Garrick Theatre, beginning January 19. Manager Julius K. Johnson and Harrison Hatton, press agent, are arranging for a style show to advertise the picture this week. A shop window will devote an entire display of Anita Stewart's beautiful gowns with posters of the moving picture star and a note calling attention to "Virtuous Wives" at the New Garrick. In addition, McCarthy's book store will have on display several hundred Anita Stewart volumes in the show window.

Dickenson Joins Fox.

Hal Dickenson, formerly with the Minneapolis Universal Exchange, has been appointed Twin City representative for the William Fox Film Corporation by Manager M. J. Weisfeldt.

Wife Runs Theatre.

During the illness of John Bergstrom, proprietor of the Nicollet Theatre, of Minneapolis, and secretary of the Theatrical Protective League, who is suffering from influenza, Mrs. Bergstrom is managing her husband's moving picture house.

Theatres Change Hands.

Louis Rosenfield has sold the Temple Grand moving picture theatre, at Creston, Iowa, to Hal Kelley and has taken over the Family Theatre, in Clinton, Iowa, which has a seating capacity of 750.

New Equipment for Theatre.

The Mazda Theatre, of Minneapolis, has completed the installation of new booth equipment purchased from the Minneapolis branch of the United Theatre Equipment Corporation. The new equipment includes a Power's 6B cameragraph. The Theatre Equipment Company reports a large demand for Simplex projectors, having shipped 20 during December. Gold King screens are also said to be in big demand.

Short-Reelers Booked.

Hearst Current Events and Screen Magazines have been booked by Ruben & Finklestein for all their Twin City houses from the Universal Exchange. They have also contracted for "Over the Rhine," with Charlie Chaplin, for their theatres, in addition to the Chaplin cartoon, "Charlie Captures the Kaiser," which played to big business at the Grand, in Minneapolis, and at the Starland, in St. Paul.

Ban Lifted at Iron Mountain.

W. R. Hiller has reopened his Colonial Theatre, at Iron Mountain, Michigan, after having been closed for ten weeks. He says: "Although we had few cases of influenza the local health board used the rankest kind of discrimination in our case, so after submitting to it for several weeks I got a state official on the job with the result that we opened the very next day. I would advise exhibitors to do the same thing where these discriminating conditions exist."

Vitagraph Business Grows.

E. S. Holmes, manager of the Minneapolis Vitagraph Exchange, reports the business at his office is better than normal since the abatement of the epidemic of influenza. Exhibitors, he says, are going after business with renewed energy.

"Newt" Davis Joins Mutual.

Newton Davis, former Minneapolis and St. Paul representative for Universal, is now affiliated with the Exhibitors' Mutual Exchange, looking after Twin Cities' interests for that corporation.

Demand for Short Subjects.

Sam Thompson, president of the Feature Film Company, of St. Paul, declares that there is a growing demand for short-reel subjects.

Johnson Loses Father.

Julius K. Johnson, manager of the New Garrick Theatre of Minneapolis, is mourning the loss of his father, who died suddenly.

Northwest Brevities.

A new theatre is to be built at Austin, Minnesota, by F. F. Latta, proprietor of the Lyric in that city.

The Ray Theatre at Dickinson, North Dakota, has opened under the management of Mrs. W. G. Ray with moving pictures.

C. M. Nelson will build a new moving picture house at Albert Lea, Minnesota, next spring.

The Star Theatre at Hampton, Iowa, has been leased to James Keefe, who will operate it in connection with the Windsor.

Fire completely destroyed the theatre at Joplin, Iowa, leaving the town without moving pictures.

F. A. Schuchard has given up his moving picture business at Kenyon, Minn.

P. F. Irving, well known manager of Opera House at Forsythe, Montana, has taken over the management of the Star Theatre in that city.

C. B. Reeves and F. B. Wickland have purchased the Opera House Picture Theatre at Ipswich, South Dakota, from M. A. Sodderland.

PATHE DALLAS BRANCH MAKES CHANGES

D. J. Coughlin Is New Arkansas Representative William T. Yoder Will Assist Manager Hill

By Phil Fox, Times-Herald, Dallas, Tex.

W. S. WESSLING, southern district manager for Pathe, and Jimmy Hill of the Dallas branch report a few changes in their organization effective the second week in January.

David J. Coughlin, formerly of the Dayton Bank and Trust Company of Dayton, has been appointed special representative of Pathe in Arkansas.

W. T. Yoder, formerly southern Texas representative of Pathe, has come to the Dallas office as assistant to Manager Hill.

A. F. Chavey, formerly of the Hippodrome at Wolfe City, will take charge of the border territory for Pathe, with headquarters at El Paso.

Harry Hines of the St. Louis Pathe branch has come to Dallas to install a new booking system for the southwestern territory.

Robert Bower, from the Cincinnati branch of Pathe, has been transferred to the Dallas office.

Just to round out his swell mahogany finished exchange James Hill, Pathe manager, has ordered the installation of an elaborate projection room in the Pathe office building. The room will be a miniature theatre in itself, seating about twenty-five persons. Pictures are thrown through the screen from a machine in the rear.

Jimmy Hill of Pathe reports that exhibitors in Texas are snapping up "Infatuation," starring Gaby Deslys. The Old Mill in Dallas has booked it for a week's run in February.

Cameramen from Pathe have been filming the lead and zinc mines at Miami, Oklahoma. The concentration plants and the new shafts at the Anne Beaver mines near Miami and Quapaw were chosen for the taking of typical pictures of this growing Oklahoma mineral industry.

We have with us on Film row again Charles D. Touchon, recently with the colors at Camp Stanley and before that with Select. He is Wallace Walthall's assistant manager and right hand man up at the General.

Among visitors to Dallas' Film row during the early part of January were Senor Jose C. DeAlarcon, Alcazar Theatre, El Paso; Professor E. W. Bailey, Summer Theatre, Paris; P. A. Reece, St. Elmore Theatre, Houston; J. Lewis of the Wicks Company, Houston, and Will Horwitz, Liberty Theatre, Camp Logan.

News Notes of the Southwest.

Menard, Texas, a little town of 1,500 population, was the only place in the states of Oklahoma, Arkansas and Texas which was quarantined for influenza on January 12. Every other city and town has its picture shows open and doing a rushing business.

Secretary Lew Remy of the Texas Exhibitors' Association, has wired Menard telling the two exhibitors there that if they wish him to do so he will open their theatres by the injunction route.

In San Antonio, where all theatres were opened through court proceedings despite board of health opposition, there are indications that the exhibitors must go to the bat again. Public sentiment is overwhelmingly for the unrestricted opening of theatres. The health authorities, however, are planning to submit a city ordinance providing that any person who sneezes or coughs shall be ejected from a motion picture show.

The Mason Big Three Oil Company, which had a gusher blow in at Burkburnet early in January, promptly filmed the spouting derrick and put the movie on exhibition in Fort Worth, where most of its stockholders reside.

The grass is growing in West Texas, and motion picture houses are opening up now that the drought is broken. The Royal Theatre of Baird, Texas, dark for many months on account of drought conditions, has been reopened by Mrs. Mike Segal and is doing a splendid business.

Arkansas movie patrons will have a treat when they see their boys in khaki on the screen during January. The General is just releasing "The Boys of the Eighty-Seventh." This film was taken of the Eighty-seventh Division at Camp Dix. Thousands of the soldiers are from the Razorback State and the bookings are big up around Pine Bluff and Little Rock.

Leslie, Ark., has a new picture show. The Strand, an up-to-date picture theatre, has been opened by J. H. Workman at an expense of $25,000.

The Electric Theatre at Moran, Texas, has changed hands. J. C. Brooks has bought the theatre from T. P. Cross.

Indiana News Letter

By Indiana Trade News Service, 69 Layman Avenue, Indianapolis, Ind.

Influenza Makes Third Sweep.

THE influenza epidemic is making its third sweep in Indiana, according to a statement made January 17 by Dr. W. F. King, assistant secretary of the state board of health, who reports that there has been a slight increase daily in the number of cases of influenza and pneumonia throughout the state. The daily average of 200 or 300 cases reported has increased to 400 and more. Brown, Allen, Hendricks and Vigo counties appear to be hit the hardest, he said.

Dr. Herman G. Morgan, secretary of the Indianapolis city board of health, says that while there has been a slight increase during the last few days in the influenza-pneumonia death rate the rate is running only slightly above normal. An average of five or six deaths are being reported each day, and for this time of the year the normal death rate for pneumonia runs from two to four a day, he said.

Sixty deaths have been reported since January 1, and 266 new cases of influenza reported in Indianapolis. The influenza cases are being reported at the rate of a dozen a day. Dr. Morgan said February and March are usually bad months for pneumonia and that with the influenza-pneumonia situation as it is, a higher death rate is expected for those two months than the city is experiencing now.

Dr. Morgan said the statistics show that older persons are now being attacked by influenza and pneumonia, where several months ago the disease confined itself mainly to the younger persons. He said that if the proper precautions are taken by the public he does not look for the epidemic to become as serious in February and March as it did in the latter part of 1918.

Schnitzer, of Universal, Honored.

Joseph I. Schnitzer, district manager of the Universal Film Company, with offices at Indianapolis, who recently was promoted to the position of general sales manager for the company, was the guest of honor recently at a dinner given at the Hotel Severin by five of his former associates, Ralph W. Abbett, Indianapolis manager of the Universal; E. W. Penrod, Sam Rosenfeld, William Benjamin and D. G. C. Adams.

The guests included representatives from exchanges in Cincinnati, Cleveland, Buffalo and Detroit, the cities over which Mr. Schnitzer had jurisdiction. F. C. Hopkins and Mr. Abbett presided as toastmasters, and among the speakers were E. C. Smith, of Cleveland; Louis Raum, of Cincinnati, and Paul Bush, of Detroit. Following the dinner Mr. Schnitzer was the recipient of many beautiful and useful gifts.

Shriner Potentate Is Screened.

Elias J. Jacoby, of Indianapolis, imperial potentate of the Shriners, was recently seen in the role of a motion picture actor in a film that was presented at the Murat theatre as one of the features of a Shriner theatre party. The film was made last fall at the Lasky studios under the auspices of the Al Malaikah Temple, at Los Angeles, Cal., when the head of the order was making his official visitations there. It was sent to L. T. Leach, potentate of the Murat, through the courtesy of F. T. Silverwood, a prominent Shriner of Los Angeles.

"Indianapolis Home Folk" Go to Paris.

The film entitled "Indianapolis Home Folk," which was made in Indianapolis by the Coburn Film Company last fall for the War Camp Community Service and later sent to France as Indianapolis' Christmas gift to the soldiers there, has been showing to capacity audiences in the Knights of Columbus Club, in Paris, according to a dispatch received by the Indianapolis Council of the Knights of Columbus last week

KANSAS CITY BUSINESS IS IMPROVING

Influenza and Strike Troubles Are Dying out and the Auto and Tractor Exposition Is Coming

By Kansas City News Service, 115 Railway Exchange, Kansas City, Mo.

WITHOUT becoming too optimistic over the resumption of business in Kansas City, it may safely be said that the crowds are coming back. Business is far below the pre "flu" level, but is improving. Sunday evening, January 12, the people lined up on the wet streets waiting to get into the second shows of suburban theatres. But exhibitors are cautious in declaring their volume of trade —they say that these evidences of large attendance are not yet proof that the daily business is good for every show. Kansas City has had bad weather, a street car strike, in addition to the flu with which to contend.

The Kansas City motor car show and the National Tractor show will be held the same week, February 24-March 1. Hotels are already pretty well reserved. Exhibitors expect to do a record business that week—and they are planning to take full advantage of the crowds that will be here from the surrounding territory. More than 3,500 motor car dealers will attend, to say nothing of farmers and their families.

Kahn Buys Out Davis.

A. L. Kahn, who with B. S. Davis established the Emerald Film Service, Inc., at Kansas City 18 months ago, has bought the interest of Mr. Davis in that state right organization, and is now running it single handed. He is now handling some Chaplin and Arbuckle material, and is negotiating for rights for new comedies.

Jameyson Is at Wichita Palace.

Howard Jameyson, recently relieved of duties as a cadet in the "Flying Squadron," is back in the picture game assisting in the management of the Palace Theatre at Wichita, particularly on publicity work. Mr. Jameyson was with the Pathe exchange in Kansas City. He succeeded as a salesman—and then he made a new job for himself in the exchange.

Standard Gets Mix Reissues.

The Standard Film Corporation of Kansas City, Mo., has secured the fifteen two-reel Tom Mix reissues. This company will distribute these pictures in Kansas, Missouri and southern Illinois. The first releases were January 11.

Wreath Closing Up Flintom Estate.

P. C. Wreath is assisting Mrs. A. D. Flintom in arranging details of the estate left by her husband, particularly in the disposal of the business of the Yale Photo Play Co. A Correction.

Through a typographical error the first line of caption on cross page cut appearing on Page 329 of our issue of January 18 reads "Chips of the Flying Blue" when it should have read "Chip of the Flying U." This picture is being distributed by Exclusive Pictures, Inc., and is one of the forthcoming releases of the series of two-reel Tom Mix reissues.

By Herbert A. Smith, Boston American, Boston, Mass.

"VIRTUOUS WIVES," the first production in which Anita Stewart has appeared under the Gordon-Mayer management, has broken records for Gordon's Washington street Olympia during the past week. Miss Stewart has been highly praised for her work in this big production. She has a big Boston following, earned through her excellent work with the Vitagraph company and her exceptional beauty. The Gordon's house gave the first appearance of Miss Stewart some excellent advertising. The daily papers carried special space and several special write-ups secured through the Gordon-Mayer home office here. The big lobby of the theatres contained special huge posters and excellent art work connected with the production. Special music was played during the presentation of the picture.

Bay State Notes.

Mayor Walter H. Creamer, of Lynn, has issued orders to every theatre manager in that city that an auxiliary lighting system be installed immediately. The mayor's action followed a report submitted by Police Inspector Wright, of the Lynn Police Department, that many theatres in the city were poorly equipped with lighting systems.

The Lawrence Amusement Company of Lawrence, Mass., operators of the Opera House here, have filed a voluntary petition in bankruptcy in the Federal District Court at Boston. Tamar Lane, a Boston newspaperman, who recently became manager of the Fellsway Theatre, of Melrose, took over the management when it was considered a losing proposition. Wilmington News Letter

By D. M. Bain, Wilmington, N. C.

Censorship Campaign Now On.

LEGISLATORS in session at Raleigh are being bombarded with censorship and anti-censorship propaganda on every hand. While the bill is not expected to come up for some weeks yet, the agitators for censorship have already shown their hand on several occasions and have had lobbyists both from within and without the state mixing with members of the legislature.

The National Board of Review of Motion Pictures is conducting a direct personal letter compaign, of which the following is an extract:

"It would appear that now that we have won the war for liberty and democracy abroad, it would be unfortunate that any step should be taken by the legislators at home to restrict popular liberty through the enactment of undemocratic legislation. One of the first steps taken by the people of Germany in throwing off the yoke of governmental repression was the abolition of censorship of the theatres and motion picture entertainments. We do not believe that you, as an American lawmaker, will support a measure which has just been abolished in Germany by the entrance of freedom.

"Every true American has supported the Government and accepted regulatory movements as war measures with patience and forbearance. We all wanted to win the war, but now that we have won it are we going to support a censorship, whether of motion picture or of any other form of thought expression?"

The State Exhibitors' League has held several conference here lately, and Secretary H. B. Varner is in and out of town almost daily, being in conference here with Messrs. Aronson and Brown, who are largely interested in motion pictures in this city.

"The "Flu" is about to develop into a luxuriant perennial throughout North Carolina and like Banquo's ghost will not down. The city fathers of small towns throughout the state who formerly spent their time gossiping around the corner store have found a new pastime—that of closing moving picture theatres with more or less regularity, every time a half dozen or so cases of cold are contracted within the confines of their respective villages.

Among the larger cities none are reported closed at this time, Winston-Salem, Greensboro and Raleigh being the last to re-open after a second closed period. But among the little towns, Wilson, Rocky Mount, New Bern, Sisbury and like places have been closed and re-opened so many times that the theatre proprietors have lost count of the number. Wilson has been closed now for a period of nine weeks, and it seems that so long as there is a single case of influenza in the city it will not be re-opened.

It is pointed out by the theatre men that influenza is always present in every city and town during the winter months and that no attention had been paid to it prior to the general epidemic; it is stated that many of these small towns have suffered no more severly this winter than during previous years, and, in conclusion, they claim that the city officials have closed them up merely to be "in style" with their big sister cities. It is not unlikely that there will be several suits charging discrimination brought, following the example of exhibitors of Roanoke, Va., who have already protested in this manner against the second closing of their theatres.

Dayton News Letter

By Paul J. Gray, Dayton Theatre Building, Dayton, O.

Johnson's Cannibals at The Dayton.

MARTIN JOHNSON'S Cannibals of the South Seas opened at The Dayton Theatre Sunday, January 19, after an extra large advertising and exploitation campaign had been made to herald its approach. The other feature on the bill at The Dayton this week is the Mildred Harris film, "When a Girl Loves." She is being billed as Mrs. Chaplin in Dayton. About twenty-five 24-sheet stands were used on the Johnson film in addition to about 2,000 hanging sheets of paper for windows, etc. The Columbia opens with William Farnum in "For Freedom." Farnum's popularity was added New Year's week in Dayton, when The Dayton Theatre played "Les Miserables" to record-breaking business.

Harry Niemeyer Has His Troubles.

Harry "Whitey" Niemeyer, for some time past with the Pathe Exchange, of Cincinnati, is having a merry time these days over that company's latest serial starring Pearl White. It seems as though all three of the houses in Dayton's East End want the serial and Harry must needs use much diplomacy in placing it to the satisfaction of the trio.

Wyoming Now a Winner.

For some time past it has been favorite talk to mention the trying times endured by the Wyoming Theatre, this city. All this has been changed, however, for since Al Kinzeler has managed that house it has shown a profit—and a good one. So stated Al in a recent conversation. The Wyoming is a small neighborhood house and is operated in conjunction with the Elite Theatre in North Dayton. Gus Kinzeler, a brother of Al (now with the colors), did not have the house long when he was forced to leave for the army, and the above should not be taken as a reflection on his managerial ability.

Ridge Now with Film Clearing House.

J. Maurice Ridge, former publicity man with the Paramount Exchange at Cincinnati, later with the Metro as salesman, has left that organization and is now with the Film Clearing House.

Lew Foster Resigns from Fox Service.

Lew Foster, special representative of the Fox Film Corporation, has tendered his resignation to that concern. Mr. Foster stated that he was considering offers with several Cincinnati exchanges. He was at one time manager of the Famous Players Lasky Exchange at Cincinnati.

Nate LeVene with Metro.

Nate LeVene, who recently resigned as Cincinnati manager of the Exhibitors' Mutual Distributing Corporation, is now with the Metro Company as salesman.

No two men advertise alike. If they did, there would be little pull in advertising. But the man who does the best work is usually he who makes the most radical departure from the average.

Louisville News Letter

By Ohio Valley News Service, Starks Building, Louisville, Ky.

Influenza Ban Is Lifted.

THE influenza ban has been generally lifted, with the result that children are again being admitted to local playhouses, and the special inspectors, who were paid by the exhibitor, have been withdrawn. Locally business is good, but things are still quiet out in the state, and the exchanges are finding business a bit spotted. Several towns in Southern Indiana are still closed and several in Kentucky and Tennessee. Many of the private shows in mining towns are again in operation. The principal cities of the section which are still down are Murray, Frankfort, Maysville and Flemingsburg, in Kentucky; Morristown, Fayetteville and Pulaski, in Tennessee. There are a number of smaller towns still out of the running.

Returning Soldiers Improve Business.

The return of soldiers to civilian life is aiding things to pick up in the suburban and also in the country houses, but results in things being quieter with the downtown houses of Louisville and the group of small theatres at Camp Taylor. Three months ago there were 50,000 men at Camp Taylor, while today there are but 17,000.

Louisville News Notes.

The old Knickerbocker Theatre, at Eighteenth street and Market, which has been down for about two years, has been reopened as the Eighteenth Street Theatre by Larkin Brothers, featuring the first show with Chaplin in "A Dog's Life."

It is rumored that both the Parkland and Shawnee Theatres, two suburban houses which were so hard hit by the war that they have been dark for about two years, will open for business again within a short time.

A recent visitor to Louisville was R. C. Tarolton of the Majestic Amusement Company, the big operating company at Memphis, Tenn., which operates several theatres. Other recent visitors included M. L. Stockley of the Rex Theatre, Hopkinsville; Rowland Clark of the Aristo, Lebanon, Ky., and Henry Watterson of the music publishing house of Watterson, Berlin & Snyder of New York. Mr. Watterson operates a theatre in Newark, and is also interested in the Strand of New York. He visited Colonel Fred Levy while in Louisville.

A. C. Farrel, manager of the Universal Film Office in Louisville, formerly the Central Film Exchange, is back from Indianapolis, where he attended a celebration held in honor of the appointment of J. I. Schnitzer of the Indianapolis office as sales manager for the Universal Film Company.

The Strand Theatre of Louisville has departed from its usual custom of two pictures a week in booking Anita Stewart in "Virtuous Wives" for a full week starting January 26. The film was previously shown at a private screening at the Strand and looked so good that the management couldn't let it get away.

Two good weeks of steady box office receipts have been experienced at the Walnut Theatre in connection with the showing of Mabel Normand in "Mickey" and Florence Reed in "Wives of Men."

The Big Features Rights Corporation of Louisville has recently added a lot of short one and two-reel subjects in answer to a demand from exhibitors who needed short subjects to fill up their shows and who desired to place all of their business with one exchange, or at least have each show coming from the same house. As a result a lot of short special subjects as well as comedies and dramas have been added, this stock being purchased principally through the Arrow Film Corporation and with state rights in Kentucky and Tennessee. One two-reel subject, "What of Your Boy?" a West Point picture, is also handled in Indiana. Two features recently added included the independent production, "America Was Wright," produced by Hiram Abram and D. P. Schulberg, and "Trooper 44," a Pennsylvania film produced by the Industrial Film Corporation.

The day that news reached Louisville of the death of Colonel Theodore Roosevelt, the Majestic, Mary Anderson and several other theatres secured moving pictures and showed them immediately. The Mary Anderson showed Colonel Roosevelt on his last Western trip, while the Majestic had a special picture. While the Louisville exhibitors didn't remotely expect his death, it seems that there were some good films in the local exchanges and no time was lost.

The Louisville Industrial Foundation of the Board of Trade, whose main business is getting new industries for Louisville, made part of its annual report to the board this year in moving pictures, and has arranged for these pictures to be shown at various points in this state and adjoining states. It is planned to show civic development in these pictures.

TWO MAGNIFICENT HOUSES ARE PLANNED

The Details of Philadelphia's New Stanley and Carr & Schad's Reading Theatre Are Impressive

By F. V. Armato, 144 North Salford street, Philadelphia, Pa.

FRANK W. BUHLER, general manager of the Stanley theatres in Philadelphia, is planning to build a million-dollar theatre capable of seating 5,000 persons, which will be magnificent in its appointments and employ a fifty-piece orchestra, and be equipped with a wonderful organ.

In addition the house will have a roof garden, tonsorial parlors, billiard rooms, dance hall and elevators.

The new Stanley will be located at the corner of Nineteenth and Market streets.

A Big House for Reading.

J. Cook, general manager of the Carr & Schad enterprises in Reading, announced upon the occasion of his last visit to Philadelphia that his firm had purchased a large plot of ground at the northeast corner of Ninth and Spring streets, 130 by 230 feet, situated on the main street and conceded to be one of the best locations in this city. Messrs. Carr & Schad will erect a large theatre of the latest type containing all of the most luxurious appointments to be found in the very best theatres in the country. As an example in this direction they point with pride to the Colonial, of recent construction, and considered one of the handsomest houses in the state.

Philadelphia Happenings.

A request from the management of the Hamilton Theatre, Fifty-ninth and Lansdowne avenue, for an injunction against the Overbrook Theatre, a competing house, to show "Shoulder Arms" on the same day was denied by Judge Davis in the Common Pleas court. The hearing took but eight minutes—declared to be the shortest on record.

Jay Enamuel, of the World, received a large bouquet of flowers from his fellow employes last week; after it had become known that he had won third place in the National contest being conducted by the exchanges of the World Film Corporation throughout the country.

Walter Jacobs, formerly manager of the Chestnut Hill Theatre, has taken charge of the Drury Theatre at Thirteenth and Germantown avenue, where he will inaugurate some new ideas in the art of picture entertainment.

Tom Bible, of the up-state film fraternity, has opened an office at 1220 Vine street, where he is now booking up-state exhibitors.

Jimmy George, of the Victoria Theatre, Harrisburg, contemplates a visit to his native land in Greece in the near future. His success in the exhibiting business is well known to all of the exchangemen of Philadelphia, who claim they predicted his coming trip to Europe, as the result of playing their box office attractions.

Keystone News Notes.

O. C. Deckman, a prominent exhibitor of York, paid a visit to Mr. Smiley, manager of the Goldwyn exchange last week and complained of the conditions there, which he said made it impossible for him to compete with the theatres which were charging 5 cents admission, while he was compelled to ask 10 cents, owing to the high class productions which he was showing. He further stated that, as York was a poor industrial center where only the minimum of wages were paid that this condition invited certain curtailment entertainment which made it still further difficult for a house to book expensive features.

The Moose Club of Mount Carmel will reopen the Arcade Theatre in that city under the joint management of P. H. Kiley and John W. Zotkiewiez.

Lew Mutule, manager of the Victoria, Carbondale, has bought the Crystal Lake Inn near that place.

Edward J. O'Keefe, of the Cort and City Square theatres, Atlantic City, reports having done excellent business with Dustin Farnum in "The Light of Western Stars" at the Cort Theatre, being the first release of the United Picture Theatres Corporation.

M. E. Milligan, purveyor of Metro Features, states that the little town of Ephrata, Pa., looks promising for the future as a lively motion picture community.

Depkin Entertains Soldiers.

FORTY war and travel wearied soldiers who were on their way to a demobilization camp came through Baltimore recently to wait at the Union Station for another train to take them on the rest of their journey. The members of the Red Cross were on hand to do all they could for the men. Bernard Depkin, Jr., the supervising manager of the Parkway Theatre Company interests, had them all brought to the Parkway, a few blocks from the station, and even though the house was crowded, the audience gladly gave up their seats for the boys. Not content with this, Mr. Depkin went to a nearby drug store and bought packages of chocolate, which he distributed among the young heroes.

A NEW EXCHANGE OPENS IN PITTSBURGH

Pennsylvania Film Market Will Handle State Rights Subjects and Starts with Two Seligs

By Elmer H. Mayer, 231 Collins Avenue, Pittsburgh, Pa.

PITTSBURGH'S newest independent film exchange began operations in this city Monday, January 13. It is known as the Pennsylvania Film Market, and is located on the ground floor at 938-940 Penn avenue.

The first releases of the new concern, whose specialty is big state rights productions and reissues of features that have created a demand, are Hall Caine's "The Christian" and "Tillie's Punctured Romance."

Two new state rights productions are also announced for early release here. These were both made by Col. W. L. Selig, and are "Who Shall Take My Life" and "The City of Purple Dreams." Neither of these productions have ever been released in the Pittsburgh territory.

The Pennsylvania Film Market has also secured 250 reissues of the Biograph brand, featuring all of the big stars of today and directed by D. W. Griffith, as well as several Selig reissues of Western nature and dozens of new prints featuring Clara Kimball Young and Anita Stewart.

Demas Cleans Up with "Tarzan."

Peter Demas, of the Minerva Theatre, Fifth avenue, Pittsburgh, recently ran "The Romance of Tarzan," and did the biggest business on the avenue. Then he followed with Select's "Cavell Case," and now he has booked "Ruling Passions" and "The One Woman," two more Select special releases for early showing. "The Prodigal Wife," owned here by the Supreme Exchange, drew crowds at the Minerva the week of January 13.

S. and S. Film and Supply Company Moves.

One of the most remarkable incidents of Pittsburgh's recent film building fire was the rare good fortune of the S. & S. Film & Supply Company, Inc., who were located on the seventh floor of the ruined building. They were practically the only tenants of the building who suffered no losses.

They have established permanent headquarters on the second floor of the Triangle Building, 414 Penn avenue, where they are doing business as if nothing had occurred. The new home is a large one, and after the remodeling and painting is completed the S. & S. will have one of the finest independent film exchanges in Pittsburgh.

The S. & S. Film & Supply Company, Inc., which has secured the rights for Al Jenning's "The Lady of the Dugout" for the Pittsburgh section, state that it will post 24-sheets of this production throughout the city and environs, which no doubt will prove of great benefit to exhibitors booking the film. The company is also negotiating with Al Jennings to come here and make personal appearances in theatres where the picture is played.

The Grand and Liberty theatres, Pittsburgh, which both played Nazimova's "Eye for Eye" the week of January 13, report exceptionally big business and that Nazimova is a greater drawing card on the screen than on the stage.

The Pittsburgh Triangle Exchange came under the supervision of a new manager on Monday, January 13. He is B. E. Wilkes, who came from the New Haven, Conn., office of the same concern. He succeeds J. R. Levy, for the past year manager here, resigned.

Iowa News Letter

By J. L. Shipley, 615 Locust St., Des Moines, Iowa.

Ten Cent Houses in Des Moines.

MANAGER E. H. HELMTS, of the Casino, seems to have struck the right idea in the ten-cent price for this house. Formerly doing a fair business at fifteen cents with an occasional raise over that figure for some pictures, the house has been packing them at a dime. With a seating capacity of 700 and the elimination of an orchestra in favor of a photoplayer the drop in admission greatly increased box office receipts. Helmts has installed new side lamps and fixtures and has created an atmosphere that is pleasing patrons.

Des Moines now has three downtown houses at ten cents admission, the Casino with first run Paramount, Metro and Fox subjects, the Majestic with all second run Goldwyn, Paramount and Fox pictures, also some Select, and the Royal with a mixed policy of first run and second run on the big pictures. The latter house did a wonderful business on Charlie Chaplin in "Shoulder Arms" at ten cents admission after the Garden and the Orpheum (vaudeville) had run the subject simultaneously for a week.

Frisch Is Back on the Job.

Manager M. J. Frisch, of Universal, is back on the job after the flu. The first day of his return he signed the Garden up for the Screen News and Hearst News, it being the first contract for steady one-reel service ever secured at that theatre. Frisch reports that conditions throughout the state are rapidly becoming normal and that Universal is having an unusually good business, especially on the Jewel and Bluebird specials.

Baby Marie is Introduced by the Mayor.

Baby Marie Osborne, Pathe star, was a Des Moines vistor last week. Under the auspices of the Register and Tribune Kiddie Club a reception was held at the auditorium and more than three thousand children appeared to honor the little star. In the evening she appeared in person at the Frankle theatres, the Rialto, Casino and Majestic. Mayor Fairweather introduced the little favorite to her admirers. Fairweather is more than six feet in height and weighs nearly three hundred pounds.

Des Moines News Items.

R. C. LiBeau, local Paramount and Artcraft manager, has returned from a trip to the home office in New York.

George D. Watters, manager of the newly formed Iowa pictures corporation, the New Art Film Company, has secured a lease on the Balboa studio at Long Beach, Cal., and that within a week the production of the first New Art picture will be under way. Director Frederic Sullivan has completed the company. The first picture will be done about March 10.

A. H. Blank is expected back from his trip to Los Angeles shortly. He has been in conference with other First National franchise holders in their annual meeting on the coast.

Fred W. Leach, of Herbert and Leach, has purchased the interest of his partner in the Atlantic Opera House and will conduct the business alone hereafter. Herbert and Leach have been in business in Atlantic for several seasons and have made a success of the house with pictures. Mr. Leach has not announced his future plans.

Work on the motion picture theatre in the new Iowa building at Sixth and Grand avenue continues and the owners report that the house will be ready for opening about the middle of March, while the remainder of the building which will house physicians and dentists will be ready for occupancy on April 1. When asked as to who the lessee of the theatre would be an official replied that three concerns are after the house and that a lease would be closed within the next two weeks. A feature of the building will be a huge electric sign with faces on both the Grand avenue and Sixth avenue. More than 5,000 lamps will be installed and several colors will be utilized. The interior decorations will be started soon and the owners say they will be a revelation in beauty and simplicity of design.

Melvin McLain has joined the Universal office in the shipping department. He was formerly an usher at the Garden Theatre.

Bobby Clayman has returned to his post of chief usher at the Garden.

"Too Fat to Fight" Goes Well.

McMahon & Jackson had one of the best shows of their current season at the Gifts when they put on "Too Fat to Fight," a Goldwyn picture featuring Frank McIntyre, who has been seen in Cincinnati on the stage in a number of successes. A Harold Lloyd comedy filled out the bill.

Good advertising may not always be pretty to look at, but it drags the people in. That is what counts.

SMALL TOWN EXHIBITORS ARE HARD HIT

Influenza Situation in the Pacific Northwest Presses Particularly Hard on the Little Man

By S. J. Anderson, 807 Leary Bldg., Seattle, Wash.

THE influenza situation is still bad in the small towns of the Pacific Northwest. The larger cities, while still reporting numbers of cases, have taken the quarantine method of fighting the disease, and there is no longer any danger of closing them. Exhibitors in the small towns are very hard hit, however, because of frequent closings. Some of the Seattle exchanges report that at least 20 of their towns have been closed as many as three times. Some of these third closings have been voluntary on the part of the exhibitors. After two closings the people were so frightened that they would not go to the theatres, and the exhibitors found that they were losing money by running the shows.

C. P. Scates, of the Paramount Theatre, Okanogan, is one of those who has closed voluntarily. The influenza trouble is not alone responsible for this, however. The Okanogan country is a fruit country where the prosperity of all the inhabitants depends largely on the success of the fruit crops. Last year the fruit was a failure and it is expected that next season will also be poor. Knowing what the future does not hold in store for them the fruit ranchers are spending very grudgingly, even where the danger of influenza is not an added deterent. Mr. Scates saw no hope of his business picking up for months to come; so he has closed his theatre indefinitely and has gone down to Seattle for a short vacation.

At the last regular weekly meeting of the Northwest Film Board of Trade, J. A. Koerpel, Seattle World manager, suggested that the secretary be instructed to send to New York for a report on the influenza epidemic there, so that motion picture men of the Northwest could show the health authorities in this part of the country how successful that city combated the epidemic without taking the stringent measures which have been and are disrupting business in the states of the Pacific Northwest. This suggestion was put in the form of a motion, and the Board of Trade will appoint representatives to confer with the health authorities on this point when the reports arrive.

Cannibals Overrun Pacific Northwest.

Martin Johnson's film, "Cannibals of the South Seas," has been breaking records wherever it has been shown in the Pacific Northwest. At the Liberty, Seattle, the business with this picture grew each succeeding day, and J. Von Herberg has announced his intention of bringing it back for a second run at the same house very soon.

The Apollo Theatre, Everett, is another house where "The Cannibals" have broken records. They have been booked in all the leading theatres of the territory.

Vitagraph to Employ Returned Soldiers.

L. M. Cobbs, Seattle Vitagraph manager, has returned from the convention of Vitagraph managers in New York. Immediately upon his return he began investigations among the returned soldier applicants for men to fill two vacancies in his sales staff. He has engaged as salesman in the Oregon territory, A. V. Hile, formerly corporal in the Overseas Aviation Service, and Edgar R. Bousall, formerly a captain of infantry, for the Washington territory. Mr. Bousall's film experience was gained mostly in Chicago, and Mr. Hile's on the West Coast, where he has been for some time with Pathe.

Kennedy Deserts M. P. Publicity.

A. J. Kennedy, who has been handling the publicity for the Seattle Paramount-Artcraft office for the past year, has accepted a position on the staff of the Post-Intelligencer. He is to have charge of the automobile section of the paper.

Tacoma Notes.

Dustin Farnum's latest production, "The Light of Western Stars," released through United, is "standing them out" at the Strand Theatre in Tacoma.

Manager Kenworthy, of the Aloha, has closed that house and will hereafter devote all his time to the Vaudette.

"Andy" Anderson, the jovial manager of the Apollo, has just returned to Camp Lewis for a little more exercise, but expects to be discharged soon.

Peter David, of the Liberty, has purchased the Sunset Theatre building, one of Tacoma's most popular suburban houses, and has leased it to J. L. Perunko.

Edwin F. James has just had installed a Gold Fibre Screen in his new Victory Theatre and says it beats anything he has seen in all his years' experience in the motion picture business.

Theatre Changes in Western Washington.

Mr. Blanchard, of the Dream Theatre, Puyallup, will shortly reopen the Stewart, which has been completely remodeled.

A. C. Alden has sold the Empress, Ballard, to Martin McClanahan.

Georgetown—A. M. Lind has sold the Mission to John Woodhouse.

Allan, of General, Announces.

Branch manager Allan, of the Seattle General office, announces that he is now distributing the following releases: Wm. L. Sherry Service, George Kleine Pictures, Perfection Pictures, the regular service and special releases of the General Film Company, Inc., as well as the Burlingham Travel Pictures have recently been contracted for by Jim Clemmer for regular weekly showing at the Clemmer Theatre, Seattle.

Exchange Personals.

Newton E. Levi, coast supervisor for Mutual, is in Seattle on one of his regular visits of inspection.

Harry Lustig, coast division manager for Metro, has arrived in Seattle for a few days' stay.

F. V. Fischer, manager of the Exhibitors' Film Exchange of Seattle, is covering the larger towns of Montana in the interest of the new Pickford releases and the Anita Stewart production, "Virtuous Wives."

C. E. Kiirkpatrick has been appointed salesman for Goldwyn out of the Seattle office.

Ed. Hudson, well known film man of the Northwest, has just been mustered out of service from Camp Lewis.

Albert Heyfron, brother of Gilbert Heyfron, formerly manager of the Missoula (Mont.) Amusement Company, is now employed in the poster department of the Paramount-Artcraft office in Seattle.

B. Ruben, formerly booker in the Universal exchange, is going out on the road, and his place inside is being taken by A. W. Skoog, who held the same position in the Mutual office around the corner.

Visitors along Seattle's film row this week were: E. A. Zabel, Ray, Olympia; C. P. Scates, Paramount, Okanogan; Henry Newman, Liberty, Hoquiam; R. H. Thomas, Dream, Hoquiam; Frank Stannard, Gem, Wenatchee; W. S. Quinby, Liberty, Bellingham.

PLAYING THE FIGHTING ROOSEVELTS

Ideas and Suggestions Offered to Aid Exhibitors in Getting Best Results from Authentic Incidents That Made Roosevelt Famous Until He Entered White House

By Epes Winthrop Sargent and Walter K. Hill

ALTHOUGH some of the publicity for "The Fighting Roosevelts" suggests by inference that this is the life of Colonel Roosevelt, the film is not in fact a pictorial history of the life of the great publicist. To adequately convey or even suggest the crowded life of the man who was the personification of energy would require several hundred thousand feet of film.

Do not advertise it as "The Life of Roosevelt," and do not even employ lines which would suggest that this is his complete life. On the contrary, take pains to make it emphatically clear that this is not the life, but scenes from the life of the ex-President. Tell that these scenes have been taken, with his consent and collaboration, from his life, and that the aim has been not to reveal his life history, but to pick from the mass of material typical scenes showing the character-forming incidents.

As a life of Roosevelt this film will disappoint, for some of the chief incidents of his career are ignored, such as his term as Governor of New York, his active fight with Big Business, his African hunt and all of the activities which followed his incomplete term as the successor of McKinley.

Have it clearly understood that this is a study of Roosevelt the citizen rather than the record of his public career. Tell that his career is history and that this group of scenes are designed not to repeat that history, but to show how the character which made those accomplishments possible was formed. Work on the lines of "We all know Roosevelt the statesman. Now know him as the man." This appeal will be as strong and will not arouse unfulfilled expectations.

Hammer heavily upon the fact that this picture was produced by special arrangement with him and that he took an active interest in his work almost to the last moment of his illness. Lay stress upon the fact that this is an authorized version, sealed with his approval, and that a royalty is paid to him which is to be turned over to the Red Cross and other war charities until, in his own words, "the last man has been returned from abroad."

Accuracy Its Dominant Feature.

Lay stress upon the accuracy of the pictures. Tell that this film not alone shows the Roosevelt whom most Americans have seen and all love, but that it shows him at all stages of his career. The facial make-ups, based upon portraits from the family collection, are unusually vivid. We see not alone the grizzled veteran, who will always stand as the personification of Roosevelt, but we see him as a boy, as a youth, as a young man, in the prime of life and in his hale old age. Rare skill has been shown in the choice of actors to interpret these parts. Speak also of the fidelity of the other make-ups, of Pershing and Sims, of Hay and Cortelyou, Alger, McKinley, Leonard Wood, and the others who figure in the Washington scenes. Tell your public they can see General Pershing when he was still a captain, and Admiral Sims when he was yet a naval lieutenant whose interest in gun practice attracted the attention of President Roosevelt, who gave him a chance to develop gunnery in the American Navy to the point of efficiency that did so much to reduce the U-boat peril.

You have a wealth of detail for exploitation without using the misleading "life" of Roosevelt, so tell frankly and clearly that this is not the story of his life in detail, but the high lights of his career which made the sickly boy into a doer of things which gave him his love for the clean life and men who could do things.

But above all remember that many of the exploitation methods which would have served were he still living cannot now be used without antagonizing those who will be the staunchest supporters of the film. You cannot now make use of many of the strongly marked characteristics which gave him his individuality and at the same time afforded the cartoonists their opportunity. You cannot now do the caricature style of advertising. You must work along more dignified lines.

Advertise to the Limit.

This does not mean that you cannot advertise and advertise to the limit. It merely means that you cannot refer to "Terrible Teddy" or make his caricatured smile your trade mark. You can advertise and you should advertise to the limit of your ability. You will find most newspapers willing to give you ample space for exploitation in their reading columns, but make certain of this by taking larger advertising spaces than has been your habit. And play up the portraits above all else. You have these all the way from one to 24-sheets, and in from one to three column cuts. The cuts are in line and good results will be had with these even where your newspaper cannot handle even coarse screen half-tones. Try and use at least one cut a day for a week in advance of showing. Use one portrait in your advertisement and another with a reading notice if you can.

Take large spaces for the newspaper displays. Take enough space to use some of the three-column scene cuts with descriptive text. Work up interest lines. Say, for example, "Every schoolboy in America knows how Colonel Roosevelt looked, but did you ever see 'Assemblyman' Roosevelt? Did you ever see the young man who had to abandon his political career because of ill health? Did you know that Roosevelt? You can see him in 'The Fighting Roosevelts' at (house and date) and you can better understand the Roosevelt you remember." "We all know Roosevelt as a mighty hunter of big game, but did you ever know that it was an old Maine guide who taught him to shoot straight? Did you know that he despaired of ever being able to shoot until he tried on his father's spectacles one Christmas morning? You can see him get his first gun and his first real sight of the world in 'The Fighting Roosevelts' at (house and date). Not the life of Roosevelt, but those parts of his life which made him the man he was."

ROOSEVELT was NOT always

"The Colonel"

There was a time he was a small boy who got spanked for biting his little sister. There was a time he couldn't shoot. There was a time clever politicians could defeat him.

The World Knows
Colonel Roosevelt
Foremost Citizen of America

Now the world can glimpse the character-forming episodes in that made him what he was. Reproduced with his authority and hearty co-operation in wonderfully lifelike scenes of his boyhood, early days and great political fights.

The Man who threatened the Kaiser
The man who promoted Pershing
The man who started the American Navy

The intimate side of the Man who Did.

Roosevelt Started "Good Ones."

Work, too, on the facts that he gave Pershing and Simms their first chances, that he raised to high position General Leonard C. Wood, "the Father of Plattsburg," the man who first aroused this country to the need for preparedness. Work these little-known facts into your advertisement. If one advertisement is not enough, take two or three, scattered. Don't try to tell it all in one big display. Hold each big fact to itself. Better three quarter pages, and three big facts, than a full page so crowded that the reader feels that he has no time to go through all that type.

Get plenty of window cards in proportion to your needs. Get several sets of lobby stills, and print up cards calling attention to the unusual fidelity of the make-ups. Split the sets into fours and get them in many windows. If your local booksellers have the Roosevelt books, arrange for a special display. Don't concentrate upon your lobby. Get all over your town or your neighborhood.

But do not neglect your lobby. Here use the 22x28 photo gelatines, draping with the American flag. Use bunting for the lobby display and red, white and blue lights. Before you run your full display mount one of the one-sheets on heavy board and cut into strips. Start at the top and show just the hair section the first day, lettering "Guess who this is?" put in the mouth, adding the eyes the third day, and slip in the rest of the one sheet the fourth day, starting a full display of portraits and stills the following day and running this for a week, but using the drapings only for the day before the showing and the run.

In a town or locality you can offer to present the stills to the school or classes having the most votes. Most schools will appreciate these pictures for class room decoration and you can letter in "Presented by the Blank Theatre" on each still. Do this in oil so that it cannot be washed off. You can get up quite an interest in such an idea printing up votes and giving one for each five cents on the admission price, five with a quarter ticket, or ten with a fifty-cent ticket.

Hooking Up With the Schools.

Work on the schools, too, for advance publicity. Most principals will permit you to post a one sheet in the corridor at the bottom of the backing sheet. There or somewhere. If you cannot get this concession, post paper near the schools and on each side, so that children turning either way will see the poster. In town it will be best to work directly to the School Board to obtain a general permission covering all schools. It might pay to issue pupil tickets good for an afternoon performance following the close of school at a reduced admission. If this is done, have the performance early in the run that the children may tell their parents. This is largely a matter governed by local conditions, but it is worth serious thought.

Do not try stunt work, but use one or two street wagons for coming and the run. Use a twenty-four on one side and a six and some hand lettering on the other.

Avoid Reference to His Death.

Avoid any effort to suggest the recent death of Colonel Roosevelt through mourning borders or crape draperies. Do not make more than passing reference—if any—to his death. This picture deals with the living man.

Work for the political organizations. Try to secure their attendance in a body. Arrange with some prominent man to make an address the opening night and arrange for a write-up in the newspapers the following day. Work for any society. Roosevelt was a Mason and Masonic lodges might be interested. The Red Cross should certainly work in with you if you give emphasis to the Red Cross angle. Don't try to get them to sell tickets, but notify the local chapter or chapters well in advance.

There are some excellent suggestions for advertising angles in the press book supplied by the First National. One of these suggests the use of a cabinet from the local museum. If there is no local museum, you might obtain the loan of some private collection, or offer a "Roosevelt Prize" for the best collection. The optical angle is also an unusually good one, and is easy to work. The general line of stunts would not be permissible here, but this does not mean that many special ideas may not be worked if they are dignified and in keeping.

It will help a lot to work up the presentation with special music, community songs, and address or patriotic solo numbers. Make the presentation a production and you can best send your audience away satisfied. Make the showing an event and not merely the presentation of a film.

Dignity and Authority Great Asset.

In the Literary Digest for January 18 appeared a compilation of editorial opinion, drawn from newspapers all over the country, in which the Digest found that "one word was repeated a thousand times in editorials from sea to sea" when the press recorded the death of Theodore Roosevelt. That word is the simple but eloquent expression, "American." The Digest heads its result of press scrutiny with the caption "Theodore Roosevelt—American"; and there can be no better suggestion to exhibitors who shall play "The Fighting Roosevelts" than to follow this lead in appeal to popular opinion.

Incidentally every exhibitor who plays the picture should possess himself of a copy of the Digest for January 18 (published at No. 354 Fourth avenue, New York; price 10 cents) for therein are shown six different photographs drawn from the family album and reproduced to indicate Roosevelt's appearance at different stages of his career. These pictures, small though they may be, will serve to frame in the lobby. They will supply an authentic reminder of the remarkable "make-ups" of the actors in the film.

We should display a card with the pictures from the Digest reading: "Don't Stop to Look at These Pictures Now. See the Film, Then Look in This Frame for the Striking Proof of the Way Col. Roosevelt is Characterized by the Actors." You will find that this is one of the amazing features of the production—how players have been discovered who so strikingly resemble Roosevelt in the several stages of his career from childhood to the White House.

There is enough of public interest in the late "Theodore Roosevelt—American" to awaken keen desire of great sections of any town's population to a determination to see these episodes in his life depicted. Should the exhibitor be careful and not misrepresent the nature of the production he will stand that much better in the confidence of his public. To indicate that "The Fighting Roosevelts" runs the full gamut of Rooseveltian activities "from the cradle to the grave" would work injustice not alone to the public but to the exhibitor himself—for there would surely be a "come back" that will not add to future faith in the exhibitor's announcements of other attractions.

Manager of N. Y. Strand Advances Good Ideas

WHEN the World representative interviewed Joseph L. Plunkett, managing director of the New York Strand, the opening date of "The Fighting Roosevelts" was near at hand. The Strand has four weeks protection on the feature and the advertising aids that will be provided by First National were not all available for use at that theatre.

"We are limited to our regular methods of advertising," said Mr. Plunkett, "and the methods we are compelled, by force of conditions, to employ in presenting the picture here would not apply if I were managing a theatre in a small town or in a city of moderate size. It that event I would apply all of the advertising aids First National provided that met with my ideas of a dignified presentation of the Roosevelt picture.

"For the Strand engagement we are using all of accustomed mediums. We have been fortunate in securing the loan of a $10,000 oil painting of the Colonel for our lobby, paying only the insurance against damage. Then, too, we are writing a letter to the Board of Education suggesting that teachers make an announcement in the schools that this sterling American picture is being shown at the Strand as an impetus to genuine Americanism.

"If I were playing the picture in town or city of average size," continued Mr. Plunkett, "I should present it in a dignified manner, urging it as propaganda for Americanism. We've had all sorts of 'propaganda' and the Roosevelt picture is a timely subject for the ever-needed fostering of Americanism. Here is the best sort of propaganda for home consumption—the life of one of the greatest of Americans.

"The Boy Scouts, no matter how often they have been called upon, will be eager to place their enthusiasm behind 'The Fighting Roosevelts'—for no matter how great a favorite he may have been with grown-ups, Roosevelt was the idol and ideal of every boy in the country. The boys loved him and their enthusiasm will cause them to enter into the distribution of advertising and parading on the day of the show. Work the schools with advertising remembering that the girls admired Roosevelt as much as did the boys.

"This picture was six months in the making and passed Col. Roosevelt's approval shortly before his sudden death. Make its presentation a patriotic event canvassing all of the many and various societies that enter into the social life of every town and city. Feature 'Theodore Roosevelt—the Great American'," said Mr. Plunkett, in conclusion, "and the exhibitor who does that in a dignified manner will be well serving his community and will realize the best financial results."

Producers' and Distributors' News

Merit Plus Stunts Put Over Select's "The One Woman"

LONG-DISTANCE messages from New Haven, Conn., to the home offices of Select Pictures in New York, brought word of the tremendous reception given to "The One Woman," Select's Special, in that city. From noon until 9 o'clock every evening there had been a continuous line in front of the box office at Poli's Palace Theatre, the largest photoplay house in that city, and one of the most prominent in all New England. The crowds were so large and so anxious to get tickets that the police had to be called in to preserve order.

The previous house record for the Palace had been made by D. W. Griffith's "Hearts of the World," which attracted more people to this theatre than saw this picture in any other photoplay theatre in the United States. But "The One Woman," as the Poli management announced in the New Haven papers of January 14 and 15, climbed above this former mark.

That "The One Woman" achieved this record was due largely to the splendid co-operation shown by the local newspapers, the Palace management, the producers of the picture and the distributors, Select Pictures Corporation. For two weeks prior to the showing, advertisements and news notes appeared announcing the coming of the Select Special. To heighten public interest, a woman dressed in black visited department stores, big hotels and other public places; to any one who addressed her and said "Mastercraft," the name of the company which produced this picture, she gave an order redeemable for ten dollars in cash. It was inevitable, of course, that ninety per cent. of the women who appeared in black gowns were hailed and given the password, and within a few days the whole town was agog over "The One Woman." Interest was kept up by the fortunate individuals who had spoken to the right "One Woman" and received the reward and spread the news among their friends.

When the picture came to the Palace, the mysterious "One Woman" sat in the audience for several hours daily, and literally thousands came to the various showings, afternoons and evenings, to try their luck at meeting her, and also to satisfy their curiosity and interest in the picture itself.

Fundamentally, "The One Woman" succeeded so enviably not alone through this novel publicity, but more because of its own merit as a photoplay.

A "Seventeen" Picture for Jack Pickford.

Jack Pickford, starring in his own company in pictures to be released by the First National Exhibitors Circuit, is to appear in a thoroughly human story of a country town. The story is an original one created especially for Jack Pickford by James Kirkwood, who is directing.

The story is about a small-town boy, a veritable worm, who hasn't a chance to turn through a series of events which are fraught with romance, but not for Johnny. Johnny Spivins is "in wrong" from start to finish. As usual, in the case of a seventeen-year-old youth in the midst of his first and most terrible heart-pangs, it is a girl from the old home town who is the cause of his first great tragedy.

Class as Triple Novelty Madge Kennedy's Picture

ONCE more Goldwyn provides Madge Kennedy with a stellar vehicle calculated to exploit her unique personality to its utmost. It is "Daughter of Mine," and in it a triple novelty is promised. Miss Kennedy will be seen in a role affording her acting opportunities not found in her previous Goldwyn Pictures; the play embodies a new dramatic form, and the author, while well known to students of the screen, has never before turned his hand to photoplay construction for Goldwyn. The creator of "Daughter of Mine" is Goldwyn's art director, Hugo Ballin.

Madge Kennedy is seen as Rosie Abrabitz, a girl of the tenements, imaginative, appealing and very much given to idealizing people and things. At one stage of the interesting story she reads a manuscript written by her poet-lover, also of the tenements, and visualizes the narrative. Her highly colored imagination embellishes his conventional description into something of which he never dreamed. She becomes his heroine with all the airs and graces of Rosie's impossible feminine ideal. The other characters in the story within the story become the people Rosie knows best—her venerable, orthodox father, the janitor and the proprietor of the ice cream parlor she frequents. Transposed to the hectic atmosphere of the imaginary story, they retain all the characteristics of the simple people they really are. Thus each actor plays a dual role.

"Daughter of Mine" is not a dream play. It is a thoroughly modern comedy-drama involving real people and is replete with strong action.

Diando's Larkin-Compson Serial Due February 2

THE demand for good Western subjects seems never to cease, and exhibitors constantly are asking the producers and distributors for "good" Western subjects, hence the announcement that the new Diando serial, "The Terror of the Range," featuring Betty Compson and George Larkin, will be released February 2, and will undoubtedly be a welcome one.

This serial is in seven episodes and is from a scenario by Lucien Hubbard. It was directed by Stuart Paton. It is a typical Western story, with its locale in the picturesque Sierra Nevada mountains and is peopled with the cowboy, Indian and Mexican characters so dear to the lovers of "Westerns."

The story is woven around a mysterious bandit called The Terror of the Range, who is arousing the entire countryside with his depredations. He murders and pillages at the head of a band of Marauders, and his identity remains a secret since he always wears a wolf's head when on his raids. Finally the attention of the United States Government is attracted as his raids increase in frequency, and John Hardwick, a secret service agent, is sent to the ranch which seems to be the center of the Terror's activities.

The Diando Company draws attention with considerable pride to the cast assembled for "The Terror of the Range," which is one of the best balanced and finest ever assembled in a serial.

The two leading roles are played by George Larkin and Betty Compson, while H. P. Carpenter, Fred. M. Malatesta and Ora Carew play important parts.

"Making a Nation Fit" Comes Next.

The fourth picture of the U. S. Series, the Government two-reelers released by the Division of Films and distributed through the World Film Corporation, will be released February 3. It is entitled "Making a Nation Fit." The subject matter of the picture is the method adopted and carried out by the Government of preparing the hundreds of thousands of recruits for the heavy work of war ahead of them. It shows the training exercises in the cantonments and navy yards, covering the preparatory work of both the army and navy.

Bayonet classes are shown leaving the trench, going over the parapet, advancing on dummies and dropping into trenches. All kinds of setting-up exercises are illustrated, with Walter Camp, famous as a developer, showing his system to instructors and thousands of men. Even President Wilson's Cabinet is shown doing setting-up exercises, performing the same routine that was prepared for the soldiers and sailors.

Complete pictures are given of the army's physical program, with details of the work at the great training school.

Tobias Books "Lafayette" Solid.

A new record for booking a special production in the Connecticut territory of the New York exchanges has been established by L. S. Tobias, representative for Exhibitors' Mutual. Mr. Tobias has been with the Mutual in this particular section for the past five years. The record was made in booking "Lafayette, We Come."

Unusual Cast Appears in Goldwn's "Border Legion"

A CAST rarely equaled in screen history was assembled for the production of "The Border Legion," a picturization of Zane Grey's novel, starring Blanche Bates and Hobart Bosworth, which Goldwyn presents as a special release.

Blanche Bates, surely one of the most famous of David Belasco's feminine stars, has a role in her first motion picture appearance as forceful and thrilling as the character she portrayed in "The Girl of the Golden West" and dominates melodramatic situations in the picture just as she did in her tense moments on the speaking stage. Her initial screen appearance was the subject of much favorable comment when "The Border Legion" was presented at the Strand Theatre, New York, for a week's run.

Hobart Bosworth, one-time leading man for stage stars and long a favorite picture star, has a powerful role in "The Border Legion." His performance, too, received glowing praise from the critics, one of the reviewers proclaiming his portrayal "fairly Titanic in its dominance and force."

Eugene. Strong is another player of prominence who has a part suited to his talents in "The Border Legion." Well cast also is Russell Simpson, prominently identified with many big screen productions. His performance as the trader in Rex Beach's "The Barrier" won him high rank among screen players and commendation from the noted author, who engaged him for a prominent role in the new Rex Beach-Goldwyn Picture, "The Brand."

Horace Morgan has the role of Gorilla Bulden, head of a band of desperadoes, responsible for much of the stirring action in the play. The role of his chief aid is intrusted to Bull Montana, also well known in character roles. Arthur Morrison as the Sheriff, completes the brilliant cast of "The Border Legion."

Who's Who in "Sis Hopkins."

The cast of Mabel Normand's "Sis Hopkins" cannot fail to stimulate interest in the play for the very good reason that it contains a number of good names and seasoned players.

John Bowers is the leading man, playing for the first time with Miss Normand and for the first time on the screen an out-and-out "rube" character—that of Ridy Scarboro, clerk in the general store. Sam De Grasse, too well known for his work in support of almost every star to need an introduction, is intrusted with the role of Vibert, the richest man in the town where Sis lives.

Thomas Jefferson, veteran character actor, following in the footsteps of his distinguished father, Joseph Jefferson, enacts the role of Pa Hopkins, parent of the irrepressible Sisserette.

By far the best part which has come to Eugenie Forde in many a day is found in Miss Peckover, principal of the amusing country "finishing" school, where Sis Hopkins is sent to get an "edjucation." Nicholas Cogley, Harry McCoy and a bevy of rural beauties in the seminary episode complete the roster.

Clara Horton in Pickford Support.

Supporting Jack Pickford in his first starring production for the First National Exhibitors Circuit are a number of players who have already won distinction on the screen. Marguerite de la Motte, who played with Douglas Fairbanks in "Arizona," occupies the chief supporting role. Clara Horton, who is remembered as "the girl" in Pickford's "Tom Sawyer" pictures, will again be seen with this star. Hardie Kirkland, Robin Williams, Lydia Knott, George Dromgold and Jake Abrams complete the cast.

Famous Players Name Twelve February Releases

AN Artcraft picture, a Paramount-Artcraft special and ten Paramount products are included in the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation's February schedule of feature releases just announced.

The first week of the month may well be termed Thomas H. Ince week, for all three releases of February 2 are Ince-supervised productions. The first of these, an Artcraft picture from the studio of William S. Hart and directed by the favorite Western star himself, is "Breed of Men," the story being by J. G. Hawks.

"Hard Boiled," with Dorothy Dalton as the star, is released the same day. This is a story by John Lynch, scenarioized by R. Cecil Smith, and Victor Schertzinger was the director.

The third release is "Happy Though Married," by Lois and Arthur Zellner, in which Enid Bennett is starred. C. Gardner Sullivan wrote the scenario, and Fred Niblo directed. The two last-named pictures are Paramount productions.

Marguerite Clark, in the role of Lovey Mary in "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch," a Paramount picture based on the novel by Alice Hegan Rice, and the dramatization by Anne Crawford Flexner, is scheduled for release February 9. Eve Unsell wrote the scenario, and Hugh Ford, who originally produced the play both in this country and England, directed.

Mme. Lina Cavalieri reappears on the Paramount schedule the same date in "The Two Brides," which Margaret Turnbull scenarioized from a story by Alicia Ramsey. Edward Jose directed. On February 9 also comes another Thomas H. Ince picture, Charles Ray in "The Girl Dodger." J. G. Hawks wrote this story and Jerome Storm directed under Mr. Ince's supervision.

Thomas H. Ince's big production of Louis Joseph Vance's sensational story, "The False Faces," is scheduled for release February 16 as a Paramount-Artcraft Special. Director Irving Willat is said to have injected the element of suspense in this production to a remarkable degree, and Henry B. Walthall, in the role of "The Lone Wolf," is declared to have done some of the greatest work of his career.

The same date marks the release of Dorothy Gish's third Paramount picture, "Boots," from the story by Martha Pittman and scenario by M. M. Stearns. Elmer Clifton directed.

The third release for this date is Vivian Martin in "You Never Saw Such a Girl," an adaptation for Paramount by Marion Fairfax of George Weston's story, "The Kingdom of Heart's Desire." Robert Vignola directed.

"Maggie Pepper," a version of Charles Klein's famous play, with Ethel Clayton in the stellar role, is a Paramount release of February 23. Chester Withey directed this production from a scenario by Gardner Hunting. Another Paramount production, also based on a famous stage play, is released the same day—"Paid in Full," Eugene Walter's sensational story, and Pauline Frederick has the stellar role. Emile Chautard was the director. The third release on this date is "The Winning Girl," starring Shirley Mason supported by Niles Welch, and directed by Robert Vignola.

"Made in America" Goes to Public February 16

ANNOUNCEMENT is made by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation that "Made in America," a series in eight episodes dealing exclusively in the training of America's armies of victory over here and over there, and the result of that training, will be released Sunday, February 16. The Hodkinson Corporation publishes and distributes the series through Pathe Exchange, Inc. "Made in America" was produced and directed by Ashley Miller with the co-operation of the United States Government through the Division of Films. It is authoritative in every detail.

The scenes of this human, virile and unique series were taken in one of the largest cantonments in the United States with over 40,000 American doughboys starring in the production. Every phase of military training, from the day the draftee is inducted into the service of his country until he is going "over the top" in France, is shown minutely. In fact "Made in America" is so thorough that a print of it will be preserved by the Government in the archives of the War Department.

The series holds interest from the very start, as the story revolves around three American boys who are called to the colors by the system which gave America one of the most powerful armies the world has ever known.

Many Factors Go to Make "What Every Woman Wants"

EVERY man imagines he knows "what every woman wants," but there are a few things he can learn regarding the opposite sex from the social melodrama, "What Every Woman Wants," which is now in the making by Jesse D. Hampton for release by Exhibitors' Mutual. Most every woman wants good clothes. So does the featured character in "What Every Woman Wants," yet it is the unusual method pursued by her in obtaining them that has much to do with the plot of the production.

Throughout the play there are many novel situations, which will make it one of the leading screen attractions of the year. In addition, the principal parts are portrayed by players whose reputations have been made in numerous other productions.

"What Every Woman Wants" is one of those motion picture titles which go a long way toward making a production successful, but in this instance there is every other requisite a high-class box office medium should contain.

Grace Darmond, whose perfect face and outstanding beauty is known to almost every motion picture enthusiast, has been cast as the girl who knows "what every woman wants," and who gets it. Miss Darmond will be the centre of what will be virtually a costume show, though only an incidental feature of "What Every Woman Wants," which possesses a dramatic vein that will have a universal appeal because of its humanness.

Then there is Hedda Nova, the attractive Russian actress, whose peculiar type of beauty has adorned the screen in a number of successful photoplays. Miss Nova has an important part in "What Every Woman Wants" and is another of the group of handsome women engaged by Mr. Hampton for his big special offering.

The other female members of the cast are Barbara Tennant, Mildred Reardon and Mary Warren, all actresses known for their talent as much as their attractiveness.

There is a war atmosphere surrounding "What Every Woman Wants," but it is not a war story by any means.

McCormick Praises "Under Four Flags."

One of the most glowing tributes to the worth of "Under Four Flags" and its box office value has been received by the Division of Films from S. Barrett McCormick, managing director of the Circle Theatre, Indianapolis. Mr. McCormick states that he played the picture three weeks after the armistice was signed, when it was naturally supposed that there would be a lull in the enthusiasm and interest of war activities, but that his week with the picture convinced him that pictures dealing with the actual achievements of American arms has not been lessened by the cessation of hostilities. He says further that "Under Four Flags" played at the Circle to the largest attendance of any of the numerous war pictures he has presented.

Comment and approval from one of the most prominent exhibitors bears out the claims of persons of prominence in the industry that the war picture is not through but has just begun.

The Division of Films reports that while "America's Answer," the second official war picture, hung up a remarkable record for bookings all over the country, owing to its timely appeal and the untiring efforts of the World Film branch managers and salesmen, "Under Four Flags" will far eclipse that record because of the high merits of the attraction, its unusual popularity with the public and its proved box office value.

Ready Bookings for Kinograms.

Following the example set by the Rialto and Rivoli theatres, in New York City, and Clune's Auditorium, in Los Angeles, the big and smaller theatres of the country are swamping World Pictures with applications for the showing of Kinograms, the new twice-a-week news reel which begins publication on February 1. These applications are coming in the form of telegrams and letters, and George R. Meeker, general sales manager of World Pictures, declares that in all his extensive motion picture experience a news reel has never before started out under such auspicious circumstances. It is evident that the personnel of the executive staff of Kinograms, consisting of Charles Urban, Ray L. Hall and Terry Ramsaye carries weight and that the exhibitors realize that what these men have done with news weeklies in the past will be more than excelled in Kinograms in the future.

Pictures Being Made With Thought of Export Needs

"American producers, big and small, are becoming educated to the requirements of the foreign markets. These markets are no longer represented as an after-thought to the producer." The foregoing expression of opinion by an official of the Inter-Ocean Film Corp. introduced a little discussion of just what had been accomplished, was now being accomplished and may be accomplished in the future.

"Once upon a time," stated this man, "the export field was of minor consideration to the average producer. He selected his local distribution very carefully, but the great market beyond did not matter.

"At that time he was just as likely to show his product to Exporter Smith as Exporter Jones, or to forget his appointments with both and show the film to Exporter Brown, because he happened to meet Brown on the street at the last minute. Foreign distribution was often decided upon in hotel lobbies or bars.

"But the reputable exporters, like Inter-Ocean, have been educating the producer, and perhaps successfully. At least, the producer studies the export market as carefully as he does the home one. He does not hawk his pictures about among the exporters. He knows that they are just as opposed to hawking as are the better class American distributors. And he knows what class of film will go in the foreign markets, and is guided by this knowledge in making his pictures. That is to say, the producer tries to get international appeal into his product. As long as he succeeds in achieving this, the America industry does not have to fear losing its hold on the foreign market."

Demand for Red Cross Film.

Immediate response has been noted for the special release "Belgium's Day of Days," issued under the Arc Review brand. The subject is a one-reeler of exclusive shots at the dramatically impressive reentry of the king and queen of Belgium into their capital, which was featured in all the newspapers of the world. The reel is devoted entirely to this significant and brilliant military event.

Matt Moore Leading Man in "The Bondage of Barbara"

PROVIDING Mae Marsh with the right cast in her Goldwyn Pictures is one of the difficult tasks falling to the executives of that organization. The star must play with people who are experienced in her "touch and go" methods. In "The Bondage of Barbara," a typical Mae Marsh production, there can be no question as to the suitability of each interesting member of the cast.

Matt Moore is leading man. Making his first appearance in Goldwyn Pictures, his personality and methods suggest Miss Marsh's ideal foil in "The Cinderella Man." Apart from this, he is a well-known figure to motion-picture enthusiasts, his roles in support of various stars being too numerous to mention.

Jack McLean, who plays the important role of the star's brother in "The Bondage of Barbara," is much in favor with audiences and directors in spite of his few years on the screen. With Miss Marsh he has the difficult task of being a ne'er-do-well, who enlists the sympathy of the audience.

Arthur Housman, a real camera veteran, plays with his usual skill and appeal a thoroughly bad youth—a sharp contrast, by the way, to the role he assumed with Mabel Normand in "Back to the Woods." Edwin Sturgis, always to be depended on for a convincing portrayal of iniquity, gives a characteristic account of himself, and the fine, upright personality of Henry Hallam is appreciated.

Next Talmadge Is "The Probation Wife."

Having appeared in her last two productions in character roles—in "The Forbidden City" as a Chinese girl and in "The Heart of Wetona" as an Indian maiden, Norma Talmadge, Select Pictures star, is now in the midst of a production which will bring her back to the screen as Norma Talmadge. Miss Talmadge's next attraction will be "The Probation Wife," a picture based on a story by Angie Ousley Rooser. Sydney A. Franklin is directing from a scenario written by Kathryn Stuart.

Miss Talmadge will be seen as Jo, a child of the underworld, while her supporting cast will include Thomas Meighan, leading man; Florence Billings, Alex B. Francis, Walter McEwen and Amelia Summerville, in addition to others well known on the screen.

"The Probation Wife" is the third in Miss Talmadge's Second Star Series.

Strand Publicist Recalls Spanish War.

"Doc" Wilson, who has charge of the publicity at the Strand Theatre, had a unique experience when "The Fighting Roosevelts" first appeared on the screen at the New York Strand. The doctor is a Spanish War veteran. He served as a surgeon during the battle of San Juan and was a tentmate of Colonel Roosevelt's for a period of over six months.

When the battle of San Juan Hill was flashed upon the screen, Dr. Wilson informed Manager Plunkett, of the Strand, that the actor who took the part of the "Rough Rider" had so exactly reproduced Colonel Roosevelt's appearance and mannerisms that the imitation could hardly be detected. Colonel Roosevelt, Dr. Wilson stated, had a strange method of flicking his horse with his whip as he rode at the head of his troops. The actor had reproduced this motion exactly.

Get Special Train for Lytell.

A special train was chartered by Metro for a series of scenes in "The Blind Man's Eyes," Bert Lytell's vehicle. The train included a standard Pullman sleeper and an observation car, and made a run of about 110 miles, all told, out of Los Angeles while the scenes were being "shot."

Six Widely Different Universals for February

SIX features of widely different character will constitute Universal's feature release schedule for February. February 3 will bring the first release of the month, an Edith Roberts feature, "Sue of the South," produced by W. Eugene Moore from the story by Maud Reeves White. In Miss Roberts' supporting cast are James Farley and Ruby Lafayette. The story deals with the life of a Southern girl who goes to the city to live with her wealthy father, after her mother's death, and finding him too wrapped in his riches and his position seeks to make his life more enjoyable and beneficial by introducing love into his home.

February 10 will bring two photoplays produced by Rupert Julian to the market. One drama, featuring Monroe Salisbury and Ruth Clifford, and entitled "The Millionaire Pirate," has been adopted from the Hungarian novel of Emil Nyitray. The other, a Universal special attraction, features Mary MacLaren, and is entitled "Creaking Stairs." Jack Mulhall, Herbert Prior and Clarissa Selwyn are seen in support.

Fritzie Brunette is featured in the February 17 release entitled "The Sealed Envelope." Harvey Gates wrote the story for this release and Douglas Gerrard directed the filming of it. William Sheer and Joseph Girard are seen in support of Miss Brunette.

"The Rose of the Night" is the tentative title for the special attraction released February 24 and featuring Priscilla Dean. Tod Browning has produced the film play from Waldemar Young's scenario of a story by Evelyn Campbell, Wellington Playter, Lon Chaney, Spottiswood Aitken and Gertrude Astor support Miss Dean.

The second release scheduled for February 24 is "The Little White Savage," which features Carmel Myers. Paul Powell produced this feature from Waldemar Young's screen adaptation of Francis Greenlee's novel. Harry Hilliard and William Dyer are prominent in support of Miss Myers in this release.

The new Universal serial, featuring Marie Walcamp and entitled "The Red Glove," will be released February 17, according to the schedule, and the New Universal Screen Magazine will also make its first appearance early in the month. The comedy and short reel subjects' schedule for February has not been completed as yet.

Francis in Madge Kennedy Support.

Alec B. Francis, the veteran screen player, has a lovable role in Madge Kennedy's Goldwyn picture, "Day Dreams," by Cosmo Hamilton. Francis is cast as Grandpa Burn, guardian of Primrose (Madge Kennedy), who is living in fairyland awaiting the arrival of her white knight, who is to take her as his princess to his castle across the pond.

Crandall Enthuses Over "Cheating Cheaters."

Of the many reports concerning the excellence of Clara Kimball Young's Select Picture, "Cheating Cheaters," one of the more noteworthy is the statement issued by Select showing the enthusiasm displayed by Harry M. Crandall, proprietor of the new Metropolitan Theatre and Knickerbocker Theatre, of Washington, D. C.

According to Select's bulletin, Manager Crandall had already booked the picture for his Knickerbocker Theatre, but upon viewing the print at the exchange his enthusiasm was so great that he decided to cancel another attraction he had booked for his new Metropolitan Theatre and show "Cheating Cheaters" simultaneously in both of his Capital theatres.

Back of this undertaking Mr. Crandall inaugurated a $1,600 advertising campaign, including liberal showings in newspapers and stands of twenty-four sheets on every commanding site in Washington and all the roads leading into the Capital from Virginia and Maryland.

Professor Raymond L. Ditmars, of the New York Zoological staff, has just completed a wonderful picture for the Pathe Review showing some particularly interesting habits of the American beaver. No such scenes of beaver life have ever before been recorded by a camera, either in still pictures or in motion. These intimate scenes show the beavers actually cutting down trees and gnawing them into sections in the first operations of gathering food wood for the winter, from which the bark may be gnawed. The sections—some of them fifteen feet long—are dragged by the industrious animals to the water, then towed to an island of supplies, built entirely by the beavers.

Private Showing for "Echo of Youth."

Ivan Abramson, director general of the Graphic Film Corporation, has finished "The Echo of Youth" and it will have a private showing, for trade and press, on the New York Theatre Roof at 2:30 P. M., Tuesday, January 28.

In the cast are Charles Richman, Leah Baird, Pearl Shepard, Marie Shotwell, Jack McLean, Peggy Shanor, Howard Hall, William Bechtel and Philip Van Loan.

Parex to Release Two Edgar Lewis Subjects

WILLIAM L. SHERRY, president of the Parex Film Corporation and head of the Sherry Service, announces the closing of a deal with the Edgar Lewis Productions Company of New York for two big Lewis productions, "Calibre .38," a six-part picturization of the famous story of that title by Roy Middleton, and "The Troop Train," also in six reels, based on William Hamilton Osborne's Saturday Evening Post novel of the same name.

"Calibre .38" will be released on February 17 and "The Troop Train" two weeks from that date. Both are new productions in which all the resources of direction and photography have been brought to bear. There is a sufficient guarantee of their quality in the fact that they are by the same producer responsible for "The Barrier."

"Calibre .38" is a thrilling story of the Northwest, full of the adventuous spirit of the frontier, and "The Troop Train" covers the hair raising story of a New York policeman in running down and putting out of existence a gang of spies in America. Mitchell Lewis, Hedda Vena and Lola Pauzdrovna are included in the cast of "Calibre .38," while Glen White and Josephine Hill are featured in "The Troop Train."

"The Indestructible Wife" Finished.

With the cutting and titling finished on "The Indestructible Wife," Alice Brady's Select Picture for January, the studio and location work on her succeeding picture, "The World To Live In," also completed, Miss Brady has plunged into the midst of another, the name for which has not yet been selected, thereby putting three pictures for this versatile star into the works at one time.

"The Indestructible Wife," which is now completed and awaiting release during the current month, is a screen version of Frederic and Fanny Hatton's successful stage play of two seasons ago. In it Miss Brady has the part of a wife who proves during the course of the story to be very indestructible, but toward the end she wears down and becomes a very sensible young wife. It's a great role, Select declares, and just the sort that is suited to an actress of Miss Brady's type and charm. Charles Maigne wrote the scenario and also directed the production.

World Pictures Frequents Florida.

The number of companies producing pictures in Florida almost equals those now operating in California. The necessity for semi-tropical climate has always made the far West desirable to many of the producers even though there was the natural disadvantage in being so far from the base of distribution.

It is for this reason that World Pictures did not listen to the lure of California. It felt that if it became necessary to have southern climate then Florida, being only thirty hours away, offered a solution to the problem.

At the present time World has at work in and around St. Augustine all of its stars, including Montagu Love, Carlyle Blackwell, June Elvidge, Evelyn Greeley, not forgetting Johnnie Hines, Jack Drumier, and a score more. Dell Henderson is directing the making of a picture which will bear the title of "The Price of Doubt."

Diando Announces Episode Titles.

Diando announces the complete list of episode titles for its serial "The Terror of the Range," co-starring Betty Compson and George Larkin, which will be released on February 2. The list of titles for the seven episodes is as follows: "Prowlers of the Night," "The Hidden Chart," "The Chasm of Fear," "The Midnight Raid," "A Threat from the Past," "Tangled Tales," and "Run to Earth."

Letterer Finds "Wild Honey" Strong.

Just how strong the Brooklynites are for "Wild Honey," the high-actioned Western drama starring Doris Kenyon, is indicated in the fact that over three hundred of them were "run out" of the Colonial Theatre, 1747 Broadway, Sunday night, because they were standing up in the aisles.

Otto Letterer, proprietor of the theatre, who happened to be absent, explained to the fire department officials that he had been having trouble every night checking up on the sales because "Wild Honey" had been pulling so hard that the house was full ten minutes after it opened.

"I'm always careful to follow the ordinances," said Mr. Letterer, in explanation of the situation, "but I had to go away for half an hour Sunday evening and when I got back the doormen were fighting 'em away."

"Love and Lather" (Vitagraph).

Those irrepressible boys, Earl Montgomery and Joe Rock, are at it again and this time it is in a barber shop.

"Love and Lather," which Vitagraph has scheduled as its Big "V" Special Comedy release for February 3. It shows the two comedians getting jobs in a barber's shop, Montgomery as a bootblack and Rock as an expert with the razor. Of course, the manicure girls figure in the lively party, and it's a safe bet that all the customers who visit this particular barber shop while Earl shines shoes and Joe shaves faces are going to get everything the shop has to offer but service.

Brevoort Boosts "Midnight Stage."

The Brevoort Theatre, at Bedford avenue and Fulton street, Brooklyn, used an excellent publicity stunt to advertise Pathe's Frank Keenan feature "The Midnight Stage." An old fashioned stage coach with four horses and the driver and passengers dressed in the period of the picture started from the theatre each morning and drove through Brooklyn streets. The Brevoort Theatre also announced a Wild West Party as an additional "stunt" to boost "The Midnight Stage."

Doris Kenyon's "Twilight" Is Ready for the Cutter

ACTUAL work on Doris Kenyon's latest picture, "Twilight," was finished last week at the Biograph Studio. J. Searle Dawley, Miss Kenyon's director, is now cutting the production and working out some novel effects which will be used in the titles.

No sooner had Miss Kenyon completed the final scenes of "Twilight" than she was taken ill with a mild attack of influenza, with which she is still confined to her home.

According to reports, Director Dawley has made in "Twilight" by far the best picture in which Miss Kenyon has yet appeared. The story was originally published in a magazine under the title "The Alchemy of Love" and was written by Vingie E. Roe, a remarkable California girl who is rapidly achieving reputation among the leading short story writers of the day. The screen adaptation was made by Louis Joseph Vance.

Most of the scenes in the production are laid in the mountains of North Carolina, Director Dawley having taken the company to that State in order to find the story absolutely perfect surroundings. More than a hundred mountaineers and wood-choppers, together with a score of yoke of oxen participate in the picture.

Tad Will Draw for Universal.

T. A. Dorgan, better known as "Tad," whose cartoon creations have brought millions of smiles and millions of new slangy expressions to Americans during the past six years, will draw animated "Indoor Sports" for the International Film Service weeklies. It has often been said that "Tad" took up slang where George Ade left off, and as a result "Indoor Sports" has been so important a feature in daily newspapers that it has become a part of the daily life of millions of readers. The creations of this cartoonist will need no introduction to screen followers.

"Indoor Sports" will be only one of the many special cartoon features of future tri-weekly news service released through Universal exchanges by the International Film Service, Inc.

Which Is More Than George's Beard Did.

George D. Baker, the Metro director, is one who is absorbed in making the films given to his care for production as nearly perfect artistically as possible. Hence he rather resents any slur upon the screen as being a medium less important than any other artistic means.

A young instructor of English drama, making a tour of the new Metro studios in Los Angeles, recently took a most highbrow attitude toward the whole business.

"Think of the expenditure of effort on these things," he said sadly, "and then what is the completed product—mental chewing gum at best."

Mr. Baker, standing near, overhead the remark.

"You may be right, professor," he retorted, "but like chewing gum, too, the movies seem to stick."

Pathe to Release French Official Film.

"In Alsace-Lorraine" is the title of an official film which for historical and sentimental interest and for splendid pictorial quality must stand as one of the striking cinematographic achievements of the great war. It is photographed by the Cinematographic Division of the French Army and will be released by Pathe on February 2.

The settings of these remarkable views are the cities of Mulhouse, Metz, Colmar, and Strasbourg, four acts of a tremendous spectacular play. Behind the fluttering flags of France, one sees the victorious troops pass into the first city on November 17. Prominent in this glorious event were the veterans of 1870.

Heavy Bookings on Jewel's "The Heart of Humanity"

"The Heart of Humanity" will enjoy an unusual first run in Chicago early in February, the Chicago Jewel exchange has announced. The big Holubar film is to shown at four leading theatres, the Casino, the Pantheon, the West End and the Twentieth Century simultaneously. By running at four theatres at the same time, first run, "The Heart of Humanity" will establish a record for presentation in the Windy City.

On several previous occasions a new feature film has been shown at three houses at one time, but never in as many as four leading theatres simultaneously.

Manager Goldman, of the Chicago Jewel exchange, has reported many bookings on "The Heart of Humanity," one contract assuring the Lubliner & Trinz circuit of theatres early showings of the feature.

New York newspaper and trade press praise of "The Heart of Humanity" seemingly has convinced exhibitors all over the country that the big Jewel drama is one of the greatest plays of cinema history.

"The Hidden Truth" Should Draw.

According to Select Pictures Corporation, exhibitors who show Anna Case in Select's big special attraction, "The Hidden Truth," have one of the best advertising possibilities. Estimated roughly, more than five million people in the United States have heard Anna Case's voice reproduced from photograph records, but have never seen her personally; and these are the people, it is claimed, who will crowd the theatre where "The Hidden Truth" is playing.

In addition to her many years on the Metropolitan Opera stage and her numerous concert tours throughout all of the principal cities, Miss Case has been singing for the phonograph for six years. During this time she has made more than a score of records, with an aggregate sale of more than half a million.

Miss Case is still the "American songbird," but in "The Hidden Truth" she is a Western mining camp entertainer. As the story progesses, so does the Anna Case of sombrero and buckskin skirts.

Good Work of Current Events.

Forty grinning, joyous carloads of artillerymen of the Blackhawks, the vanguard of the Eighty-sixth Division, arrived in Chicago on a recent morning at 7 o'clock. Men, women and children were banked, a dozen deep, along the curbs, cheering and waving flags, ready to greet them. Policement made a noble effort to hold them back, but it was as vain as it was noble. It was the greatest demonstration ever witnesses in Chicago.

The same evening, at 7 o'clock, thanks to the enterprise of the International Film Service, eleven theatres were showing an extra to the Universal Current Events, the news-reel put out by this company and released by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, containing all the events of the morning. At the Pantheon and Riviera theatres, the two largest in Chicago, with a combined seating capacity of nearly 7,000, the people stood up and cheered and cheered and the orchestra played the Star Spangled Banner.

Gaby Deslys Picture Scores Hit.

Pathe's good judgment in importing the big Gaby Deslys feature "Infatuation" is being proved daily by the reports coming in to the home office from branch managers who state that every exhibitor who has booked this feature has reported greatly increased attendance, and many second dates are being asked for. One exhibitor in New York City packed his theatre for two nights and brought the picture back again the same week to tremendous business

Ford to Direct "The Woman Thou Gavest Me"

JESSE L. LASKY, first vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, announces the purchase of the motion picture rights to "The Woman Thou Gavest Me," the famous novel by Hall Caine. At the offices of the company it was learned that this production will be staged by Hugh Ford, supervising director of Eastern studios.

The production of this well-known subject, it is announced, will mark one of the most notable releases of the company during the early spring. Mr. Ford will himself direct the film, which fact in itself promises an exceptional visualization of the subject.

Mr. Ford, who has been actively engaged in the East for the past few years in his position of supervising director of Paramount and Artcraft productions, will, for the first time, stage a Famous Players-Lasky film in California. He has already left New York. Every effort will be extended to make this photoplay one of the big films of the year. The scenario will be handled by Arthur Edwin Krows, who has just been engaged by the organization.

"The Woman Thou Gavest Me" is one of the most popular of the many novels by Hall Caine. Published in 1913, it created a furore and was one of the most widely read and discussed books of the day. It was dramatized by Derwent Hall Caine, the son of the author, and was presented on the stage for the first time at the Shubert Theatre, in Boston, April 9, 1917, where it finished the season, scoring a triumph.

Mr. Ford has taken with him to California his technical staff.

Strong Cast for "Come Again Smith."

"Come Again Smith' 'is the eighth picture starring Jack Warren Kerrigan that the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation has distributed. It is a frothy comedy of the romantic adventure type. John H. Blackwood wrote the story, E. Mason Hopper directed it, and Jesse D. Hampton produced it.

Lois Wilson continues to be the object of Kerrigan's celluloid adoration, and she is at her sparkling best in this picture. Winifred Greenwood, former American star, plays Miss Wilson's sister.

William Conklin, villain in several recent Kerrigan pictures, designs a new form of trouble for the hero in "Come Again Smith." Henry A. Barrows is the lover of humanity whose impulse is responsible for the unexpected good luck that comes to the hero.

Charles French, as in "Three X Gordon," a previous Kerrigan success, is the father of a useless spender. Walter Perry, that fine old character actor, makes his fourth appearance with Kerrigan in "Come Again Smith," which will be released February 10.

Play First; Then the Film.

The demand for "The Better 'Ole" by exhibitors throughout the country as a result of the success of the play has reached such dimensions as to indicate that the World Film Corporation will have to issue at least one hundred and fifty prints of this subject.

The manner in which the picture version of the play will be distributed is not to damage the play by running the picture simultaneously with the stage version, but to take advantage of the success attained by the play on the local stage and then release the picture in order to profit by the impression it created in the legitimate houses. In this way the exhibitor will be able to cash in on the money that has been expended in newspaper and billboard advertising and the endorsement secured through legitimate audiences. It is quite possible and everything points to a success for the picture that will establish it as a close rival to "The Birth of a Nation" as a money-maker.

Pearl White Goes to Palm Beach.

Pearl White decided January 15 that she would like at least a few days respite from the rigors of a New York winter and that Palm Beach offered the ideal spot for a short vacation. Her director, George B. Seitz, has planned to start work on Miss White's new serial "In Secret," but, after a consultation, it was found a number of scenes in which Miss White does not take part could be taken for the next fortnight. So Miss White departed for the Sunny South. The next day director Seitz caught the Palm Beach fever and decided that he also would take a flying trip to Florida. He and Mrs. Seitz left on Thursday, and while there Mr. Seitz will go over the earlier episodes of the new serial with his star.

In this atmosphere of swelldom at midwinter play Miss White hopes to draw new inspiration for her dare-deviltry.

Robert Chambers Story for Pearl White Serial

PAUL BRUNET, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., makes an announcement of interest to the motion picture trade this week in outlining Pathe's plans for Pearl White's next serial. It is to be an adaptation of a series of stories by Robert W. Chambers which ran recently in a monthly periodical under the title "In Secret."

The coupling of America's popular novelist and the screen's famous heroine is an achievement in direct line with this firm's announced intention of placing serials on a higher plane than they have hereto held and of producing episode pictures which will be as logical and sensible as the finest five reel features.

Robert W. Chambers is in a class by himself as a novelist. He has been writing for a great many years and each of his novels triumphs. One or two of the Chambers stories have been filmed, but this is the first fiction of the famous novelist to be transferred to the serial screen.

George B. Seitz.

Mr. Chambers has written so many successful novels that it requires a lot of space to enumerate them, but a few of the best known are, "The Common Law," "The Firing Line," "The Fighting Chance," "The Danger Mark," "The Girl Philippa," "The Hidden Children," "The Younger Set," and "The Moonlit Way." In addition he is the most prolific contributor to the monthly magazines and his work is always before the public either in novelized or short story form.

The Pathe publicity department does not make the usual statement of the figure paid for the rights to the Chambers serial, but it readily can be understood that "In Secret" was not bought for a song and here again Pathe has shown adherence to its policy of "better serials" by purchasing the work of so well known an author.

Next in importance to the securing of the Chambers story comes the announcement that the serial will be made by a new producing company to be known as George B. Seitz, Inc. George B. Seitz who heads the corporation bearing his name, has been Miss White's director for many serials and will direct her in "In Secret." Mr. Seitz has had a long and successful career with Pathe, starting in as assistant scenario writer five years ago at a small salary. In the five years he has been with this firm he has risen to the head of his own corporation, and it is not exaggerating to say that he has a lot to do with the great success of the Pearl White Pathe Serials through his long association with the star.

Bertram Millhauser, who will do the scenario for "In Secret," is another youth who has risen to a high position under the Pathe banner within a very short space of time. He started in the Pathe publicity department a few years ago and soon showed adaptability for scenario writing. The Pathe executives recognized this ability and transferred Mr. Millhauser to the scenario department. He has written the scenarios for the last three Pearl White serials and also for the Mollie King serial "The Double Cross."

Work has already been started on "In Secret" at the Pathe Studio at No. 1 Congress street, Jersey City, but within a few weeks Mr. Seitz will transfer his operations to the Pathe Studio at 134th street and Park avenue, New York.

Yale Theatre Supply to Exploit Simplex Product

IN the Yale Theatre Supply Company, second floor, Scheidley Building, Kansas City, Mo., the Simplex Company, of New York, has added to its list of distributors a concern which is expected greatly to increase the present large sale of its machines in Kansas, Western Missouri, Northern Arkansas and Oklahoma.

The Yale Company has unusual facilities for the disposal of Simplex products in that territory, and is under the management of C. D. Struble, who is well known and recognized as one of the most capable men in the film circles of the Middle West. He has been engaged in the film and machine business in the Kansas City territory continuously since April, 1907. For three years, from 1908 to 1911, he was the manager of the Monarch Film Exchange in Oklahoma City; for two years the branch manager of the General Film Company in Kansas City, and during the year of 1917 in charge of the Triangle Exchange, Kansas City.

He is a thoroughly experienced machineman and is personally acquainted with almost every exhibitor in the entire territory.

The Yale Company will carry a large stock of Simplex projectors and parts for replacements, and has added a projection room for the convenience of film manufacturers in screening their pictures for the benefit of local exhibitors.

"The Belle of New York" (Select).

Burdened at the start with unfavorable criticisms in the Times, Herald, Dramatic Mirror, and practically every other newspaper and magazine in the country, "The Belle of New York" opened more than twenty years ago in the Casino Theatre, New York, and—it is still playing in London! This is the original Hugh Morton and Gustave Kerker musical comedy in which Edna May made famous the role of the Salvation Army lass, now converted to the screen by Select Pictures from the version by Eugene Walter. Marion Davies has the role created by Edna May.

Thus, after more than a score of years on the musical comedy stage, with the words and music translated into more than a dozen different languages, with tons of paper and gallons of ink used on advertising, Select's production of this celebrated play should be destined to succeed.

Kerrigan Makes Hit in Pittsburgh.

Carlos E. Moore, live wire representative for the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation in Pittsburgh, reports that "The Drifters," starring J. Warren Kerrigan, the J. D. Hampton star, broke all house records at the Lyric Theatre, where it played first run for two days.

The first day the receipts were 20 per cent. higher than any previous Friday, and on Saturday not only broke the Saturday record but smashed all records for one or two days. On Saturday afternoon the lobby, sidewalk, and street were blocked from 4:30 until after 8 o'clock, and two policmen were in attendance.

Mr. Mason, general manager for the Harry Davis Enterprise Company, owners of the Lyric Theatre, states that if box office receipts are any criterion, Warren Kerrigan will not only be one of the most popular male stars, but will set a new attendance record.

Lewis Takes Snow Scenes 8,000 Feet Up in Sierras

SNOWBOUND on the crest of the Sierras, 8,000 feet above sea level and overlooking the Yosemite Valley 3,800 feet below, Mitchell Lewis and his company of actors and real lumberjacks are still engaged on Mr. Lewis' Select Picture, "Children of Banishment," from the novel of the same name by Francis William Sullivan. Mr. Lewis has established a permanent winter camp.

As soon as one hardship was overcome

Marcus A. Beeman
Manager of Robertson-Cole's London Office.

Mr. Lewis met and overcame another, and then came two of the greatest obstacles of all. One was the impossibility of constructing suitable cabins for housing the company after "location" was reached, and the other was the beginning of a four-day blizzard that made houses the only alternative to death.

First the actor sent in a hurry order to the nearest sawmill for a number of cold-proof portable cabins, had them mounted on heavy skids, loaded on flat cars and then had them hauled over the eighteen-mile logging railroad to location.

The result is, Select claims, that "Children of Banishment" will abound in many of the most beautiful, unique and instructive mountain and timber scenes that have ever been filmed.

Heavy Bookings on Williams Feature.

Vitagraph reports that the last Earle Williams release, "The Man Who Wouldn't Tell," is lining up a better booking record than any of the Williams features released in the past six months.

Cosmo Hamilton to Write for Selznick Pictures

CONTRACTS have been closed by the Selznick Pictures Corporation which will insure for Olive Thomas a series of productions which the company believes will be of unusual dramatic interest. Following the principle that no star can be greater than the stories in which she appears, great pains have been taken to obtain the best material possible.

"Upstairs and Down," the first of the Selznick Pictures productions, is well known, as it is based upon the play by Frederic and Fanny Hatton, successfully produced by Oliver Morosco. Work has already begun on this production in Los Angeles, Myron Selznick having closed an arrangement whereby the Brunton Studios, one of the best equipped plants on the Coast, will be used for the Olive Thomas pictures. Charles Giblyn, director-general of the corporation, has completed the engaging of the cast, and this picture will be ready in March. It is the intention to have one production ready for release every six weeks thereafter.

Another story which has been obtained for Miss Thomas is "The Spite Bride," a novel by Miss Louise Winter, which appeared in serial form in a popular magazine about a year ago. The company believes that this title is one of the catchiest that has been put upon the screen in a long time.

Probably the most important step taken by the company, however, to provide Miss Thomas with suitable material, is a contract which has been closed with Cosmo Hamilton, calling for not less than three stories in the next year. These will all be original scenarios. Cosmo Hamilton is one of the most successful authors who have entered the film field. His success includes not merely moving picture scenarios, but novels and plays as well.

Negotiations are under way for still other important stories and plays, which will be announced later.

Viola Dana to Specialize in Comedy.

So great has been the success of the recent Metro productions starring Viola Dana in comedy dramas that this diminutive favorite of the screen will, during the next year, specialize in that form of photoplay. An instance of the heartiness of the reception accorded Miss Dana in this sort of story is found in the welcome given "The Gold Cure," her most recent release.

The production now in work at the Metro studios at Hollywood, "Diana Ardway," is of this same type. It finds a young girl very much in love with a playwright. She is rather a tomboy type, and to win the man she wants she has to assume an absurd amount of dignity and manner. From what can be learned from the director and from reports upon fragments of the early parts of the film already developed Miss Dana has never been better than in this rollicking, human comedy of youth.

Screen Telegram Shows Haig Greeting.

There is a big welcome awaiting General Pershing when he returns to this country, but from the standpoint of enthusiasm it is doubtful whether the ovation to be tendered him can be greater than that accorded Field Marshal Sir Douglas Haig on his return to England. Britons have always had a tender spot in their hearts for their general, but for this man, whose soldiers broke the Hindenburg Line and carried their armies to complete victory, nothing was too good. The people of Dover, where he landed, certainly showed it by the manner of their greeting. An International Film Service cameraman was among those present and he secured some excellent views of the general and the enthusiastic crowds, which are appearing in the Scren Telegram No. 3, put out by the International and released by the Universal.

Business Boosting Films for World in February

KITTY GORDON, Montagu Love, Carlyle Blackwell, Evelyn Greeley and June Elvidge are stars appearing in the releases to be issued by World Pictures during the month of February. In addition, the World will release as a special on February 10, ("What Shall We Do with Him"), the attraction produced by McClure's and distributed by the World. This picture has been hooked up with a nation-wide voting contest conducted by McClure's Magazine and other mediums and gives to showmen a great opportunity of a clean-up.

First in the list of the month's releases comes Montagu Love, on February 3, in "The Rough Neck." The story and continuity were written by Harry O. Hoyt and directed by Oscar Apfel. There is but one woman in the cast—Barabar Castleton. Albert Hart, Frank Mayo and other favorites have important roles. "The Rough Neck" is a tense story of a forceful man who uses his vast power for good instead of evil.

"Mandarin's Gold" is the title of the unusual picture in which Kitty Gordon is starred and which will be released on February 10. Philip Lonergan wrote the story. The scenario was prepared by Lucien Hubbard. Oscar Apfel directed the production. Irving Cummings appears in "Mandarin's Gold" as Miss Gordon's leading man, and others prominent in the cast include Warner Oland, Tony Merlo and George MacQuarrie.

Carlyle Blackwell and Evelyn Greeley are co-starred again in one of their own brand of pictures, in "Courage for Two," which is scheduled for release on February 17. The story and continuity for this picture were both written by Hamilton Smith. Dell Henderson directed the production.

The final picture scheduled for release in February is "The Moral Deadline," starring June Elvidge. Frank Mayo appears with Miss Elvidge as her leading man. The story is by Earle Mitchell and the continuity by Lucien Hubbard. Travers Vale directed the production. Muriel Ostriche and Ned Burton are prominent in the cast. "The Moral Deadline" presents Miss Elvidge in another appealing characterization.

Hy Mayer to Illustrate Serial Stories.

Hy Mayer, internationally known for his art contributions to Life, Puck, Judge and numerous other magazines, as well as one of the best known cartoonists of the screen, has been secured to provide a series of illustrations for stories on "The Red Glove," Universal's latest serial, featuring Marie Walcamp. The Mayer illustrations, with the stories, will be published by leading daily newspapers as part of Universal's plant to co-operate with exhibitors booking the new serial.

A special Universal representative is now visiting the principal cities of the country for the purpose of securing newspaper co-operation on "The Red Glove" and to date over a score of the leading dailies have contracted for the Mayer illustrations and stories.

Seas Run High in Nazimova's Production

NAZIMOVA'S PRODUCTIONS may now announce the location of the lighthouse about which sensational sea scenes were made—those which will be seen in "Out of the Fog," in which Mme. Nazimova will appear.

Permission to stage the outdoor scenes were obtained from the navy before the armistice was signed, provided the location and name be not used. A communication has been received removing this censoring measure; and it is announced that the place is the Gloucester Eastern Point Light, famous in fiction and in the legends of fishermen who sail away to the Banks in the Gloucester schooners; and many of whom do not return.

All of the terrible power and menace and restless mystery of the sea comes out in this latest of Nazimova's pictures. The story itself is one concerning the seafaring folk of the Massachusetts coast, who like the very shores on which they perch their cottages and resist the sea grimly and fearlessly.

In commenting upon "Out of the Fog," as seen in a preliminary showing, Albert Capellani, who directed the picture remarked: "I have seen magnificent pictures of the sea in a storm, but never before have I seen anything so dramatic as those shots Eugene Gaudio was able to get for Nazimova's picture. They are more than remarkable."

"The Woman on the Index" Is Initial Frederick

GOLDWYN'S long-awaited first Pauline Frederick production is scheduled for release on February 16. It is announced as "The Woman on the Index," by Lillian Trimble Bradley and George Broadhurst. This is a new stage success of the past fall and ran for several months at the Forty-eighth Street Theatre, New York.

Now that both the title and release date of this production are made known, Goldwyn also can tell why there has been so long a period during which it has had to maintain silence as to Miss Frederick's productions. It was one of the stipulations of Miss Frederick's last contract affiliation that she must not be advertised or exploited in any new productions by title for a period of six months from the end of her contract.

"The Woman in the Index" provides Miss Frederick with the kind of story that she herself has wanted, that her producers have found for her, and that the public expects and prefers from her. She has bade good-bye under the Goldwyn name to the French and Russian drama and henceforth finds her stories containing modern American themes of tense emotional power—a fact that is certain to please the exhibitors of the country, who are heavily booked through Goldwyn for her star series productions, which are likely to be seen henceforth at intervals of about sixty days.

This initial production, besides being the work of two well-known authors, is directed by Hobert Henley, who has made no less than five Goldwyn successes since the spring of last year, productions in which Mae Marsh and Will Rogers were the stars.

Willard Mack, in addition to being the author of the scenario of "The Woman On the Index" is one of the leading players in the cast and is seen in support of his wife for the first time on the screen. In the cast are Wyndham Standing, Jere Austin and several other notables of screen and stage.

"The Woman On the Index" was produced in the East and at its completion Miss Frederick and Mr. Mack left for California. She is now making her second production at the Goldwyn studios in Los Angeles.

Alma Rubens Returns to Screen in Prize Story

THE difficulty of obtaining high-class material for production, which constitutes one of the most serious problems of the film industry, is reflected in a statement from the Robertson-Cole Company that more than 400 stories were read before "Diana of the Green Van" was selected as Alma Rubens' initial release.

The famous Selig library, which was purchased by Robertson-Cole Company, was scored from end to end before the story by Leona Dalyrimple, which won a $10,000 prize for its author, was eventually decided upon as worthy material for the pronounced screen talents of Miss Rubens. The production is now being staged by Miss Rubens' own company, the Winsome Stars Corporation, at the Brunton studios in California.

Miss Rubens is returning to the screen drama after some months of inactivity—months that were devoted by her exclusively to aiding the United States to triumph over the Hun.

"Diana of the Green Van," a story that established Miss Dalyrimple as one of the most promising authors of this day, was chosen for Miss Rubens' redebut, as it were, because of the opportunities it offered her to immediately establish herself on the same foremost plane she held before she abandoned her film work.

Word comes east from Charles Greenberg and Franklyn Hutton, who recently formed the company which Miss Rubens heads, that "Diana of the Green Van" will come up to expectations in every respect. They also report that Miss Rubens has lost none of her charm and effectiveness before the camera through her self-selected lay-off.

Many inquiries have been received by Robertson-Cole Company from film showmen relative to the date when the first Rubens picture will be released. They seem eager to offer the young favorite as their principal attraction again and will have the opportunity within a few weeks.

Cannibal Picture Makes Record in Middle West

DOWNTOWN Indianapolis was monopolized last week with Exhibitors' Mutual and Affiliated releases. Martin Johnson's "Cannibals of the South Seas" played to capacity all week at the Circle, Billie Rhodes played the Colonial in "The Girl of My Dreams" and "Lafayette, We Come" played the Alhambra.

"The Cannibals" made the same sensational run in Indianapolis that it has made in a dozen other large cities in the East and Far West. Capacity audiences filled the Circle from the opening matinee. "The Girl of My Dreams" and "Lafayette, We Come" did a big business.

Barrett McCormick, managing director of the Circle, played "Cannibals of the South Seas" with characteristic McCormick exploitation. He dressed his lobby without a touch of the circus display to which the production lends itself, but he put the circus touch into his newspaper advertising.

The Sunday Star published on the day of the opening a quarter-page for the Circle in three colors, black, green and orange, with a smash on "Cannibals of the South Seas." The illustration used in the sensational twenty-four sheet at and on the release was used to dominate the space with a brief description of the picture and a display of "Photographed at the Risk of Life."

"Cannibals of the South Seas" was going over with the same sensational success at the Liberty Theatre, Seattle, on the same dates. The Liberty advertised the release with the well-known Jenson and Von Herberg methods.

"Cannibals of the South Seas" opened January 19 at the Dayton Theatre, Dayton, Ohio, and a night letter Monday from Mark Gates, managing director of the theatre, contained the following statement: "We broke all Sunday records with Cannibals. House seats twenty-five hundred. Turned patrons away all day. First hours Monday broke all records for early morning and afternoon attendance. Film building up."

Two Big Contracts in a Week for Robertson-Cole

TWO important contracts for a series of pictures, and the booking of the rights of a six-reel special, all in one week, have called attention of exhibitors throughout the country to the alliance of Robertson-Cole Company and the Exhibitors' Mutual as a decisive factor in the screen world.

The contract for a series of eight "strong man" features starring H. B. Warner, who has had a strong popular following ever since his success on the stage as Jimmy Valentine, is a booking achievement which showmen everywhere are acknowledging as worthy of serious consideration.

In melodramatic plays of both stage and screen Mr. Warner's ability to convey the idea of the "man's man," that exponent of American manhood who is at once deft, fearless and on the square has been demonstrated. It is this sort of man who is the hero of each of the stories so far selected for the series. The best scenarioists of the country will compete to furnish the final stories for the series.

The combine followed this contract by taking over the rights of the picture, "What Every Woman Wants," which, in addition to having a sure-fire title, will feature Grace Darmond supported by a remarkably capable cast including the Russian beauty, Hedda Nova.

The third deal, completed a few days later, was the unique engagement of Carter De Haven, his wife, Flora Parker, and the two kiddies to make a two-reel comedy each month, for thirteen months.

The newlywed idea will furnish the situations for these comedies. All the lights and shadows, all the joys and woes of a newly married couple trying to adjust themselves to the new surroundings and limitations of married life, and to arrange with each other the difficult compromises, will be cleverly exploited in swift-moving, sparkling films.

The expansion of Robertson-Cole interests recalls the early days of its rapid rise into the limelight when the first group of stars selected proved their box office worth in many territories. Martin Johnson's "Cannibals of the South Seas" was one of the first contract achievements. Then the imposing group of accepted stars followed, including Henry B. Walthall, Bessie Barriscale, William Desmond, Sessue Hayakawa and Billie Rhodes. Later, Alma Rubens was added to the list.

Air Battles in Review No. 31.

The official War Review No. 31, released by Pathe on January 26, in dramatic interest that holds the spectator spellbound probably has not been equaled by any issue of the entire series. It shows a great war stunt, in which human life hangs in the balance and the feats accomplished are most spectacular from a pictorial dramatic point of view. The air battles, in themselves, are big enough in interest to be exploited alone.

"The Lion and the Mouse" Is Practically Completed

Vitagraph's super production, "The Lion and the Mouse," in which Alice Joyce is featured and which is announced for release on February 24, is practically completed. Director Tom Terriss is putting the final touches to what Vitagraph claims will be the most finished production that has ever left its studios.

Vitagraph has not made any statements regarding the cost of the production, but the value of the photoplay rights of the famous Charles Klein drama alone, the splendid cast that has been engaged on the picture and the magnificence of its settings stamp it as one of the biggest investments that Vitagraph has yet made in a single production.

"The Lion and the Mouse" is one of the special productions which Albert E. Smith, president of the Vitagraph Company, announced for the coming year and which has been produced under his personal supervision. Miss Joyce and her company have been at work for weeks on the film, and its production has run along so smoothly that the finished product should indeed testify to the close attention that all concerned with its production have been able to give to it.

The notable cast which Vitagraph has selected to support Alice Joyce includes Anders Randolf, Conrad Nagel, Templar Saxe, W. T. Carlton, Jane Jennings, Mona Kingsley, Henry Hallam, Mary Carr and W. H. Burton.

Theda Bara Leaves for Miami.

Theda Bara, accompanied by Director J. Gordon Edwards and a company and staff of forty persons, has gone to Miami, Fla., to film exterior scenes for Miss Bara's latest superproduction, which has a South Sea Island setting. For some weeks interiors have been screened at one of the William Fox Fort Lee studios in New Jersey. A force of carpenters, scene painters and property men left for Miami some time ago to construct a tropical village, a native temple and other exteriors which the story requires.

Among Independent Producers

Conducted by C. S. SEWELL

State Right Market Booming, Says W. L. Sherrill

WILLIAM L. SHERRILL, president of the Frohman Amusement Corporation, announces that the latest feature made by that organization, "Once to Everyman," will be released on the open market. Jack Sherrill and Mabel Withee are the featured players. The picture is an adaptation from a widely read novel of the same title by Larry Evans, the screen version being by Anthony Paul Kelly, and T. Hayes Hunter directed the production.

In speaking of this decision, Mr. Sherrill states he has tried every method of distribution at different times with the long list of features made by the Frohman Amusement Corporation, and is convinced that the best method for independent producers of motion pictures to market their product is to deal directly with independent buyers in the open market.

Mr. Sherrill advises that this decision is the result of long and careful study of conditions, and to test it, during the last week, in addition to trade paper advertising, he sent telegrams to prominent buyers throughout the country. The result, he claims, more than justifies his views, as the replies have not only been prompt but enthusiastic, two being received for New Jersey, one for South America, one for world rights outside of United States and Canada, two for the Southern states, one for Pittsburgh territory, one for New England, two for Chicago and one for Michigan.

As a result, within two hours after the screening of "Once to Everyman" it was sold to the Merit Film Corporation for New York at a price as big as was secured for "God's Man," a previous Frohman success, with H. B. Warner as the star. Mr. Sherrill says this week's investigation has already proved that the state rights market is in sound, healthy condition, that there is a strong demand for high-class features in the open market, and plenty of high-class, responsible buyers who are well equipped to handle such productions.

"Stolen Orders" Pleases Large Crowds in Boston

WILLIAM A. BRADY'S spectacular screen production "Stolen Orders" is said to have scored a notable success in Boston, where it is now attracting large business to a number of theatres.

Mr. Brady is in receipt of a letter from Thomas D. Soriero, manager of the Park Theatre, one of the most prominent picture houses in the hub.

"I am writing a few lines to tell you that I am playing one of your pictures this week, "Stolen Orders," and the public is certainly taking to it. We opened this week to packed houses, and if I had my way, I would break the policy of the house and run it the second week, but the stockholders object to breaking the policy.

"On the strength of record breaking business, I immediately booked it into all our theatres, that would be four runs in Boston, one week after the other.

"I took advantage of your name in my ads., and it certainly means a lot to the public, and everybody playing this picture should do the same. The audiences were much impressed with the production, and I am sure the mouth to mouth advertising did a lot to make a record breaking attendance.

"Make some more pictures like that, for the public and the exhibitor are hungry for them."

The record now being rolled up by the Brady picture in Boston, is the more notable in that "Stolen Orders" last summer enjoyed a successful engagement at the Shubert Theatre in that city.

Exclusive Names Exchanges Handling Tom Mix Reissues

ONLY a small percentage of the territory of the country now remains unsold on the series of two-reel Tom Mix reissues made by Selig and now being distributed by Exclusive Pictures, Inc. Following is a list of the state rights exchanges who have secured rights to this series of "big little features":

Interstate Films, Inc., 729 Seventh avenue, New York, for New York; All Star Feature Film Company, 191 Golden Gate avenue, San Francisco, for California, Arizona and Nevada; Masterpiece Film Attractions, Cleveland, for Ohio and Kentucky; Masterpiece Film Attractions, 1235 Vine street, Philadelphia, for eastern Pennsylvania and southern New Jersey; Quaker Film Corporation, 414 Ferry street, Pittsburgh, for western Pennsylvania and West Virginia; Southwestern Film Corporation, 1911½ Commerce street, Dallas, for Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas.

Standard Film Company, New Plaza Building, St. Louis, for eastern Missouri and southern Illinois; Strand Features, for Michigan; Savini Films, Inc., Atlanta, for South Carolina, Georgia, Tennessee, Alabama and Florida; Baltimore State Rights Company, Inc., 12 East Lexington street, for Delaware, Maryland, District of Columbia and Virginia; Frank Gersten, Inc., for northern New Jersey; Sterling Film Company, 1417 Farnam street, Omaha, for Iowa and Nebraska; Standard Film Company, Boley Building, Kansas City, for Kansas and western Missouri; Eastern Feature Film Company, 57 Church street, Boston, for New England; Midwest Distributing Company, Toy Building, Milwaukee, for Wisconsin; De Luxe Feature Film Company, 2014 Third avenue, Seattle, for Washington, Oregon, Idaho and Montana, and Eltabran Film Company, for North Carolina.

Many Thousand Extras Used in "S-L" Film

WHEN the first "S-L" production is released in the near future, it is claimed all records in the matter of the use of impressive crowd scenes will be broken. The subject dealt with is one of international appeal, and requires a background for the action interpreted by E. K. Lincoln, Grace Darling, and Clara Joel of an unusually large number of supernumeraries.

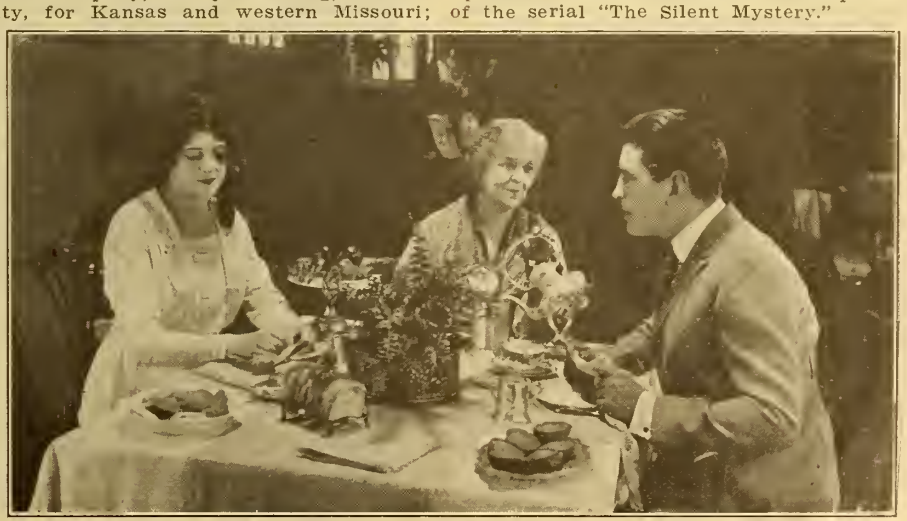
Arrangements were made by Messrs. Sawyer and Lubin for the use of all of the employes of one of the largest industrial corporations. This company has over ten thousand employes. In several scenes the entire screen is filled with thousands of extras. The impressiveness and physical bigness loaned to this production from the use of these enormous crowds is claimed to have never been equaled.

Several weeks of careful rehearsing and drilling are said to have been spent by Director Ralph Ince in imbuing the idea of the necessary action in the minds of this throng. E. K. Lincoln, Grace Darling, and Clara Joel were placed in close contact with the "extras" and several extraordinary scenes secured.

Mr. Ince seized the opportunity to pick several types of peculiar and distinctive personalty, and they have been given prominence in many of the big situations.

Trick Photography in Ford Serial.

Did you ever see a man sitting at a table presumably dreaming, and have the image of his dreams appear in his hand and talk to him? Jerome Ash, one of Francis Ford's cameramen, is using this particular trick in one of the episodes of the serial "The Silent Mystery."



Scene from "A Soul Adrift" (Perret Productions).

Maurice Tourneur to Screen "The White Heather"

MAURICE TOURNEUR is now filming the famous Drury Lane melodrama, "The White Heather," written by two of England's most prominent melodramatists, Cecil Raleigh and Henry Hamilton.

"The White Heather" will be the fourth of the Maurice Tourneur productions. Since organizing his own producing company the director has produced "Sporting Life," "Woman," and the late Jacques Futrelle's "My Lady's Garter." "Sporting Life" proved to be one of the biggest melodramatic screen offerings of the past year, while "Woman" was also one of the season's success, depicting woman's influence on history in several dramatic episodes. "My Lady's Garter," which has not yet been released, it a tense melodrama, a crook story with a series of surprises. It will shortly have its Broadway premiere. Julian Johnson, the well-known critic, has termed Mr. Tourneur "the Belasco of the screen" because of his skill in giving broad melodrama the breath of life.

"The White Heather" was first produced at the Drury Lane in London and in November, 1897, at the Academy of Music in New York, where it duplicated its British hit. It had a long New York run and later was highly successful on its tour of the country. Amelia Bingham played the heroine and Miller Kent the leading masculine role. Richard Bennett had a small role and included in the cast were Rose Coghlan, Madeline Bouton, Francis Carlyle, E. J. Bockus, Harry Burbeck, Harry Harwood, Annie Adams and Olive May.

"The White Heather" is not a racing or sporting story, the title being the name of a yacht which is lost at sea. There are a number of remarkable scenes. The big one, it is said, will be something new to the screen. The plot revolves around an unscrupulous nobleman's marriage to a young woman and his subsequent efforts to repudiate the wedding. One record alone remains of the ceremony and the story deals with the efforts to obtain this bit of paper.

Mr. Tourneur has not yet announced his cast for "The White Heather." He is, however, following out his usual idea of presenting an able, well-balanced cast without a star. The production is now in course of filming at Culver City, Cal., where Mr. Tourneur occupies a portion of the Triangle-Goldwyn studios.

Hiller & Wilk are the selling agents of this as of previous independent Tourneur productions.

Mae Gaston Buys Complete Wardrobe.

The last five episodes of the Francis Ford serial "The Silent Mystery" takes place in New York City. It was therefore necessary for Mae Gaston, Mr. Ford's leading lady, to buy a complete new wardrobe, as the clothes she has been wearing for the first episodes were such as would be worn by anyone traveling in Egypt. Some of the gowns will be used in the new serial to be made in Japan.

Convicts in Sing Sing Like "A Woman's Law"

WHILE most of the producing organizations have been adding to the entertainment of the convicts confined in Sing Sing Prison at Ossining, N. Y., by contributing picture shows, it is seldom that these unfortunates go into raptures over a production.

The Arrow Flm Corporation, the producers of "A Woman's Law" in which Florence Reed is starred, forwarded a print of that production to the Mutual Welfare League, the membership of which is composed of convicts confined in Sing Sing Prison, and received from the entertainment committee a communication, which in part reads as follows:

"You probably did not know it when you let us have the film, but Florence Reed is one of the very greatest of the favorites that we see from time to time, and nothing pleases the men here so as an announcement that a picture in which she appears is to be shown. And this one was such a good picture. The pictures that you have given us have been so excellent that the temptation when we are "stuck" for a picture to call on you because we know we would get a good one is a hard one to resist."

Sawyer a Big Factor in "S-L" Productions

THE completion of the first production bearing the brand name of "S-L Pictures," marks the re-entrance into the field of picture making of Arthur H. Sawyer. The "S" of "S-L Productions," Mr. Sawyer is one of the pioneers of the film industry. He was connected with the original Kinemacolor Company as vice-president and general manager. He has been a keen student of picture making and has taken the opportunity presented by the formation of the new organization to put several of his theories into practice. In the filming of the series of special features which will present E. K. Lincoln as the star under the direction of Ralph Ince, Mr. Sawyer acts in the capacity of supervisor of production.

A. H. Sawyer.

In the making of the initial offering, Messrs. Ince and Sawyer have worked in close conjunction, and are said to have perfected several innovations. An efficient system of studio regime outlined by Mr. Sawyer was carried out under his directions, and the loss of time and money through delay in building sets, late arrivals of players, wastage in film and other causes, has been reduced to a minimum.

The production member of the firm of "S-L Pictures" personally selected every member of the tudio organization. Before a crank was turned, he spent two weeks in conference with his different aides in order that they might put into practice his ideas as to the administration of their various duties. The results achieved have been more than gratifying, and it is the intention of Mr. Sawyer to continue these ideas during the making of the remainder of the series of features starring E. K. Lincoln.

Billy West Comedies Selling Fast.

Territory on the new series of Billy West comedies, to be obtained through the Bulls Eye Film Corporation, are selling so rapidly that only a few sections remain unsold. Milton L. The previous sales on these comedies broke all records on time.

Several Beautiful Views in Current Gaumont News

IN connection with the plan submitted to Congress by Secretary Lane of the Department of the Interior to enable every soldier to become the owner of a farm, Gaumont News No. 43 shows one soldier boy already back on the farm and the irrigation plant which is his particular pride. What is said to be the longest reinforced canal in the world, irrigating eighty acres and producing $20,000 worth of beans last season, is part of this plant.

This issue also contains several scenes of special photographic beauty; there are many pictures of the American battle fleet homeward bound, also a sunset scene of the fleet anchored in home waters, together with views in Rainier National Park, where hardy mountaineers hold an outing in ten feet of snow. There are also scenes of carrier pigeons used in modern warfare included in the aviation pictures, "Flying for Uncle Sam."

Other topics in this issue include the opening of the new clubhouse for policemen on Riverside Drive, New York; the presentation of cigarettes and fur-lined vests by San Francisco Stage Women's War Relief to French soldiers bound for Siberia; testing of a parachute in Paris by the Italian ambassador and the installation in office of Walter D. Hines, the new administrator of railroads.

Gaumont Graphic No. 43 shows two disastrous explosions in Boston, one of a munitions plant which destroyed 250,000 shells, the other of a large molasses tank, resulting in the death of ten and injury to many. There are also views of Greek troops in Athens being reviewed by King Alexander and the Duke of Connaught; the seizing of fifty-three tons of Russian currency shipped from New York; Chicago's welcome to its crack regiment, the "Blackhawks," and pictures of a Denver mother who has two boys in France and has knit seventeen sweaters, twenty-five helmets, thirty pair of wristlets and 120 pairs of socks although she is over eighty years old.

Several Thrilling Fights in First "S-L" Picture

ACCORDING to Arthur H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin, the biggest fight scenes ever filmed will thrill movie audiences when the initial "S-L" picture is presented. Ralph Ince was particularly selected to direct the series of E. K. Lincoln starring vehicles because of the reputation for the handling of "punch" scenes. The script calls for two spectacular fight scenes, in both of which Lincoln figures as the leading character.

One fight occurs between Lincoln and Bob Cummings, who appears in a prominent role. Both men are about evenly matched in strength and physical build. The action occurs in the beautifully furnished living room of Cummings' home. In order to secure a realistic effect, Mr. Ince decided to have no rehearsals of this scene, but let it go through with the admonition "to make a real rough and tumble fight of it." The actors battled for more than en minutes. Chairs and tables were overturned, a chandelier and portieres pulled down, and the furnishings of the room completely wrecked. Lincoln is picked up by Cummings and thrown across the table, narrowly escaping cuts from a broken bowl. He picks himself up and after several minutes of terrific fighting, lands a knockout blow on Cummings' jaw.

It is said that the result achieved will send a thrill through movie audiences. Lincoln suffered severe bruises and narrowly escaped losing two teeth. Ince believes that he has surpassed anything of this nature heretofore done on the screen, and this is but one of the spectacular episodes which abound throughout the production.

Rapf Film Breaks Records At Loew's New York Houses

ELAINE HAMMERSTEIN who has been making personal appearances in connection with Harry Rapf's "Wanted for Murder" continues to meet with the same success with which she has been accorded in other houses on the Loew circuit. Recently, at Loew's Forty-second street Theatre, there was such a jam just before the second evening performance, that it looked as if it would be necessary to call out the police reserves.

So insistent was the crowd that filled the lobby and overflowed into the sidewalk that the curtains leading to the foyer were torn from their hangings, and the doors smashed in. The house manager advises that in all of his experience he never had such a mob to deal with, and that fortunately, when the crowd was at its height the picture was finished and this gave him a chance to partly empty the house.

The Independent Sales Corporation, handling this production, advises that it has broken all records for attendance at all of the Loew theatres in New York City and claims this proves their assertion that the public desires unusual thrilling romances with war as the background.

Major Thaw's Double in Carlton Production

OWING to the impression gained in Boston during the extended run of "A Romance of the Air" that Major William Thaw himself appears with Lieut. Bert Hall and Miss Edith Day in Carle E. Carlton's aerial production, Mr. Carlton makes the statement that Major Thaw himself is not even in one scene, but that Herbert Standing is the man who was mistaken for Major Thaw.

"In casting a picture some might think the director has an easy time," said Mr. Carlton, "to pick out a type to fit the character.

"That may be true where only types are needed, but when national characters are to be duplicated, it is a different matter, and the director is put to the test of searching far and wide for actors who might fill the bill."

When this production was being cast, it was easy to supply the leading role, for Lieutenant Bert Hall was convinced that the picture would prove of greater interest if he enacted the hero role in his own story, but the story called for the other survivor of the original Lafayette Escadrille, Major William Thaw.

After an exhaustive search by the director, Lieutenant Hall walked into the studio with Herbert Standing.

"Here he is. I met this chap on Broadway and almost overwhelmed him with greetings before he could convince me he was not Billy Thaw. They are so much alike that I would be tempted to wager they could not be told apart. You know, as Thaw has been my closest friend for several years, Mr. Standing's resemblance must indeed be remarkable to have even deceived me."

The director gave one grateful glance toward Herbert Standing and signed him for the role of Major Thaw in "The Romance of the Air," which is being booked by the Independent Sales Corporation and distributed by the Film Clearing House, Inc.

Latest Moss Production Based on Popular Song

WORK on "Break the News to Mother" has finally got under way, and this seven-reeler, which serves to bring B. S. Moss back to the producing field, is being filmed at the Talmadge Studios, on East 48th street. Julius Steger is directing, and Mr. Moss lays stress on the fact that "Break the News to Mother" is not a war play, but a clean story of every day life, based on a theme of gripping intensity and novelty of situation. Garfield Thompson, a short story writer, adapted the play from the song of the same title which was based on incidents around the Spanish-American war. It is perhaps one of the most popular songs ever written on modern lines.

Pearl Shepard will be featured in this picture, following her association with a number of screen successes. The supporting cast includes Gertrude Berkley, William N. Bailey, Marion Dirk, Forrest Robinson, Raymond Bloomer, Joseph Smiley, and Franklyn Hanna.

Sol Lesser Enthusiastic Over Billy West Films

AS announced in our last issue, Sol L. Lesser, president of All Star Feature Distributors, has secured rights of the new series of Billy West comedies, and the Bull's Eye Film Corporation announces that in commenting on this purchase Mr. Lesser, before leaving New York, said:

"I am in the market for the very best obtainable in all lines of photoplay offerings, and in adding the new Billy West comedies to my list of bookings am convinced I am doing my patrons and myself a big favor. I feel assured Billy West is at his best now, and has never done anything to compare with this new series.

"There are comedies in profusion. The difficult thing is to dig out the best. I overstayed my original schedule of this trip for several reasons, one being that I desired to thoroughly investigate the market for comedies. I know conditions in my territory from careful analysis and first-hand investigation, and have found it is inadvisable to offer my patrons anything but the best in comedies."

Milton L. Cohen, president of the Bull's Eye Film Corporation, is elated over the appearance of Sol Lesser in the field of Billy West Comedy distributors.

Latest wires from the Hollywood Studios bring the information that the second of the comedies, "Ship, Ahoy!" has been completed, and Billy West is now at work on his third picture under Director Charles Parrott. Nat H. Spitzer is the studio manager.

Elks Secure Entire House for Showing of Rapf Film

WHILE it is not an infrequent occurrence for theatres playing stage productions to sell out the entire house to some lodge or society for a special performance, seldom is this done with a moving picture. However, at the Newark Theatre, Newark, N. J., Harry Rapf's "Wanted for Murder," starring Elaine Hammerstein, will be the attraction for the week of February 2, and the Newark lodge of Elks has bought the entire 2,500 seats for Thursday night as a tribute to Miss Hammerstein.

The house management, alive to the advertising possibilities of this production, which is distributed by the Film Clearing House, has started a tremendous campaign. Two weeks before the engagement the city and surrounding country has been "sniped" with the 9x28's descriptive half-sheets, one-sheets and window cards, none of which give an inkling of what "Wanted for Murder" is, and a record-breaking business is anticipated.

Capt. Harry A. Bailey, special representative of the Independent Sales Corporation, who is giving particular attention to "Wanted for Murder," is co-operating with the Newark Theatre is putting over the advertising campaign.

Excellent Cast Chosen for "Thirteenth Chair"

FOLLOWING the announcement made recently by Acme Pictures Corporation concerning the picturization of Bayard Veiller's play, "The Thirteenth Chair," in which Yvonne Delva is to be the featured player, and which will be adapted and directed by Leonce Perret, comes the further announcement that in order to insure international interest and success the producers are determined to exert every energy and spare no expense.

An all-star cast has been chosen by Mr. Perret to interpret the difficult roles, which are said to be intensely dramatic and unusually difficult to portray. Supporting Miss Delva are Creighton Hale, Marie Shotwell, Marc McDermott, Christine Mayo, Walter Law, Bradley Barker, Suzanne Caubet, Alice Calhoun, Yolande Duquette and others.

The work on the picture, which has already been started, is progressing rapidly and smoothly. Every phase of the production is being given the utmost attention. The sets, it is said, will be a revelation to the trade, as well as to the public, when the picture is finished. Mr. Perret has introduced a new medium of photography, the secret of which is being carefully guarded, and which was necessary in order to place upon the screen the same weirdness and thrilling effect of the play. The star and her supporting company of capable artists are keyed to a high pitch, and are contributing their best efforts.

Los Angeles Likes "Ship Ahoy!"

Reports from Los Angeles indicate that Billy West's second contribution to his new series of comedies for Bulls Eye Film Corporation, "Ship Ahoy!" was a hit when shown last week at one of the largest theatres in Los Angeles, and many exhibitors who saw the picture are said to have immediately arranged for bookings on this production.

Ford Uses Wild Animals in Serial.

With the filming of the last scenes in which Francis Ford uses wild animals in his present serial "The Silent Mystery" a great burden has been lifted from his shoulders. Many people do not realize the time, expense, or trouble necessitated in accomplishing the result, as seen in the production. In a great many instances, it has taken weeks to get a wild animal to do just one particular thing.

Influenza Hits Ford Studio.

The wheels of the Francis Ford Studio are again in operation. For nearly six weeks the studio and the serial "The Silent Mystery" have been at a standstill, on account of the influenza epidemic. Francis Ford, Elsie Van Name, Phil Ford, Mr. Harry Ellis Dean, business manager of the company, and Lionel Bradshaw, were all stricken. They have fully recovered with the exception of Mr. Bradshaw, who succumbed to the desease about a week ago.

Large Press Sheet Issued for "Demon Shadow" Serial

THE Arrow Film Corporation has concentrated on the press bulletin distributed in connection with their reissued serial, "The Demon's Shadow." This production, as previously announced, is a reissue of "The Twenty Million Dollar Mystery," riginally distributed in twenty episodes of two reels each, and as revised and re-edited is being distributed on the state rights basis in ten episodes of two reels each, and is said to retain all of the sensational and dramatic action that occurred in the original serial.

The press bulletin is of unusually large dimension, measuring 35x22 inches, being slightly larger than newspaper size, and is printed in red and black. In addition to articles on sales talks, newspaper write-ups, sample "ads," copies of cuts and general matter that goes into a press book, there is also a resume of the "punches" that appear in each episode.

Twenty-five thousand copies have been ordered, with the idea of mailing one to every exhibitor in the United States as well as a copy to every newspaper in the country. The first episode of "The Demon's Shadow" is scheduled for release February 10.

Billy West Working on Third Comedy.

The third of the new series of comedies that Billy West is now making for Bulls Eye Film Corporation is slated for release on February 15. Work is progressing on this feature, and those who are familiar with the story say it will measure up to every standard Billy West has set for himself in this new series.

"THE FIGHTING ROOSEVELTS."

Life of Colonel Theodore Roosevelt Told on Screen. McClure Pictures, Inc., Production.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

A LIFE of former President Roosevelt, prepared by Charles Hanson Towne and Porter Emerson Browne and directed by William Nigh, has been produced by McClure Pictures. Inc., and is now on the First National Exhibitors' list of Attractions under the title of "The Fighting Roosevelts." It commences when this illustrious American was about five years of age and follows his career as a youth, through young manhood, middle age and down to the present. His experience at Albany as a member of the State Legislature, his trip West in search of health, his connection with the New York Police Department, his activities as Assistant Secretary of the Navy, as an officer in the Spanish War, as Vice-President and as President of the United States, and his efforts for his country after the Great War started are closely followed and told with sympathetic understanding of the man whose honesty and love of the strenuous life have endeared him to so many of his fellow-countrymen.

The opening episode, showing little Teddy in some childish scrape defending himself with determination and no small amount of skill from an impending spanking, is a truthful and amusing indication of character. His relations with his old friends, the Maine guide and the cowboys on the ranch in the West are full of kindly feeling and hearty humor, and the man's eagerness to join the Rough Riders is made clear. So it is, all through the picture. The deeds of this virile and high-minded American are set forth without exaggeration and with as many human touches as possible.

Charles Hanson Towne and Porter Emerson Browne have selected their material for the scenario with discretion and linked it together by keeping the Maine guide and his family as a sort of comedy relief. The love story and domestic affairs of Colonel Roosevelt are not touched upon. Just at the finish reference is made to his four sons and the part they took in helping to crush the Huns.

Considering the production solely on its technical side, "The Fighting Roosevelts," while not a remarkable achievement, is generally well produced. The battle scenes of the Spanish War and the charge up San Juan Hill could hardly be made very impressive to the people who have been watching events on the battlefields of France for the last four years. A few feet of film showing the Colonel himself addressing a crowd and taken from a news reel have been utilized. All the other scenes are the work of Director William Nigh and the cast under him. The acting is of good quality, the doubles for Colonel Roosevelt, William McKinley and other famous men being acceptable counterfeit presentments. The best played part in the picture is that of the Maine guide.

"The Fighting Roosevelts" never aims at sensationalism, but is an inspiring and truthful pictorial history of the life of a great American.

Publicity Points.

One of the acts of Theodore Roosevelt as President was to appreciate the ability of an army officer by the name of Pershing and advance him from the rank of captain to that of brigadier general and in this way prepare him for the high command he has filled with such signal credit in the Great War.

The same clear judgment of men led Theodore Roosevelt to select a young naval lieutenant for similar rapid promotion, and Admiral Sims, by reason of his quick ascent to high rank, was also the better prepared to display his fitness as leader of our overseas fleet.

"The Fighting Roosevelts" refer to Theodore Roosevelt and his four sons. The ex-President of the United States, who has just died and whose four boys were on the firing line—one of them never to return—is shown as he really lived, his life devoted to his country and the good of his fellowman.

"RESTLESS SOULS"

Triangle Picture Featuring Alma Rubens Is Well Acted but Overshoots Its Mark.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

AS A SOCIAL REFORMER Cosmo Hamilton lacks judgment. The story he has provided for "Restless Souls," a six-part picture produced by Triangle and directed by William C. Dowlan, is so one-sided and so far overshoots its mark that it fails to carry any conviction to the spectator who has been given the ordinary amount of common sense. To the man or woman who believes—or wants to believe—that all persons whose incomes are over one hundred thousand a year are devoid of morals and that virtue walks the earth clad only in calico or well-patched overalls "Restless Souls" will prove vastly entertaining. It is well acted by a cast headed by Alma Rubens; the general production is of good quality and it contains all the stock situations of intrigue and unfaithfulness that are used by writers of this school to add spice to their stories.

Marion Gregory and Judith Wingate were raised in the same village, and when they chose their partners for life were married by the same minister. Marion married for love, Judith for wealth and position. The opening scene finds the two women dissatisfied with their lots. Marion's husband is a penniless inventor and cannot buy his wife the pretty frocks she wants. Judith and her husband are frankly bored by each other and both have sought to solace themselves by illegitimate love affairs.

Oliver Sloan is Judith's lover, a man who moves in her own social orbit. Wingate finds his charmer outside the sacred circle of the golden calf. Of all the men and women who surround the pair during the action of the story not one exhibits any decent instincts except the Rev. Dr. Robert Calvert, and he is so dense that he fails to detect the collection of moral lepers who are flirting and intriguing on all sides of him.

Into this atmosphere Marion is invited by Judith for the purpose of compromising her with Wingate and helping her hostess to secure a divorce from her husband. Wingate swallows the bait as soon as Marion arrives and starts to make love to her. Matters are further complicated when Oliver Sloan follows his host's example. Marion's husband is made to believe she is unfaithful, and the success of his invention is poor consolation until the minister proves her innocence. Marion goes back to the man she married for love, and the social lepers presumably continue fracturing the laws of decency and ordinary refinement. Katherine Adams as Judith, Jack Conway as Hugh Gregory, Harvey Clarke as Chester Wingate, J. motion, and Admiral Sims, by reason of Burr as Oliver Sloan comprise the supporting company. Steve Norton was the photographer.

Publicity Points.

In "Restless Souls" society is shown conducting itself at a private swimming pool with a freedom of actions and dress that puts Coney Island on a hot Sunday to the blush. The estate used for the incident is evidently one of the finest in California.

Alma Rubens, as the wife of a poor inventor, is able to gratify her desire to see herself in expensive gowns when her old school friend invites her to her fine home. The star's dark beauty is enhanced by the beautiful evening costumes she wears. Her bathing suit will also attract attention for its novelty and striking effect.

"THE ENCHANTED BARN"

Bessie Love Is Winsome in Vitagraph Production of Light but Pleasing Little Story.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

SHIRLEY HOLLISTER, the heroine of "The Enchanted Barn," a five-reel picture produced by Vitagraph and founded on a story by Grace H. L. Lutz, is a practical young woman. When she makes up her mind that her mother and little brothers must have the country air she doesn't sit down and wish for anything to happen but figures out how much rent she can afford to pay and then starts off to find a place in which to live. Shirley is private secretary and the only support of her mother and brothers. She discovers that cottages in the suburbs are too expensive and tramps until she comes upon a deserted stone barn right out in the country.

Fortunately for Shirley the barn is owned by Walter Graham, a friend of her employer, and Graham's son, Sidney, is attracted by the girl when she comes to ask about renting the property. Sidney makes the rent $10 a month; Shirley and her brothers put the barn in order; Mrs. Hollister is delighted with her new home; Sidney is a frequent visitor, and matters move along just as a properly constructed simple little romance should. Then comes the grand finish. Shirley overhears some plotters against her employer and Mr. Graham. She makes notes of the conversation; the plotters learn of this and try to force her to give up the notes. The girl refuses, is kidnapped and rescued by young Graham. Happy ending.

The story is not startlingly original and hasn't much go to it, but Bessie Love plays Shirley for all the part is worth. and Bessie's best is a pretty good grade of acting. She makes Shirley so likable everyone is bound to sympathize with her and want to see her win out. David Smith directed the picture reasonably well, and the supporting cast measures up to a fair standard. J. Frank Glendon as Sidney Graham, Joe Singleton as John Barnard, William T. Horne as Walter Graham and Ella Wolbert as Mrs. Hollister have the leading roles. The picture's release date is January 27.

Publicity Points.

Bessie Love plays a bright, up-to-date stenographer in this picture, who is willing to work her fingers off for her mother and little brothers. She also shows what a very attractive young person she is in her inexpensive but tasteful frocks.

This picture will appeal to people who like a clear-headed, common-sense heroine who is too busy with the realities of life to do anything foolish—except to fall in love. "Come live with me and be my love!" the old song goes, and the old song just suits Bessie.

"CHEATING CHEATERS"

Clara Kimball Young and a Strong Cast Make This Select Picture Excellent Entertainment.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

WHEN Max Marcin wrote the play "Cheating Cheaters" his one object was to keep an audience guessing. He knew that his story was utterly impossible, but he also knew that no one would care a rap about that so long as the interest was kept on the boil. All his characters were either crooks or detectives and he took good care that the criminals had either a sense of humor or were unconsciously amusing. Working along such unrestricted lines he succeeded in turning out a crook play that had more surprises and more laughs in its three acts than could be found in a dozen of the ordinary variety of thief dramas.

The play has been utilized by Clara Kimball Young for one of her Select pictures. Kathryn Stuart made the scenario and Allan Dwan was the director. The result of their efforts adds an entertaining photoplay to the Select list. The first feature to strike the spectator is the strength of the cast. Aside from the star, who plays Ruth Brockton, the list of names and the characters they impersonate reads this way:

Anna Q. Nilsson as Grace Palmer, Jack Holt as Tom Palmer, Frederick Burton as George Brockton, Frank Campeau as Steve Wilson, Nicholas Dunaew as Antonio Verdi, Mayme Kelso as Mrs. Brockton, Tully Marshall as Ira Lazarre, Edwin Stevens as Mr. Palmer, Jess Singleton as Phil, Eleanor Hancock as Mrs. Palmer and W. A. Carroll as Ruth's chauffeur. The exhibition of team work by these experienced and skillfully selected actors is unusually fine and every point is made to score heavily. The production throughout is in keeping with its demand.

Starting off with a scene in the luxurious home of the Palmers, it is shown that a gang of crooks have established themselves next door in order to rob their neighbors of their valuable jewels. Ruth Brockton, a beautiful member of the gang, has captivated the heart of young Tom Palmer, and the two households become quite friendly. Before the Brocktons can rob the Palmers they learn that their neighbors are crooks also, who intended to work the same game on them. Just as the two gangs agree to join forces the police break in and put them all under arrest.

It then turns out that Ruth is a celebrated detective who has become one of the Brocktons in order to trap them. Her romance with young Palmer is real, however, and she reforms him with the understanding that he is to receive her hand and heart as his reward. This sop to sentiment does not hurt anybody and it fits in with the general nature of the play. Photography by Arthur Edison.

Publicity Points.

"Cheating Cheaters" is a combination of surprises and laughs, and the Select production guarantees the delivery of every thrill and all the fun. Nothing more humorous than the toughest crook in the gang trying to impersonate a dignified and properly trained butler when their polished neighbors pay the Brockton gang a visit has ever been thrown on the screen.

The identity of a famous detective, known as Ferris, is one of the points of the story that helps to sustain the interest. The surprise finish it gives to the story is cleverly handled.

"ROMANCE AND RINGS."

Paramount-Drew Comedy Has the Same High Grade Drew Fun as of Old.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

MR. AND MRS. SIDNEY DREW have celebrated their return to the screen by the production of a high grade comedy, "Romance and Rings," that is full of human nature and the humor that comes when the bridegroom loses the wedding ring just as the minister is ready to tie the knot. As the nervous victim of the conspiracy to deprive him of his liberty, concocted by the bride and the laws of the state, Sidney Drew takes as naturally to the part as a prohibitionist to water. Mrs. Sidney Drew, as the other half of the marriage contract, looks sufficiently attractive to make most any man "screw his courage to the sticking point" and go through with the performance. She also delivers all the laughs that had been allotted her by the author and her own stage directions.

"Romance and Rings" is a real bit of comedy building. Its complications are the logical result of the theme and, having deceived his wife during the wedding ceremony, the seeds of comic woe the young husband sows for himself and the friend who loans him his wife's wedding ring raise a crop of hearty laughs for the spectator.

The production is complete in every detail. It is difficult to believe that it was made while the Drews were filling dates with their stage success, "Keep Her Smiling."

"HIS PARISIAN WIFE."

Elsie Ferguson in Artcraft Picture has Well-Fitting Role and Wears Beautiful Gowns.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

IF variety is the spice of life, contrast is its paprika. In "His Parisian Wife," a five-part Artcraft picture, story by Eva Unsell and directed by Emil Chautard, a beautiful French girl with education and enough brains to be reporter on a Paris newspaper, is brought in contrast with a New England family of the most Puritanical sort and it is like rubbing steel against flint—the sparks at once begin to fly. The conflict is mental, of course, but while it lasts one lone woman is forced to fight a battle for her future happiness against her husband and his father and mother. Elsie Ferguson is the wife from Paris, and the part allows her to do considerable effective emotional acting and to wear a wide assortment of gorgeous gowns. One creation, in particular, is the cause of the climax to the trouble.

A Boston lawyer meets Fauvette, the girl reporter, in Paris. Before she quite realizes what has taken place she finds herself Mrs. Martin Wesley and on her way to the United States with her husband. Martin is a good enough chap, but has failed to consider his parent's narrow view of everything outside of their exclusive circle. They do not approve of their imported daughter-in-law, and make their son believe he has leaped before he looked.

His treatment of his wife is anything but to his credit; and she brings matters to a crisis by wearing a dinner gown cut several inches below the Boston modesty line. This leads to a quarrel. Tony Rye, a chum of Martin's, acts the part of the sympathetic friend. The couple separate. Martin takes to drink, and his wife to writing novels. There is talk of a divorce, but Martin comes to his senses, gets on the water wagon, stops a loan shark from persecuting Fauvette, concludes not to give her up to Tony, and the pair make a fresh start on the sea of matrimony.

The story is told in narrative form but is always easy to follow, and is a good example of its class. If it is never thrilling, it also never lacks an air of good breeding. The production is up to the Artcraft standard. Excellent support is given by David Powell as Martin Wesley, Courtenay Foote as Tony Rye, Frank Losee as Thompson Wesley and Cora Williams as Mrs. Wesley.

Publicity Points.

In view of the number of American soldiers who are returning from "over there" with French wives, the story of "His Parisian Wife" is very timely. Fauvette, the heroine, played by Elsie Ferguson, is such a loyal little woman that in spite of the difference from her old mode of living she is able to straighten out her matrimonial tangle and find happiness under the Stars and Stripes.

As usual Elsie Ferguson's gowns are striking creations and show their French origin in every line. The one she puts on after she has promised her husband to wear nothing but black could only be worn by a woman of graceful but slender type.

"THE SERPENT"

Five-Reel Fox Reissue Features Theda Bara In Former Vampire Success.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THIS five-reel subject, "The Serpent," is one of the offerings by which Theda Bara gained her enormous vogue in vampire roles. It is a good example of the type, carrying a story of the highly emotional sort, and perhaps stronger than the average of its kind. We must allow for a certain improvement in photographic effects in dealing with all reissues, but this number holds up well in that respect. It is also well constructed, and if it contains anything to recall the fact that it was a product of other days it is to be found in the story itself, which is not quite so popular as it was formerly.

Theda Bara appears in this as a Russian girl named Vania, who at the opening of the tale is living in happiness but great poverty with her parents and is loved by a country swain. A duke on a hunting trip visits her home and catches sight of her. He is at once attracted by her dark beauty and desires her. She escapes him temporarily, but the duke leaves his cigarette case behind and her father sends Vania to his home to restore it.

The story proceeds to bring out the fact that Vania is made a prisoner in the home of the duke and kept there for some time. She vows to obtain revenge upon him, and in later years gains this by marrying the duke's son. In the meantime she has had other affairs with men in various cities and has herself risen to fame as an actress in Paris. A pleasing feature of the story is the fact that the tragic part of it turns out to be a dream and that the simple peasant girl awakes to find her country lover still living.

Charles Craig and R. A. Walsh are in the assisting cast.

Publicity Points.

The Russian atmosphere is quite well suggested in the opening and closing portions of the story. Snow scenes and correct costuming aid in this, and there is a strong reality about the peasant life depicted.

The emotional situations in this are rendered in a convincing manner.

"LIFE'S A FUNNY PROPOSITION"

William Desmond in Five-Part Comedy for Exhibitors-Mutual Gives Acceptable Performance.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

A FIVE-PART Hampton production under the control of the Robertson-Cole Company, and which is being released through the Exhibitors-Mutual, is entitled "Life's a Funny Proposition." William Desmond is the featured member of the cast, and Louise Lovely plays the role of the pretty sweetheart of the hero.

A baby, purported by the author, William Parker, to be a Belgian baby and a leftover of a group whose wants a certain fund for the care of Belgian babies could scarcely cover adequately, is one of the cast's most appealing members. The production is a comedy containing no particularly legitimate lines of plot, but thoroughly wholesome and entertaining.

The story covers a complication of incidents in which a young man in trying to cover his extravagances gets money from his rich uncle under false pretenses. One day a friend plays a practical joke on him by leaving a Belgian baby on his doorstep. On his way back home in his auto he is injured and is taken to a hospital where his injuries detain him long enough to make thlngs interesting for the victim of the joke.

The uncle comes to town, bringing with him a fat country niece, to whom he intends to marry his nephew. Efforts to conceal the baby's cries cause considerable consternation. Incidents here happen rather thick and fast, and the outcome of it all is that the niece turns out to be an accomplice in a conspiracy to steal some valuable bonds belonging to the uncle, and the nephew rescues the bonds from the thieves. He is rewarded by being made the owner of the bonds with an open road fo. his love affair.

Publicity Polnts.

The wholesome quality of the comedy contains an appeal for the average audience.

The good-natured planning of his nephew's love affairs by the uncle and the near discovery of the nephew's perfidy in obtaining money under false pretenses form amusing moments of the play.

The average person will enjoy the hiding of the baby in the cupboard, and also upon opening the cupboard the mistaking of the innocent sleep of the little one for the mask of death.

Fate playing at cross purposes provides various incidents of comic interest which the ordinary spectator can appreciate.

"NEVER TOO OLD."

Paramount-Mack Sennett Comedy Is Kept on the Hop by Charles Murray, Phyllis Haver and Marie Prevost.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

BEING a Mack Sennett comedy, the title, "Never Too Old," is explained by adding the words, "To Make Love." Charlie Murray, as the proprietor of a delicatessen who finds it impossible to resist the attractions of a pretty little manicurist next door and equally impossible to carry on his flirtation without getting lnto trouble with his wife, sets a pace that speeds up the entire performance. Phyllis Haver as the wife of Murray's partner does a number of hair-lifting stunts when she turns detective and is bounced over roofs and off roofs while nalled up in a packing box.

Then there is a big hulk of an able seaman who insists on having his nails manicured and making love to the operator at the same time, but is interrupted by the young lady's best young man. And, of course, the flock of Annette Kellermans of the company plunge into the plot. Richard Jones directed the comedy.

"OH, JOHNNY!"

Goldwyn Releases Five-Reel Western Product of the Betzwood Film Company.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THERE are a number of entertaining points about this five-reel subject entitled "Oh, Johnny!" The story, which was written by Wilson Bayley and directed by Ira M. Lowry, features Louis Bennlson as the hero, Johnny Burke. Virginia Lee appears as the heroine, Adele Butler, and the supporting cast includes Alphonse Ethier, Edward Roseman, John Daly Murphy, Frank Goldsmith, Anita Cortez and Louise Brownell.

The opening scenes are laid in a Western mining camp, where the hero has located a rich property, known as the Lost Hope Mine. An Eastern investor is trylng to negotiate for it, but the hero will not deal with him. The mine is held in partnership with the heroine, daughter of an old prospector, who died, leaving the hero to look out for the girl.

In the course of the narrative the heroine goes to a city where designing relatives have invited her, having learned of her wealth. The hero follows after a while, arriving in time to find the glrl about to be cheated out of her stock. He takes the measures necessary to protect her rights and his own, and in the end marries her.

The production has some excellent comedy touches and some beautiful settings. Its chief weakness is a certain lack of dramatic suspense, or perhaps what might be termed an awkwardness of continulty at times. At the same time it has certain moments of surprise and ingenuity, as well as humor, which should give the production considerable appeal for certain audiences.

Publlcity Points.

There are some charming single photographic shots running through the society part of this story. The bathing pool, the old water wheel and the garden effects generally are attractive features.

The hero's attempts to acquire manners from a book of etiquette, and his painful efforts later to put them into practice, make a good comic feature. A number of humorous features in this are worthy of special mention.

"DAY DREAMS"

Goldwyn Production of Cosmo Hamilton Story Featuring Madge Kennedy Fairly Pleasing.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THE title of this five-part Goldwyn picture, "Day Dreams," indicates exactly the nature of the story. Another of Cosmo Hamilton's remarkably childlike young women is the heroine. Her name is Primrose, and she is played by Madge Kennedy. Romance and reality run neck and neck through the plot, but the beautiful thoughts that occupy the mind of Primrose are handled in too prosaic a manner by the director to get the best effect. The contrast between the things she longs for and the things she gets robs the story of much of its poetic charm.

It is only fair to admit that much of the trouble should be laid at the door of the author. It would have taken a Barrie to do the subject justice. Considerable care has been spent on the production, and the scenes on the goose and duck farm are novel and attractive. As for Madge Kennedy, she contrives to make Primrose real and wholesome, in spite of the young lady's extreme simplicity of mind in this day of rural delivery and trolley cars for the tillers of the land. Accepted at its own valuation, "Day Dreams" will mildly entertain the not overcritical spectator.

Primrose is a miss of eighteen who lives with her grandparents and helps them to look after large flocks of geese and ducks. She has read the good old fairy tales and is always dreaming of a handsome white knight who is to come sailing over the sea in a shining barge and make her his wife. So firmly does she believe this she says so right out to George Graham, a financially solid concrete dealer who comes to woo her in place of the misty white knight. Finding that Primrose is determined to be faithful to her dream-lover, Graham arranges with Dan O'Hara, an artist, to impersonate the shadowy gentleman. Dan's brother is in Graham's power, and he threatens to send him to prison unless the artist consents to his demand.

The plot turns out just as Graham had hoped—expect in one particular: he does not get Primrose. Dan arrives in a yacht and Primrose takes him for her white knight. She readily consents to go to his enchanted castle, which is the home of Graham. The grandparents go along too. The comedy is kept up until Graham thinks it time to end it and show Primrose that a concrete reality is better than an unsubstantial dream. But Primrose sticks to Dan.

John Bowers as Dan O'Hara, Jere Austin as George Graham, Alec B. Francis as Grandfather Burn and Grace Henderson as Grandmother Burn are valuable members of the cast. And the same applies to Rumplestilzen, a remarkably intelligent gander and the leader of the flock.

Publicity Points.

There is a scene in "Day Dreams" that will tickle the children and amuse their elders also. When Rumplestilzen, the gander, finds the poodle eating out of hls dish he walks straight into the house, seizes Primrose by the sleeve and makes her come out into the yard and drive the dog away. He also refuses to be left behind when Primrose sails off with her lover, and swims after the boat until he is seen and taken on board.

The novelty of the goose and duck farm should be enlarged upon. Several of the scenes will delight the youngsters.

"CUPID'S DAY OFF."

Sennett-Paramount Comedy Has Ben Turpin and Charles Lynn as the Mirth Mixers.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

IT may be "Cupid's Day Off" as far as this Sennett-Paramount comedy is concerned, but it is Ben Turpin and Charles Lynn's day on. Also Alice Lake, in a neat but not elaborate suit of fleshings, gets in on the excitement. Heretofore running a shoe store has been considered a quiet, respectable business, but Ben and his partner make the interior of their emporium of fashionable footwear look like the finish to a feature number at a smart cabaret.

They also put new life and the joy of winning into a gambling joint, until they are discovered cheating. This so shocks the proprietor and his regular customers that they lose their faith in human nature and send for the police. And so the merry game is kept up! There have been funnier comedies bearing the Sennett trade mark, but this is a good average buy, and exhibitors know what that means.

"THE ROUGH NECK"

Five-Reel World Picture Presents Pleasant Cast in Story of Love and Politics.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

A UNIQUE situation and a strong story interest are features of this five-reel World picture, "The Rough Neck." It was written by Harry O. Hoyt and directed by Oscar Apfel, and the pleasing cast is headed by Montagu Love, Barbara Castleton and Frank Mayo. The production is one of no great dramatic quality, but its situations are so unusual that they picque the interest and hold it firmly to a satisfying finish. It might be called a tale of well-rounded interest, with elements of universal appeal.

Montagu Love has a sort of cave-man role, though in this number he might be termed a "cabin" man, for it is to a pretty shack in the woods that he bears his captive bride and eventually wins her love. The scenic effects suggest Northern New York, perhaps along Lake George or Lake Champlain, and are very enticing.

At the beginning of the story, the hero, John Masters, is in charge of a lumber camp in the pine woods, where the heroine, Frances Armitage, comes with her father and a guest, Ellery Dale. The latter is in love with Frances, but Masters becomes interested in her. The brutal ways of Masters repel the girl, however, and she clings to Dale. The scene changes to the city, where Masters has been called by his father, the political boss. The father dies, and John Masters becomes boss. In the course of the story he forces Frances to marry him by holding a threat over both her father and Dale. Frances is his wife in name only until later events teach her to love him. The fight in the cabin at the close is good.

Others in the cast are Robert Broderick, George De Carleton, Albert Hart, James Davis, Robert Milash and H. E. Hebert.

Publicity Points.

The scenic effects are splendidly photographed and are unusually pleasing. The setting of the mountain cabin is attractive.

The fight scene toward the close is exceptionally well-staged, and will, no doubt, be received with enthusiasm. It represents perhaps the highest dramatic incident in the story, though the development is such that it swings the interest along in good style.

"HERE COMES THE BRIDE."

Amusing Paramount Comedy With John Barrymore in Role That Seems Made For Him.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

THOUGH plainly not a vehicle, "Here Comes the Bride" is so nicely suited to the individuality of the leading actor that it displays his talents to unusual advantage. This is helped by the fact that the writer of the scenario, Charles Whittaker, is gradually getting away from his narrative style of subtitle, announcing the obvious, helping the audience comprehend what the actor makes perfectly clear.

There are lapses in style, but the construction is good enough to be lost sight of, just as it should be, just as one is not conscious of a healthy stomach well-fed, except in an agreeable glow of satisfaction. There are some lost opportunities. Barrymore plays the part of a poor young man in love with the daughter of a rich man. He finds himself in desperate straits and consents to marry a veiled woman, from whom it is agreed he is to be divorced within a year, because he is to receive a large sum from schemers who can get hold of a vast property by utilizing his name. The marriage is performed and a most interesting complication follows.

By a series of logical circumstances the poor young man just married comes to sleep in a splendid mansion of some friends who have just left town. The young girl he loves has run away from home, leaving a note behind that she expects to elope with the man she loves, and by an equally logical series of circumstances she sleeps in the same house in an adjoining room, it would seem, but nothing is made of this.

The young people meet at breakfast, she in a robe de chambre, he in pajamas and dressing gown, and a little is made of this situation, but far from enough—it is a situation of limited possibilities on the stage but of tremendous funmaking for the screen. This lost opportunity is, however, compensated for by the delightful impersonation of Mr. Barrymore, and by the harmonious support he receives. The story is based on a comedy given about a year ago at the George Cohan Theatre. It will please especially those who appreciate and enjoy such refined comedy as that of John Barrymore.

"TODD OF THE TIMES"

Five-Reel Extra Selected Pathe Subject Features Frank Keenan in Newspaper Comedy.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

FRANK KEENAN takes a well-earned rest from his heavier dramatic acting in this number, which is a comedy of newspaper life with some serious moments thrown in. Mr. Keenan plays the role of Theobald Todd, city editor of "The Times," a man with a keen "nose for news," whose chief ambition in life is to be managing editor of the paper.

The number is quite remarkable for the fact that it conveys the real atmosphere of a newspaper office to the screen, something that rarely happens. The situations, it occurred to the reviewer, may be a trifle too much saturated with newspaper technicalities for the average observer, but, nevertheless, there is a story value of appeal, and the subject should get over quite well. There is no very pronounced love interest in this number, but some of the comedy is excellent.

Mr. Todd is married to a former widow with a son named Roy. Mrs. Todd conducts a boarding house and is trying to get her son a job. Roy is a big, overgrown youth, amusingly portrayed by Buddy Post. He gets into newspaper work and clutters up his father's efforts at a crucial moment.

The chief interest of the plot centers about Todd's efforts to round up and expose some race-track gamblers who are operating under the guise of a bucket shop. One of the principals in the concern is an alleged reformer, named Plummer. In the end Todd gets his big story into print and wins the managing editorship.

Jack Cunningham wrote the scenario and Elliott Howe directed. Others in the cast are Aggie Herring, Herschell Mayall, George Williams, Joe Dowling, Jay Morley, Irene Rich, Arthur Milette and Ruth Langston.

Publicity Points.

This number contains one of the best portrayals of a real newspaper office in operation ever shown on the screen. The atmosphere of newspaper work is lifelike and convincing.

The boarding house scenes are another excellent feature of the number, carrying as they do a picture of life as it is lived, and meals as they are served, in such places. The settings throughout this number are unusually good.

"THE AMAZING IMPOSTOR"

American-Pathe Subject in Five Reels Presents Mary Miles Minter in Comedy Role.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

MARY MILES MINTER, who has been successfully appearing for some time past in semi-juvenile roles, takes a step forward in this amusing subject, entitled "An Amazing Impostor." She carries out in a happy manner some rather more exacting work than has been formerly required of her.

The role in which she appears is that of Joan Hope, the pretty daughter of Henry Hope, the "chewing gum" king. Joan has social aspirations and everywhere she goes is pursued by the dreadful fact that her father manufactures gum. She desires more than anything else to get away from this commercial fact, so one day when a traveling "Countess," whom she meets on a train, offers to lend her the title for a week, Joan joyfully accepts. She does not know of course that the mysterious, though beautiful, Countess of Crex is a woman crook of the worst kind, or that the package turned over to her contains valuable diamonds stolen by the Countess and an accomplice.

The story moves along convincingly through some pleasing city and country scenes. Joan passes herself off as the Countess at a big hotel, and a handsome young detective, named Kent Standish, soon begins to shadow her. Later some of the gang of crooks, with which the Countess operates, try to recover the diamonds. Joan gets into several entangling situations, and is finally aided to escape by the young detective, who has falen in love with her.

The number as a whole is quite a pleasing example of light comedy. The story was written by James Franklin Poland and Lloyd Ingraham directed. Others in the cast are P. E. Johnson, Margaret Shelby, Carl Stockdale, Alan Forrest and Henry Barrows.

Publicity Points.

The number is a light comedy and has appointments in harmony with this type of offering. The scenes and settings are very agreeable throughout.

Mary Miles Minter, the young heroine, is attractive in this subject, which gives her perhaps the best opportunity she has yet had as a leading character in a story.

"THE HIGHEST TRUMP"

Earle Williams Part Author and Star of Vitagraph Five-Reel War Romance.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

H. H. VAN LOAN was Earle Williams' partner in the writing of "The Highest Trump," a five-reel Vitagraph release that is compounded of a twin brother role for the star, a heroine who goes to France as a Red Cross nurse, much use of airplanes by the aviator-hero and a plot by German agents in this country to put Hun sympathizers in the flying machine factories and tamper with the construction of the machines. One of the twin brothers is in the pay of the Kaiser; the other is a United States Secret Service officer. When John, the helper of the Hun, finds himself in a tight place he commits suicide, after sending a note to his brother, Richard, explaining his reason for his act.

When Richard arrives at his brother's home he claims to be John, and tells the police that the man found dead in the house is some stranger who must have entered by an open window. Richard is taken without question for the real John Paget by the German agents, and is soon in possession of important secrets. He also finds, to his satisfaction, that Lois Graham, a charming young woman, who was engaged to his brother, also believes he is John and is happy only when in his society.

The father of Lois is a General in charge of an aviation section of the United States Army. Having obtained information that can best be used on the scene of action, Richard becomes an aviator and sails for France. Lois and her father are stationed near him. His instructions from the Germans tell him to land inside of their lines and bring information that can be used against the French. Richard does as he is commanded, but he marries Lois before he starts on his mission, and the information he gives the enemies of the Allies enables the French to surprise the Huns and win a victory.

Graham is denounced as a traitor by his rival, a German spy, and Lois and her father believe him guilty. When he returns from his visit to the Germans he is about to be arrested, but the General learns the truth concerning his son-in-law, and the young couple get into an airplane and start off on their honeymoon.

This romance, which is of the Robert W. Chambers school—only more so, has plenty of incident, and will entertain even if it doesn't convince. James Young, the director, has handled the aviation scenes with skill. The characters are well played.

Aside from Earle Williams as the twin brothers, Grace Darmond as Lois Graham, Robert Byrem as Klassig, John Cossar as General Graham, C. M. Geldart as Von Klem, Robert Bolder as Bickers and Miles McCarty as Anson Dyke make up the cast.

Publicity Points.

First and foremost, "The Highest Trump" is a love story. Although the war is used as a background there are practically no battle scenes, and the part where the young couple fly off to church to get married and then fly back again foreshadows a means of elopement that leaves the auto route a long way in the rear.

"WHO WILL MARRY ME?"

Five-Reel Bluebird Subject Features Carmel Myers in Strong Offering.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THIS Bluebird number, "Who Will Marry Me?", is strong in entertainment value, not because of any "bigness" of plot, but because it is splendidly acted and has genuine appeal. It has some fine dramatic moments and moves with a natural swing that holds the interest firmly.

Carmel Myers plays the heroine, an Italian girl named Rosa. The part is one that is excellently suited to her, and she plays with ease and freedom, bringing out in splendid fashion the ingenious, lovable qualities of the character. Thurston Hall is also very good as the hero, Jerry Van Tyne. The story was adapted by Fred Myton from the original by Sonya Levien and directed by Paul Powell.

The opening scenes portray an Italian wedding, taken in one of the lower parts of the metropolis. This is true to life and at once promises a production that has been carefully made. Rosa is depicted in full wedding attire, about to enter upon marriage with Tony the Barber, whom she does not in the least admire. She is surrounded by friends and relatives, all eager to see her led to the sacrifice, but at a propitious moment Rosa makes a dash for freedom. At the nearby settlement house she pleads for someone to marry her to save her from Tony. Jerry Van Tyne, a wealthy young fellow, intoxicated at the time, obliges her, and the knot is tied. But Jerry prides himself on being a good sport and, when he is sober, determines to be true to Rosa. This he manages to do through a series of interesting events, including a murder. Rosa also proves her strength of character by getting Jerry out of a bad scrape.

The cast includes William Dyer, Betty Schade, Kingsley Benedict, Marian Skinner and Burton Law.

Publicity Points.

This number is full of interesting "sights and scenes." The Italian wedding is like a snatch out of real life from lower Manhattan. The "party" arranged by Rosa to please her husband is also attractive and in keeping with the story.

One of the best features in this well-directed number is the shooting scene. This is vastly different from the ordinary popgun methods so often employed; the incident is dramatized for all it is worth. The court scenes are also strong.

"COMMON CLAY"

Pathe Special Seven-Act Subject Presents Fannie Ward in Heart Drama.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THIS seven-act feature is a screen version of the stage play, "Common Clay," which had long and successful runs in New York and Chicago, and has played in all of the larger cities of the country. On the legitimate stage the play, written by Cleves Kinkead, provided Jane Cowl with one of her famous "weeping" roles, and it may be said in all seriousness that the story touches the heart. Furthermore, it has a double dramatic twist toward the close, which completes its hold upon the interest.

The screen version was adapted by Ouida Bergere and produced under the capable direction of George Fitzmaurice for the Astra Film Corporation. Fannie Ward appears as Ellen Neal, the role originally assumed by Miss Cowl, and she brings to the performance a great deal of charm and graceful acting ability, though Miss Ward herself has done better emotional work for the screen than she does here.

The present production does not follow the stage version entirely, but everything that has been presented adds to the story, and is not to be considered as mere padding. For instance, Ellen herself gains a more definite hold upon the sympathies by a larger view of her wretched home life at the beginning. Her course in seeking a happier life is not only justified, but made a natural thing. That she gets into trouble later is not surprising, but she at least made a strong fight and well deserves the happiness that eventually comes to her.

From a dramatic standpoint, the mother's story on the witness stand and the later confession of Judge Filson that he was the father of Ellen's mother are features that suffer slightly in comparison with the stage production. But the subject is one that will grip the emotions of the observer strongly, none the less.

The hero, Hugh Fullerton, portrayed by E. E. Lawrence, is a more agreeable type than the original. We believe there is a variation here for the better in the fact that Hugh goes to war and there repents of the wrong he had done Ellen. Fred Goodwins does very good work as Arthur Coakley. Others in the cast are Easter Walters, Helen Dunbar, John Barrows, Mary Alden and Andrew Arbuckle.

Publicity Points.

A telling double dramatic effect is achieved in the latter part of this story, in which both the girl's foster mother and her father reveal long hidden secrets.

The cabaret settings are attractive, and the scenes at Brady's Place are well staged. The scenes from Ellen's home life at the beginning also have much to commend them.

There is an excellent symbolic touch in the two pictures of the roses, both fresh and faded, which appeals strongly to the imagination.

"THE HIDDEN TRUTH"

Anna Case Makes Screen Debut in Select Picture of Fair Quality.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

ANOTHER grand opera singer from the Metropolitan Opera House has gone into pictures. This time it is Anna Case, whose equipment of good looks, refinement and acting ability makes her a welcome recruit. It is true that her latter qualification is still untrained, and she will need to work hard under the most favorable conditions before her art will stand comparison with the best. Of a type of womanhood that will always be welcome on the screen, her debut in a Select special attraction, "The Hidden Truth," is decidedly to her credit.

The picture was directed by Julius Steger, and had the benefit of an excellent supporting company. Its principal fault is too deliberate movement. The first part of the story is melodrama. When the scenes shift to social life in New York City the tempo is still too slow. The general production has been looked after carefully, and most of the scenes are thoroughly well mounted.

"The Hidden Truth" is another version of the story whose heroine passes herself off as another woman when she finds a chance to make a fresh start in the world. Just how a girl of the beauty and culture that Anna Case portrays came to be working as a bar maid in a tough Western dance hall is not explained. She is apparently satisfied with her surroundings until the death of one of the other bar maids puts a letter in her hands that opens the door of a home of culture to her.

The dead woman's father was the partner of a young chap who had gone back East and come into great wealth. The heroine and her protector fall in love with each other. Just after they come to an understanding a situation arises where, if the girl warns her lover he is being cheated in a mine deal, she will be denounced as an imposter by the villain. She does that which is right, and is rewarded by regaining the love and confidence of the hero.

Charles Richman and Forrest Robertson are members of the cast.

"THE LAW OF NATURE"

Seven-Part Production Directed by David G. Fischer Is in a Class by Itself.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

STARTING out as an object lesson of the dangers of the liquor traffic, "The Law of Nature," a seven-part picture directed by David G. Fischer, jumps without the slightest preparation from one subject to another and makes use of such a number of unrelated incidents that it defies about every law of construction and keeps the spectator wondering what is going to happen next. The story could have been told in five reels or less, and several unnecessary characters could have been left out to great advantage. As it stands now it is in a class by itself, and contains bits of about all the different forms of screen fiction.

Information is furnished that it was written in collaboration with Congressman Richmond Pearson Hobson and is founded on facts. The hero is a youth of twenty-one who has lived a perfectly clean life until he meets a modern vampire. She starts him drinking. At the end of a short time he quits the lady, marries a refined and physically sound young woman, and in the proper course of events finds himself the father of a child that brings no joy to the hearts of its parents. Deformed, doomed never to walk, the young father is informed that his offspring's affliction is the result of his excesses with the liquor habit. He soon goes back to his temptress, while the faithful wife tries her best to save him from the rum demon. Had the plot followed the history of these central figures with anything approaching skill the picture might have been interesting. Several of the parts are very well acted.

Try an advertisement with such lines as "If you want a better job," "If you're in trouble," "If you're in a rut," and similar phrases each set in eight or ten point followed in each case with a big black "Get Married." Famous Beauty of Stage and Screen has Delightful Photodrama.

Advertising Angles: Appeal to Miss Ferguson's large following, and present the basic idea of the play—a French girl with a lot of narrow-minded "in-laws." For the lobby get a portrait of Miss Ferguson, and have a dressmaker provide it with a decolette gown of black. Letter the sign, "Her husband's puritanical relatives said she dressed immodestly. They nearly ruined two lives. See the dress and decide for yourself." Prepare this well in advance of the showing, and use the same idea in your advertising, asking just how low a dinner dress may be cut, and avoid suggesting immorality .

"THE NATURE GIRL."

Bluebird Presents Violet Mesereau in the Naive Story of a Girl Who Never Saw a Man of Her Own Race Until She was Grown Up.

Cast.

Dolores Winthrop.....Violet Mersereau
Blanca, her aunt.....Senorita de Cordoba
Spencer Crosby.....Donald Stuart
Don Pedro.....Frank Wonderlee

Directed by O. A. C. Lund.

The Story: Winthrop is the daughter of an American who married a Spanish girl and who became crazed by grief shortly after Dolores was born. She is reared on an isolated island near the equator and had never seen a white man. Her father has located a diamond mine, and in an effort to discover the secret Don Pedro comes to the island and kills Dolores' aunt and seeks to abduct the girl herself, but she is aided by Spencer Crosby, a naturalist, and the ending of the story is very different from that planned by Don Pedro.

Feature Violet Mersereau as Dolores Winthrop and Donald Stuart as Spencer Crosby.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Dainty Violet Mersereau Star of Latest and Best Bluebird Photoplay.
Picturesque Beauty of Tropical Settings Frames Pretty Girl in Nature Scenes.
Life-Story of a Beautiful Girl Kept in Ignorance of Her Father.
Amazing Developments in Sensational Story of Domestic Life.
World-Wide Search for Love Ends Happily on Tropical Island.

Advertising Angles: Appeal to those who follow Miss Mersereau and make a more general appeal with the suggestion of the girl who had never seen a man of her own race until she had reached young womanhood. Use freak lines to get the interest, such as "She was eighteen and had never been kissed," "Think of waiting eighteen years to see a real man," etc. Draw an imaginary map for lobby display with the location of the island and letter it, "On this island lives a girl who in eighteen years had never seen a white man. What do you suppose she did to the first one she met?"

Advertising Aids: One design each one, three and six-sheets. Stock one-sheet of star. Colored and black-and-white lobby displays. Slide. Heralds. Players' cuts in three sizes. Scene cuts one and two columns wide. Press book.

"THE LIGHT."

William Fox Presents Theda Bara in a New Story of "the Wickedest Woman in Paris."

Cast.

Blanchette Dumonde.....Theda Bara
Chabin .....Eugene Ormonde
Etienne Desechette.....Robert Walker
Auchat .....George Renevant
Jeanette .....Florence Martin

Directed by J. Gordon Edwards.

The Story: Blanchette is the wickedest woman in Paris, but her better nature is roused when Etienne, a young sculptor, urges to pose for his Madonna. Chabin, her lover, causes Etienne to be thrown out of the cafe, but he has sown the seed. Blanchette seeks a place in the hospitals, but the nurses shrink from the notorious woman. She leaves Chabin for Auchat, an Apache, but leaves him for Etienne, who returns from the front blinded. Auchat seeks to dispose of his new rival and Blanchette kills him. Chabin, coming on the same errand, perceives the change that real love has wrought in her nature and he assumes the burden of her crime, leaving her to happiness in a new and cleaner life.

Feature Theda Bara in the role of the wickedest woman in Paris, who is redeemed by love.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Theda Bara Gives a New Angle to the Old Story of the Magdelane.
Theda Bara as the Wickedest of Madonnas with Widest of Halos.
New Prospects for New Methods in Theda Bara Vampirings.
Love and Romance Leads Adventurous Career in Parisian Slums.
Greatest of Screen "Vamps" Brings Gripping Photoplay to Success.

Advertising Angles: Play on the Bara name, but let it be known that this is a new play. Work on the wickedest woman in Paris angle strongly. Ask if your reader can imagine what the wickedest woman can be like and advise them to see the play. If the fuel administration will permit, flood your lobby with extra lights and advertise this feature beforehand. You can ring the changes on this feature and the title. You might arrange a window hook-up with stores selling lamps and electrical fixtures including flashlights.

Advertising Aids: One, three and six sheets, two styles of each. Lobby displays, 8x10, 11x14 and 22x28. Announcement slide. Cuts, mats and press sheets (cuts are made on special order at rate of 20 cents per column; mats and press sheets are mailed gratis).

in which this doubly gifted star has yet been seen.

Feature Geraldine Farrar as an honored wife confronted by the dilemna of aiding a swindler or having her unsavory past revealed.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Geraldine Farrar Star in Another Super-Production of Goldwyn Photoplays.
Love and Passion During Broadway Days and Alaskan Nights.
From Alaskan Dance Halls to Inner Circles of New York Society.
Famous and Beautiful Operatic Diva Again Star in Impelling Photoplay.
Concerning a Woman at Bay—and the Man Who Paid the Price.

Advertising Angles: Play heavily upon the name. Even if you have used the phonograph stunt before you can work it to the extent of window displays in the phonograph shops and with tie-up advertisements of Farrar records. That is good every time. Work the press book line "A drama of Eastern days and Alaskan night" in your newspaper work, and also work on the variety shown in the Farrar plays. Use plenty of pictures and work hard to get these into windows away from the house as well as using full displays in the lobby well in advance. And remember that if you work hard enough you will get in people who are strangers to pictures and who can be made regulars.

Advertising Aids: One one-sheet, two three-sheets, one six and one 24-sheet. Rotogravure one-sheet. Lobby displays, 8x10, 11x14 and 22x28. Coming and current slides. Advertising and scene cuts. Photographic line-cut copy for ads. Press book. Music cue-sheet.

Laura White.....Virginia Lee
Her father .....Joe Smiley
Karl Richter .....George Fisher
Countess Briand .....Corinne Uzzell
"Velvet's" valet.....George Halpin
Directed by Edward Dillon.

The Story: Velvet is an accomplished crook and would have been a crook to the end of his days had he not seen Laura White, daughter of the chief of the U. S. Intelligence Bureau, who is engaged to marry Karl Richter, a German spy. Velvet finds that she is the victim of the plotters and after many daring advantures fastens the guilt upon Richter and wins the girl.

Feature George Walsh as Joe Grimm and Virginia Lee as Laura White.

Program and Advertising Phrases: George Walsh Star of Smashing Photoplay Replete With Action and Excitement.
Luck and Pluck in America Started Something in Far-Away Germany.
Luck and Pluck Wins Great Reward in Action Through Photoplay Excitement.
How An Honorable Crook Made the Biggest Haul of His Life With Cupid's Aid.
George Walsh Athletic Star of Fox Photoplay Jumps Into Sensations.

Advertising Angles: Play up Walsh and tell that this is a typical Walsh production with action enough to satisfy the most exacting. Make an advertising point on the crook who breaks into a house to steal a photograph of the girl he has fallen in love with and who steals two engagement rings. Pick up other lively bits for additional displays. Make them feel that they are going to be thrilled by telling them the chief thrills, always with the suggestion that there are many more not mentioned.

Advertising Aids: One, three and six sheets, two styles of each. Lobby displays, 8x10, 11x14 and 22x28. Announcement slide. Cuts, mats and press sheets (cuts are made on special order at rate of 20 cents per column; mats and press sheets are mailed gratis).

"DR. RAMEAU" ("Infidelity").
William Fox Presents Frederick Perry and a Notable Cast in a Modern Play Based Upon the Novel by Georges Ohnet.
Cast.

Dr. Rameau.....Frederick Perry
Brunzell .....Stuart Holmes
Dr. Talavanne.....George Alison
Conchita .....Dorothy Bernard
Pamela .....Jean Sothern

The Story: Pierre Rameau is prostrated by the death of his wife, Conchita, and keeps her room inviolate: a shrine to her memory which he visits upon the anniversaries of her death. On one of these visits he makes the discovery that Conchita has been unfaithful to him and that her little daughter upon whom he has lavished his love, is not his child. Almost beside himself, he drives her from the house, and will not answer her pleas when she is dying and his professional skill alone can save her. His friend, Dr. Talavanne, fairly drags him to the child, but her appeal moves him. Pamella is saved for a life of love and happiness.

Feature Frederick Perry as Dr. Rameau and Dorothy Bernard as Conchita.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Modern Society Film Drama Based on Celebrated Story of Parisian Life.
Famous Physician Turns Daughter Away When He Makes Strange Discovery.
How An Innocent Girl Suffered Extreme Wrong Through Scientific Father.
Never Was More Fascinating Story Told in Films.
Great Cast Interprets Interesting Story of Parisian Society.

Advertising Angles: Call attention to the strength of the cast, which includes several favorites in addition to the nominal star. Give it publicity as one of the famous classics of French literature, and present the big situation dramatically in your advertising in the newspapers; a man who at a single blow is bereft of two ideals.

Advertising Aids: One, three and six sheets, two styles of each. Lobby displays, 8x10, 11x14 and 22x28. Announcement slide. Cuts, mats and press sheets (cuts are made on special order at rate of 20 cents per column; mats and press sheets are mailed gratis).

"Why does POWER'S CAMERAGRAPH always win?

"It isn't because its material is the best, nor that it looks like a thoroughbred—and runs like one. The big reason is here: Every detail of construction before acceptance must prove to expert knowledge that it improves projection.

PICTURE THAT WILL LIVE FOREVER

THE SATURDAY EVENING POST February 8, 1919

"This is no night to stay home"

What if it does rain! What's that to you?
The motion picture theatre is open.

ALL the difference between the sullen drip from the eaves and the flutter of leaves in a sunny patio beyond Seville.

All the difference between the monotony of a dull book and the lively creak of saddle-leather between your knees.

All the difference between seven o'clock this bleak evening and a hot noon ten years ago, when palm fronds rustled in the soft trade-wind.

All the difference between Number 7 Maple Street and the sail shaded deck of an island schooner creaming through the blue of the seas of the South.

How far away? How near is the nearest of the better theatres, with the relaxation of its sociable chairs, its genial warmth and the happy swing of music?

Paramount and Artcraft Pictures are there. That is why it is a better theatre.

Your kind of people, who know life and treasure romance, made Paramount and Artcraft Pictures possible—and Paramount and Artcraft Pictures made that better theatre possible.

Getting Big Results For Exhibitors of Better Pictures By A New Kind of Advertising

ADVERTISING the joy of going to moving pictures—

Advertising the ideals of the exhibitors, producers and the distributors of the most consistently good moving pictures—

Advertising to create good will for those exhibitors, producers and distributors who are trying hardest, and succeeding best, to lift up the moving picture—

Advertising for an industry by the leader in that industry—

It has no parallel in the history of advertising.

It is a daring thing to do—a courageous thing to do. An innovation, like all new ideas, sure to be criticized.

But the results count. Exhibitors, producers and distributors of good moving pictures know it is bringing tremendous strength to the industry.

(Exhibitors, producers and distributors of cheap, tawdry and harmful moving pictures know that it is destroying their business.)

And because the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation is the biggest company in the industry, producing and distributing the highest type of moving pictures, it, and the exhibitors who show its pictures profit most in the building up of the industry.

GRIFFITH'S "A Romance of Happy Valley"

THE BOOK OF LIFE

An ARTCRAFT Picture

It Is D. W. Griffith's, So Of Course It's A Big New Idea!

"A FRIENDLY little story of Kentucky folk," that's what D. W. Griffith calls his newest Artcraft Picture.

Just like calling the Woolworth Building "a tidy little shack," like describing New York as "a busy little village"; the same as saying "a nice little piece of property" when you mean the United States of America.

In "A Romance of Happy Valley," Mr. Griffith has gone far away from war, far from massive spectacles and has laid his story in the land of his boyhood and with his genius he shows the bigness and the narrowness of the cross roads folk.

A Brilliant Study of Homespun Humanity. A-throb with the Pulse of Plain People. Glowing with Love and Faith and Humor. Stirring with the Tumult of Passions Unleashed. With a Cast Including Lillian Gish, Robert Harron, George Fawcett, Kate Bruce and Other Brilliant Griffith Players.

A play with the most astounding, most heart wrenching dramatic climax ever portrayed on stage or screen!

You know the BERT LYTELL of "The Spender," that human, 100% picture released only a few weeks ago and now proclaimed the success of the season.

You know the BERT LYTELL of that picture and how, in it, he bounded into new fame and a great place in pictures.

We now can advise you that he is the same BERT LYTELL in the newest METRO All Star Series Production, a picture just as human, just as fascinating, just as real and fine as "The Spender." Who Is This Woman ?

Lifted from the depths of despair at the very moment when she is on the way to accomplish her self-destruction.

Rescued from suicide only to find herself engulfed amid a band of desperate criminals and suddenly facing a charge of murder.

Acquitted—and then hounded by the dreaded knowledge that her name had been written into the police Index of crime.

Married into the best society, the wife of a powerful diplomat—and ordered by the Secret Service chief to sacrifice her honor or face exposure.

And finally—saved, with happiness secured at the last minute when all that she had fought to hold was slipping through her trembling fingers . . . These are the thrilling and interest-challenging threads of the first Goldwyn Star Series production in which

Samuel Goldwyn presents:

PAULINE FREDERICK

from the popular stage success

The Woman on the Index

By Lillian Trimble Bradley and George Broadhurst
Directed by Hobart Henley

Goldwyn's Pauline Frederick productions are to be "different." She has wanted to do stories like those we have found for her. Any exhibitor will recognize this story as her kind of screen material. Emotional, tense, big and modern; everything you expect of her she gives you now. This production is released everywhere February 16.

Exhibitors constantly are crying for screen productions made from big stage successes. Here is one. They are saying: "Give Mabel Normand the broadest kind of broad comedy." We have done so here. In a few days, upon receipt of prints, all Goldwyn offices will hold trade showings of the best comedy production Mabel Normand ever made.

FORD EDUCATIONAL WEEKLY

There Are Exclusive Values Found Only in the FORD EDUCATIONAL WEEKLY

FIRST: The tremendous value and "reach" of Henry Ford's name—in the villages, towns and cities of the nation. A name as familiar to the ears of a nation as the coins of our country are familiar to the eyes of our people. This familiarity means publicity and advertising for The Ford Educational Weekly in your theatre.

Second: The power of the Ford name to get into the very heart of great industries and depict their dramatic phases. You may not know this, so we will tell you that ninety per cent. of all the issues of The Ford Educational Weekly have been exclusive picturizations that no other organizations would have been permitted to get.

Third: An absolute protection against any propoganda fostered by selfish interests. The exclusive functions of The Ford Educational Weekly are to instruct, entertain, and educate and the editors of this great screen publication know that to achieve this they must be human; must be interesting and that everything depicted must be staged in terms of drama.

Having made a splendid start in its exclusive booking of this attraction, having placed it with the representative first runs and neighborhood houses in all important centres and then behind these having obtained volume booking, Goldwyn desires to lay particular emphasis upon the value of The Ford Educational Weekly in the thousands of smaller communities of the nation.

We wish to announce that we are prepared to offer immediate service in the small towns and cities without the months'-long waits after first runs and we invite exhibitors to take this up quickly with their nearest Goldwyn offices.

What the Trade Press Thinks of LOUIS BENNISON As a "Box-Office Bet"

THIS is a time when we will say nothing about the new star whose success and popularity we have confidently predicted. Trade journal critics, the newspapers and exhibitors say more than Goldwyn ever dared say:

VARIETY: Goldwyn and Betzwood have a "find" in Bennison. a combination of Fairbanks, all the other cowboy actors and a touch of Chaplin—but an individuality all his own.

MOVING PICTURE WORLD: Ingenuity and humor are going to make Louis Bennison a mighty popular screen star.

N. Y. TELEGRAPH: Louis Bennison was first announced for popular "westerns," and, lo, he turns out to be a most delightful comedian as well. You'll like him.

PITTSBURGH PRESS: It's almost inconceivable that the first picture of a new star should be a big success. The unique personality of Louis Bennison has made him score a hit from the start.

MOTION PICTURE NEWS: A fresh, unassuming and altogether pleasing personality. Bennison's wonderful enthusiasm is a great asset. You spend your money well when you see Bennison in "Oh Johnny!"

BUTTE MINER: Louis Bennison is even a bigger success than his managers claimed he would be.

LYRIC, Pittsburgh: We want an immediate repeat date on "Oh Johnny." Bennison is a winner from the start. We have signed his series for our three West Virginia houses today.

STRAND, Taunton, Mass: We played Bennison against the two biggest male stars of the screen, day and date, and whipped the pair for patronage.

INFLUENZA BREAKS OUT IN AUSTRALIA

Millard Johnson Gets Word that Theatres Are Closed and Orders for Film Have Been Canceled

MILLARD JOHNSON, of Australasian Films, received a cable dispatch from Australia on January 29 stating that influenza had broken out most seriously in the island continent. The Government has ordered all theatres closed for two or three months.

When Mr. Johnson was asked if he believed it possible the Government might not later rescind its orders if it were found the ravages of the scourge were abating, he replied that he hardly thought so. He called attention to the fact that the theatres in New Zealand had been closed during November and December and had just been opened to the public.

Mr. Johnson said in the message from Australia also were instructions canceling all orders for film and postponing deliveries. Asked as to what this phase of the message meant to American manufacturers in terms of dollars and cents, he replied that his company's exportations of film to Australia averaged between twenty and twenty-five thousand dollars weekly. The situation will be watched with keen interest.

Aaron Jones of Chicago Leases Des Moines House

AFTER much speculation as to who would secure the new theatre at Sixth and Locust streets, Des Moines, announcement is made that it has been leased to Aaron Jones of Jones, Linick & Shaefer of Chicago for a term of years. It is understood that the Ascher interests and some other capitalists are identified with Mr. Jones in the venture. The theatre, as yet unnamed, is scheduled for opening about April 1. It will seat about two thousand and is of the latest fireproof construction.

The blower for a mammoth pipe organ has been installed and the work of interior decoration is not far off. Mr. Jones probably will be in Des Moines soon, it is stated, personally to start the installation of seats, projection machinery and to confer with the artists and decorators as to the color scheme to be employed. No resident manager has been named as yet.

While the new house is "off" location as regards the picture theatre rialto of Des Moines, it is thought the tremendous billboard and newspaper campaign that is understood to be in order will succeed in putting the house over. It is said that an orchestra of fifteen or more pieces will be employed.

Nothing is known as to the policy of the house save that it will be pictures. Just what service will be utilized also is a question, as most of the high class feature and program service is already under contract here, most of it for first and second run.

"Scandal" To Go on Stage.

That a successful motion picture production is a valuable basis for a stage play is the evident belief of the prominent New York theatrical producing firm, Lee and J. J. Shubert, who announce that they will shortly produce on the spoken stage Constance Talmadge's first Select picture, "Scandal," by Cosmo Hamilton.

According to the announcement the Messrs. Shubert, in association with Walter Hast, have already placed Mr. Hamilton's "Scandal" in rehearsal, with Charles Cherry and Francine Larrimore heading the cast. Both Mr. Cherry and Miss Larrimore are prominent players of the spoken stage and have appeared in featured roles for a number of seasons.

GRIFFITH HAS NOT SIGNED WITH CIRCUIT, SAYS TALLY

Los Angeles, Jan. 28.

THE widely circulated story that D. W. Griffith has left the Five Star Combination formed by Fairbanks, Chaplin, Hart, Griffith, and Mary Pickford and signed with the First National is denied by T. L. Tally, vice-president of that body.

While it is admitted that overtures which are being considered have been made to Griffith by the First National, so far the deal has not passed beyond the negotiating stage. The chances one way or the other are equally good.

The rumor that Douglas Fairbanks will make two pictures for First National in order to take up the time between the expiration of his contract with Artcraft and the time other members of the combine will be free from contracts is denied by Fairbanks.

GIEBLER.

Selznick Pictures Opens Office.

The new Selznick Pictures Corporation offices at Room 1503, 501 Fifth avenue, have been opened. This is the latest addition to the constantly growing film district on Fifth avenue. The Selznick offices are in the Astor Trust Building, which is one of the most modern business structures in the city, having been just completed when the war put an end to extensive building operations. All the New York business of the Selznick Pictures Corporation will be transacted at this office, which is in charge of Randolph Bartlett. Meanwhile production is going on in the Brunton Studios in Los Angeles, President Myron Selznick and Director General Charles Giblyn being at the Coast for this purpose.

Railroad to Accept Film For Checking as Baggage

EXHIBITORS and exchange managers who have sought to have films checked as baggage and could not get the railroad official to accept them will be glad to know that it has definitely been decided to permit films to be transported in this manner.

In the issue of the Moving Picture World of December 14 it was reported that films would be accepted as baggage commencing in January. Some of the subscribers of this paper sought to secure the service, but were unable to do so. The reason for this is that the railroad officials had not completed their arrangements by that time.

This new privilege has been secured through the activity of the Washington Exchange Managers' Association. It had been found that films could not be shipped as baggage from Washington points south, and the privilege was denied to the western territory. Oscar A. Morgan, secretary of the association, got in touch with the railroad authorities, and was informed that a new ruling would be put into effect forthwith under the terms of which films could be moved as baggage.

Saengers Have Opened New Orleans Liberty

THE Liberty Theatre, New Orleans, which closed its doors New Year's Eve, has been leased by the Saenger Amusement Company, and opened under their direction Saturday, January 25, presenting a program of straight picture entertainment. The Liberty is rated as one of the finest theatres in the South, has a seating capacity of 1,700 and is excellently located.

Maurice F. Barr, just returned from the western front, has been discharged from service and was selected by the Saengers to open and manage their new acquisition. Mr. Barr was manager of the New Orleans Strand when he resigned from the Saengers' employ to enlist in Uncle Sam's army. At the Strand he made such a splendid record that selecting him to open the Liberty for the Saengers was a logical choice.

PHILIP LANG A VICTIM OF INFLUENZA

Vitagraph Scenario Editor When with Kalem Company Had Done Much to Aid New Writers

PHILIP LANG, scenario editor for the Vitagraph Company, and for many years scenario editor and latterly vice-president of the Kalem Company, died at his apartments, 151 East Nineteenth street, New York, Friday, January 24, a victim of influenza. Funeral services were held Sunday at the Funeral Church and the body was taken to Xenia, Ohio, for interment.

Phil Lang, like most of the scenario editors of the early days, came to the business from the dramatic stage, where he had long experience as an actor and stage director, and he is said to have been one of the original Floradora Sextette. He was added to the staff of the Kalem Company to take charge of the scripts, following Miss Gene Gauntier. He was not only an able writer, but he was a gifted teacher, and in those days an editor was perforce a teacher if he would develop immature talent to a professional basis.

Developed Many Writers.

Mr. Lang contributed many valuable articles to this publication and did much personal work in developing promising writers, among them Edward W. Matlack, Frank Howard Clark, Howard Irving Young, Harry O. Hoyt and others. He was also instrumental in interesting Hornung in direct writing for the screen as well as other well-known fiction writers, who were given practical training in production to enable them to write directly for the screen.

On the death of Samuel Long he was made vice-president of the Kalem Company, and retained that position until the company abandoned the production of plays, when he retired to give his time to the writing of short fiction, for which he had shown a decided ability, but accepted a position with the Vitagraph, which he held at the time of his death. He was a member and one of the Board of Governors of the Greenroom Club.

Bryson Takes Minneapolis Theatre, Released by Fox

THE last week in January will mark the passing of the Minneapolis Shubert Theatre as the home of William Fox Films. The Fox Company leased the theatre for a year, opening early last December, after redecorating and refurnishing the house and installing a new stage. It will cease active operations with the showing of William Farnum in the "Les Miserables." The Fox Company is seeking to sublet the house for the ten remaining months of its lease. Several Minneapolis men, it is said, are considering the advisability of taking over the theatre and playing stock.

In the meantime James V. Bryson, manager of the Minneapolis Universal Film Exchange, has arranged to take over the theatre for an indefinite period. The Shubert will close February 2 and will reopen Sunday afternoon, February 9 under Mr. Bryson's management. As his opening attraction Mr. Bryson has chosen "The Heart of Humanity," the spectacular eight-reel Jewel feature.

With the taking over of the Shubert by Bryson pictures will probably be booked for engagements of from one to four weeks instead of the usual three, four or seven days. A twenty-piece symphony orchestra has been engaged and rehearsal of the musical score for "The Heart of Humanity" began this week.

"The Heart of Humanity" is a feature production said to compare with "The Birth of a Nation" and "Hearts of the World," both of which had record-breaking runs at the Shubert.

Reichenbach Praises "The Unpardonable Sin."

Los Angeles, January 27.

I SAW Garson's "Unpardonable Sin" last night. Without doubt it is more remarkable than reports. It is the most intense, suspenseful film I've ever seen. It exceeds any picture ever made with war as background. I am not connected with it, but it is due Garson, Neilan and Blanche Sweet, it be known that this is unquestionably the greatest picture of the period.

Eberhard Schneider's Death Loss to the Film Industry

THE passing of Eberhard Schneider marks an event of moment to the moving picture industry, with which the inventor had allied himself since the early days. Death claimed him on Sunday morning, January 26, after a lingering illness at his home at 219 Second avenue, New York, from where his funeral took place at 2.30 Monday afternoon, January 27.

Eberhard Schneider came to America about twenty-two years ago from Essen, Germany, where he was employed at the Krupp munition works, and has since that time perfected many inventions of both minor and major importance. At his shop on Second avenue he worked indefatigably, and in his happy hunting ground of invention he presented a unique figure to him who cared to enter and engage this diligent man in conversation.

Mr. Schneider was always affable and ready to discuss the moving picture camera and its appendages, or to allow one a glimpse into the mysteries of the little back room in which still remained the stepping stones of the higher developments of the man's talent.

The first moving pictures of big guns in action and of shells in combustion were photographed by Eberhard Schneider at the Krupp works years ago by means of a crudely modeled moving picture camera, through which a film 1¾ inches in width was run by continuous motion. One of his latest patents of importance covered a rapid camera, capable of 200 exposures to the second without injury to the film.

Cowboys Inject Atmosphere At Showing of Western Film

HARRY ARTHURS, JR., manager of the Seattle office of the United Picture Theatres, Inc., returned to Seattle from Portland, where he attended the opening of the Dustin Farnum feature, "The Light of Western Stars," which played to big business all last week.

During an evening performance of this exciting photodrama two cowboys all dolled up in blue serge box coats and blue trousers tucked into top boots, high hats, and brilliant handkerchiefs protruding from their upper coat pockets, entered the theatre, escorting a woman.

Soon after the picture started the boys began to warm up to the subject and their comments could be heard over nearly half the theatre. Finally, when in one of the most exciting climaxes the title, "Whoopee!" was flashed on the screen, the cowpunchers rose in their seats and with a regular cowboy yell sent their hats flying over the heads of the audience toward the screen.

The remonstrances, both verbal and physical, of three ushers and of John Stille, the manager, had no effect on these men fresh from a big ranch in Pendleton, Oregon, and they stayed until the end and added greatly to the amusement of the audience.

Reduction on Film Freight.

On January 28 the United States Shipping Board announced cuts in ocean shipping rates approximating 66 2-3 per cent. on freight from North Atlantic ports to Liverpool, London, Manchestre, Hull, Avonmouth, Bristol, Cardiff, Glasgow, Leith and Belfast. This meets the reduction made by the British Ministry of Shipping on British shipping for trans-Atlantic freight. Under the new rates the movement of motion pictures films from and to the ports named will be $1 per cubic foot, or 1 per cent. ad valorem, while the rate on celluloid scrap will be $1 per cubic foot.

LOS ANGELES SETTLES DOWN AGAIN

World Correspondent Reviews Some of the Incidents Contributing to the Making of a Strenuous Fortnight for the Film Colony—What the Producers Have to Say

NOW that the big meetings of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, which opened in Los Angeles on January 6, is over it is possible to write somewhat of an orderly resume of the proceedings.

From the very first day of the convention rumors were rife that the meeting had been called for the purpose of effecting a gigantic merger between the First National and other producers. There seemed to be well grounded belief that a combination was to be formed by the First National and the Paramount-Artcraft. Other names, including Goldwyn, Metro and Fox, were also mentioned as being possibilities in the merger. All of these rumors were denied on all hands, and so far as is apparent the much talked of amalgamation never got any further than the talking point, and it looks, in spite of all, as if the statement made by T. L. Tally, Vice-President of the First National, to the effect that the meeting was for no other purpose than their ordinary routine business, was a correct statement.

Liebler Shut Off Rumors.

The following telegram, signed by Robert Liebler, president of the First National, was sent out to members of the Circuit during the meeting:

"To dispel any rumors that may have emanated from this city, your board of directors wish to assure you that there has been no amalgamation as far as the First National is concerned. Your board of directors hold that our organization shall continue undisturbed in its efforts for the encouragement of greater and better pictures to be distributed independently of each other and to be sold strictly on their individual merits, according to box office values. Charlie Chaplin, Mary Pickford, Anita Stewart, Norma Talmadge and Jack Pickford contracts will be carried out. Contracts with several others have been made. Definite announcements covering these contracts will be sent to you through the regular channels later."

Combine Talk Led to Stars' Action.

There is no doubt, however, that the persistent talk of combinations that would control production, distribution and the players was the direct cause of the action taken by the five big stars who wrote and signed a declaration of independence against all factors of the industry, and formed an organization of their own.

The action of the stars in their rebellion against existing conditions is variously commented upon. The stars themselves declare that the old order, so far as they are concerned, is gone and that they are going right ahead with their plans for production and distribution. Prophecies have been made that internal jealousies, artistic temperament and other things of a like nature would prevent anything like coherence among the players. Of course, this story is laughed at by the players.

Liebler Sees Benefit to Industry.

Just before his departure to Indianapolis Robert Liebler, President of the First National, had the following to say:

"The action taken by the stars to distribute their own pictures is only one of those revolutionary movements that will tend to benefit the industry. The question of making pictures is also like building new theatres. One company, or one star, makes great headway because of an individual knowledge or insight, and, therefore, develops the art to a point that is ahead of other stars and other companies.

These conditions will always prevail. We find a new theatre in town that is popular. Some one comes along and builds another house that becomes more popular. We have stars and more stars —and as the industry progresses there will be other stars to supplant the popularity of present stars, and new companies will be formed that will know better how to present the new luminaries."

Artcraft-Paramount Unaffected.

Adolph Zukor, President of the Famous-Players-Lasky Corporation, said: "The Artcraft-Paramount organization will continue to put forth its efforts to place on the market the best pictures possible to produce.

"We shall continue to sign new stars as the contracts of other stars expire. The new organization of film artists who plan to release their own pictures will not affect Artcraft-Paramount.

"It is a star's right to arrange new plans after contracts with a certain company are ended. Messrs. Fairbanks, Griffith, Hart, Chaplin and Miss Pickford have a right to make their future plans."

Time May Remove Misunderstandings.

T. L. Tally of the First National says:

"We feel no alarm over the movement the five stars are making. They are very important people, important and necessary to the industry, to the theatre owners and to the public; but the stars are unduly alarmed. Under the terms given them by the First National Exhibitors' Circuit they share in the profits and they will continue to do so. It will be some time before they have finished making the pictures under their present contracts, and by that time many misunderstandings may be smoothed out."

To sum up, it seems that after all little was accomplished at the convention; that bigger things were imminent and expected is proved by the fact that practically every one of importance in the industry found business of some sort that brought him to Los Angeles during the time the meeting was held, and it may be possible that foundations were laid during the time of the meeting for structures that will be built in the future.

SAN FRANCISCO GOES BACK TO MASKS

Theatregoers Urged to Get Out as Usual—Fifty Towns Close Houses—Stockton Fights

THE Board of Supervisors of San Francisco has re-enacted the gauze mask ordinance, in the face of opposition by various religious cults, and this is now in full force and effect. Similar regulations have been adopted in the east-bay suburbs and in many of the smaller communities throughout the northern and central part of the state. Theatres are open as usual in the Greater San Francisco, and it is not a part of the plan of health authorities to close them.

People are being urged, through editorials in the daily press and on the advice of the medical fraternity, to get out as usual, to patronize the theatres and to enjoy themselves as in the past, but to observe the masking ordinance to the letter. When a similar measure was placed into effect in November the epidemic was definitely controlled in a short time, and it is believed that this will be the case again.

Theatre owners of Stockton, Cal., were recently informed that their places of business were to be closed again, as a result of the influenza epidemic, but they have taken the stand that the ruling is discriminatory and have decided not to obey it. Legal talent has been secured and efforts will be made to get an injunction against the enforcement of the order. San Francisco film interests are backing them in their contention.

Theatres are now closed in fifty towns in the California territory served by San Francisco film exchanges, the complete list being as follows: Antioch, Arbuckle, Atascadero, Aetna, Boulder Creek, Benicia, Coalinga, Cortland, Dos Palos, Dinuba, Dixon, Davis, Exeter, Esparto, Ferndale, Fort Bragg, Gilroy, Hanford, Hollister, Healdsburg, Korbel, Los Banos, Lodi, Livermore, Monterey, Modesto, Merced, Mendocino, Minden, Mayfield, Manteca, Napa, Nevada City, Oroville, Pleasanton, Pacific Grove, Petaluma, Rochester, Suisun, Selma, Santa Rosa, Sanger, Sisson, Stirling City, San Juan, San Mateo, Truckee, Vallejo and Willits.

Conditions Improve at Coast.

Later news from the coast city is that the compulsory wearing of gauze masks as a means of combating the influenza epidemic has again proved to be a decided success at San Francisco and new cases and deaths have taken a great slump since the ordinance became effective, leading the health authorities to express the opinion that their use will not be necessary for a long period. Theatre owners declare that since the wearing of masks became general business has picked up to a noticeable extent, indicating that public confidence has been restored.

The efforts of moving picture exhibitors at Stockton, Cal., to secure an injunction against the enforcement of an order closing their places of business have resulted in a failure.

Canadians Want to Confer with Quebec Censor Board

THE recently revived Canadian Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of Montreal has decided to take up with the Province of Quebec a proposal that a committee of exhibitors be empowered to confer with the Quebec Board of Moving Picture Censors for the revision of releases which have been rejected by the Quebec board. It is believed that this arrangement would result in the saving of many excellent releases through the revising of objectionable details. It is also thought that the plan would prove highly satisfactory to the Government and the exchanges as well as the exhibitors.

The Montreal body is negotiating for an affiliation with the Moving Picture Protective Association of Ontario, the move in this direction being proposed by Secretary-Treasurer H. Legrove. Manager Rosenbloom, of the Empire Theatre, Lachine, Quebec, who has been an active booster for the revived organization, was responsible for the suggestion for a co-operative plan with the provincial government.

Mr. Lavergne, of Montreal, is the president of the new association, and the vice-president is Sam Freed, of the Tivoli Theatre. The headquarters of the association are at 337 Bleury street, Montreal.

Clear Up Disappearance of Much Film in Cleveland

THE mystery of the disappearance of over fifty reels of films from Cleveland film exchanges has been partly cleared up by the unearthing of the reels and the arrest of William Clark.

Reels have been disappearing from exchanges at intervals for over two months until finally Manager Erdmann of the Artcraft-Paramount and Manager Morris of the Select took up the matter with the Cleveland detective force and pressed immediate action. Assisting the detectives, they located some reels in Clark's home.

Twenty-eight other reels, most of them taken from the Standard Film Service, were located in the home of a boy who had an old Edison projector with a coal-oil lamp, running the films.

This boy was working in a film exchange, and it is reported that he and another employe of the Standard took the reels, which were old ones. As it was not shown they took them for rental purposes or to sell them, the Standard officials have not yet decided what action they will take. The boys, however, were taken to the detention home.

Fox Sells "Salome" for Fifteen Foreign Nations

A DEAL has been closed by Fox Film Corporation with Gaytis & Mosco, whose main office is in Athens and whose American headquarters are at 1482 Broadway. Constantine Patsios, American representative, has just purchased the exhibiting rights of "Salome" featuring Theda Bara, for Greece, Italy, Spain, Portugal, France, Belgium, Holland, Switzerland and the Balkan states, including Roumania, Bulgaria, Serbia, Montenegro and Albania, as well as for Turkey and Egypt.

This is said to be one of the most far-reaching deals ever made for a single feature, and follows closely the announcement of a contract with O. J. Monat, of Paris.

Speaking of this deal, Mr. Patsios said: "The business of the cinema exhibitor in Europe is taking an immense stride. In the Balkan states, Greece and Italy many theatres were obliged to close, because they could not obtain fuel or electricity—all available supplies being held by the governments.

"So with the end of the fighting and the opening of the old and some new houses, you can imagine how hungry the people have become for cinema entertainment. Heretofore the market has been largely controlled by Italian features. My company intends to exploit a number of American features which are sure to meet with a ready response from our audiences.

"I am especially enthusiastic about the William Fox productions. We have shown 'A Daughter of the Gods' in Italy and Greece with immense success. 'Salome,' in my opinion, is one of the finest features ever offered to the exhibitor. By our contract it will be shown in something like 500 European theatres in the near future. We will probably make the initial production at our own house, the Attikon, in Athens, which seats 2,500 people."

Regarding business conditions in the Balkan states, Mr. Patsios said: "All are looking to the Peace Conference to settle the Balkan questions definitely. It was difficulties in the Balkans that gave Germany an excuse to plunge into war, and it will be Balkan difficulties that will upset world peace again unless they are settled at this time. The countries are rich in resources and in business possibilities—before the war my company alone had 600 representatives in the various Balkan states."

Gaytis & Mosco have offices in Rome, Paris, Barcelona, Alexandria, Cairo and Bucharest. It is their intention, according to the Fox officials, to exploit the feature in a big way in the matter of publicity and advertising.

$100,000 Theatre Planned for Grand Forks, N. D.

THE construction of a theatre costing $100,000, one of the finest playhouses planned for the state of North Dakota, will be under way at Grand Forks this coming spring.

Final arrangements for the building of the theatre, the regular offering of which will be vaudeville and moving pictures, have been made by A. J. Kavanagh, one of the leading exhibitors of North Dakota. Mr. Kavanagh has obtained control of property with a 65-foot front at 413-417 DeMers avenue and a depth of 125 feet. The theatre will be known as the New Grand.

The seating capacity of the house will be about 1,100. The building will be fireproof, and plans for safety, exits and ventilation will be copied from leading Minneapolis and St. Paul theatres. The stage and accessories will be large enough to accommodate any attraction, and in fact the new theatre will be modern in every respect. It will be opened about September.

For more than twenty years Mr. Kavanagh has been in the theatre business. He was proprietor of the old Grand Theatre, which was recently burned, and he is still in control of the Jamestown Opera House at Jamestown, N. D.

ANOTHER GERARD PICTURE IS COMING

The Warners Are Making Big Feature Showing the Real German People as Backers of Militarism and Supporters of the Kaiser and Frightfulness in Prosecuting War

ASK any exhibitor who played it (and it's still going strong) if he remembers anything in particular about James W. Gerard's "Four Years in Germany" and the chances are ten to one he'll say in gleeful tones:

"Bet your life I'll not forget that Gerard picture. It supplied the bankroll that helped me tide over the 'flu' shutdown."

Tell that same exhibitor that there's another Gerard picture coming along and he'll want immediately to know the particulars. It was the intimation that the Warners—H. M., A., S. L. and J. L.—were getting ready another Gerard picture that sent a representative of Moving Picture World to the Warner office to find out all about it.

Mr. A., of the Warners, was communicative without being fluent. "To tell you the truth," said Mr. Warner. "I am hardly able to say just what the new Gerard picture is going to be except that the story has only just come back from Charles A. Lougue, who did the scenario, and has been approved by James W. Gerard, who wrote 'My Four Years in Germany,' the biggest money-maker the Warners ever presented to showmen.

New Story Will Be Based on Fact.

"Mr. Gerard's new story is based on historic fact and will carry the German race and their attributes from the time of Frederick the Great to the days of Bill Hohenzollern, the main exhibit in Holland's world-famed cheese industry. While he was Ambassador to Germany Mr. Gerard made scientific study of the German, both high and low. He has supplemented this closer view with long study in history. He has delved into every work that reflects the German character, and this much he has concluded:

"'The German war-lords acted just as the German people wanted them to do. The people were back of the Kaiser in his every act and move. They wanted war, delighted in atrocities and believed in frightfulness—believed that Germany and Germans would come out on top, rulers of the world and dominators of the earth's surface and peoples.'

"The new Gerard picture will reflect this conclusion. It will show the progress of the German race from the time 'junkers' converted Frederick the Great from a mild and peace-loving gentleman into a war lord. We are taking a big gamble on this new production, anticipating that we will have it ready to 'break' about the time the peace conference gets down to trying the ex-Kaiser for his crimes and bringing to justice all of his underlings who gave free rein to brutality in conducting the war."

Changed from Serial to Feature Form.

The new Gerard picture was first designed as a serial, and production was well under way when the Warners decided to condense sixteen episodes into one big feature. Mr. Warner told the World representative that William Nigh is directing the production at Biograph's old studios and that the story would be syndicated in the newspapers the way "My Fours in Germany" was handled when that work was released for the screen.

"We will handle the next Gerard story exactly as we did 'My Four Years in Germany,'" said Mr. Warner. "My brothers are supervising the production, and it will be released through First National, the route taken by Gerard's first picture. Right now the First National is distributing 'The Fighting Roosevelts,' which we produced and in which we have an interest with Mr. Collins. We look for a tremendous success for 'The Fighting Roosevelts' when it is generally released. Its showing at the New York Strand was a pre-release, but the picture will be shown throughout the country from now on."

When the World man asked Mr. Warner how "The Kaiser's Finish" turned out he said the signing of the armistice ruined the Warners' prospects for a "clean-up" on that one. The feature was a sensational construction that fed patriotism and depended upon active war conditions to make its appeal distinctive and fully profitable.

Jolts Cause No Loss of Sleep.

"We have lost no sleep over 'The Kaiser's Finish,'" Mr. Warner continued. "We are accustomed to 'jolts' in the picture business; in fact, our activities have been a series of 'jolts' and recuperations ever since we started in the picture business on a big scale about ten years ago. My brothers have been with me in several ventures—real ventures—that were innovations in film production and distribution.

"For instance, there were 'Warner's Features,' the first venture in multiple-reel subjects on a program basis. We started it, but our life in Youngstown, where we were born, and in Pittsburgh, where we established ourselves in business, did not contain enough of the 'politics' of the film business to teach us how to get away with our idea. We started 'Warner's Features' and we finished 'em. The business we established passed into other hands and we went back to Pittsburgh.

"But while we were at it we made things lively. We distributed the first of the Hearst news reels. One of these was President Wilson's inauguration, photographed in Washington, developed en route and shown that same evening at the New York Roof. We bought multiple-reel features where we could get them, distributed them on our program until United Features succeeded to our business."

"Four Years" Still Going Strong.

"'My Four Years in Germany' brought us back into the game," said Mr. Warner in concluding the interview, "and restored our fortunes as well. The first Gerard picture won back for us the many thousands we lost on 'Warner's Features,' gave us a surplus and is still going strong. We anticipate continued prosperity with the new Gerard picture, and are building the picture with a view to making it even a bigger moneymaker for the exhibitor than was 'My Four Years in Germany." In this determination they are likely to succeed.

The Warners Are Preparing for Early Release Another Multiple Reel Feature, by Ex-Ambassador Gerard, Destined to Become the Logical Successor to "My Four Years In Germany."

The Warner brothers have a way of dividing up their work that gives specialists to the departments of promotion and distribution. H. M. and A. are the business men in the firm. They were the ones who "discovered" Ambassador Gerard as a picture possibility, closed the contract and turned his work over to S. L. and J. L. Warner to produce.

The Warners are operating the same way with the new Gerard picture, the actual production being supervised by S. L. and J. L., while the other brothers will undertake the responsibilites of the business end.

"Team work" seems to be the big force behind the four Warners, and they certainly know how to make "team work" profitable and beneficial.

BEECROFT BUYS FOREIGN FILM RIGHTS

Will Distribute in Continental Europe and Egypt Output of the Robertson-Cole Company

BETWEEN $800,000 and $1,000,000 are involved in a deal just consummated whereby Chester Beecroft, the American exporter, obtains the rights to the entire film output of the Robertson-Cole Company for continental Europe, which includes France, Belgium, Holland, Switzerland, Spain, Portugal and Italy. In addition, Mr. Beecroft obtains the rights for Egypt. Prior to the consummation of this transaction Mr. Beecroft was in control of the Robertson-Cole attractions in Russia, Finland, Norway, Sweden and Denmark.

Mr. Beecroft is now on his way to Europe. He sailed for London January 24, and on his arrival will start immediately for Paris, whence he will go to Copenhagen, Denmark, where he will make his headquarters. Mr. Beecroft also has headquarters in Paris, but transacts most of his business from the Copenhagen office. At the time of his departure Mr. Beecroft expected to remain abroad for about two months, making preparations to exploit the list of stars who will come under his control in Europe through his arrangement with Robertson-Cole.

Nearly two hundred productions are involved in the contract just closed. In addition to thirty independent productions, fifty-two Billie Rhodes comedies and twenty-six Jester mirth provokers, Mr. Beecroft will now have to exploit in continental Europe the following leading stars of the screen world:

H. B. Warner, Sessue Hayakawa, Bessie Barriscale, Henry B. Walthall, Billie Rhodes, William Desmond, Alma Rubens and Grace Darmond. Each of these stars, with the exception of Miss Darmond, will be featured in eight productions under which the domestic distribution rights are held by Exhibitors Mutual and the world rights by Robertson-Cole.

Has Rights to All Productions.

Beecroft obtains the Continental rights, not only to the productions now handled by Robertson-Cole Company but also to all the offerings that will be made for them during 1919.

The United Kingdom rights to the Robertson-Cole photoplays will be handled directly out of the London office of the big export concern. Marcus Beeman, formerly of the Film Division of the Committee on Public Information, will have charge of this office, as previously announced, and will leave shortly for his post. All prints will be made in London and supplied to the London office of Robertson-Cole.

Comedies, dramas and spectacular features have been obtained by Mr. Beecroft for his exploitation in Europe. Some of the pictures which he will sell under his contract with Robertson-Cole were sensations in the United States and Canada and have such universal appeal that they are bound to meet with popular approval in Europe. Mr. Beecroft considers that pictures of the lighter vein will appeal to the war-worn people of Europe, and it is this type of picture that Robertson-Cole caters to largely.

Champion Crown Princer Is Earl Schenck, Metro

EARL SCHENCK is the world's champion Crown Prince. His latest, and what he himself considers his best portrayal of the Kaiser's heir is in the great Screen Classics, Inc., production, "Why Germany Must Pay," which has just been released by Metro. But previous to that Mr. Schneck had appeared as the Crown Prince in "My Four Years in Germany," "To Hell with the Kaiser," "The Kaiser's Finish" and in "The Great Victory."

This attractive young actor, who on five occasions has portrayed one of the two most unpopular persons in the world today, remarked that he must be the ideal type for the part.

"You see," he laughed, "I was a distance runner when I was at Ohio State University. I've had the proper training."

Earl Schenck.

The chance to go on the stage came with an offer from the manager of a repertory company touring the Middle West. The end of this engagement brought him to New York, and not long after he again was on the road, in another company of the same sort. Later he filled a Broadway engagement in "Way Down East."

A war picture was Mr. Schenck's first screen opportunity. It was a story of the Civil War, however, the first of its kind, entitled "The Volunteer Organist." Since then he has appeared in short Pathe films, in a Government picture, "The Americanization of Stephen Skoles," "The Isle of Love," one of the many made during a year's work with Gaumont, with Ethel Clayton in "The Madness of Helen," with Gail Kane in "The False Friend," and in "Weavers of Life."

Carl Pierce, on Coast, Finds Trade Improving

COMING from the northern reaches, Carl H. Pierce, service manager of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has arrived in California and visited the Lasky studio at Hollywood. Mr. Pierce is constantly traveling, calling on exhibitors of Paramount and Artcraft pictures throughout the country and lending the advantage of his long experience to the solution of their various problems. He also makes it a practice to visit the studios of the company whenever possible, thereby keeping in touch with the activities in the production end, which enables him to keep the exhibitors advised and, generally speaking, to keep his finger upon the pulse of the industry in all its branches.

"I found business generally in an improved condition throughout the country," said Mr. Pierce. "The prevalence of sickness has been the greatest difficulty with which exhibitors have had to contend, but this is gradually being eliminated and I think that the present season will prove highly satisfactory. Service is the order of the day."

Mr. Pierce, whose headquarters are at the New York office, will probably be in California for a week or so longer before taking to the road.

Tasker Transferred to Community.

Fred E. Tasker has transferred his activities from the war personnel department of the Y. M. C. A. to the Community Motion Picture Bureau at 46 West Twenty-fourth street, New York. In connection with the Y. M. C. A. work he passed on a great many of the supervisors who went overseas to run the motion picture entertainments. He is temporarily director in the industrial department.

Betty Compson with Desmond.

Betty Compson, for some time principal comedienne in Christie Comedies, has graduated into the ranks of the more staid leading women of comedy-drama and is lending charm to "The Prodigal Liar," a Jesse D. Hampton production, as leading woman for William Desmond. This picture is a forthcoming Exhibitors Mutual release.

CORRALLING PRACTICAL EXPERIENCE

John Emerson, Moving Picture Director, and Anita Loos, Writer of Screen Successes, Express Their Views on Team Work as Applied to Building Up a Scenario

By Edward Weitzel

BEFORE John Emerson became a moving picture director he wrote stage plays, rehearsed them and acted their principal characters. Before Anita Loos became a scenario writer it is a safe guess that she jumped rope and played with paper dolls.

The first time the writer was in the same room with John Emerson the future director stood in front of a branch of the Drama League and told the members a lot of interesting things about a play then running at a Broadway theatre. He has confessed since that it was a very trying experience—for himself. His hearers did not find it so. The chairman of the meeting may have been badly scared, but he disguised any traces of stage fright, as is the way with all good actors, and handled his subject with a skill born of practical experience. When he entered the moving picture industry it is quite beyond doubt he found his knowledge of stage technic of considerable value, although persons without such experience have been known to speak lightly of the matter.

The first time Anita Loos and the representative of the Moving Picture World were in a position to exchange views on the worth to a scenario writer of training in play construction the talk took place over five o'clock tea in the apartment of the screen's wittiest creator of sub-titles. John Emerson was present.

The Advantage of Team Work.

A three-cornered interview looked promising. It opened with a remark by the hostess about the latest Emerson-Loos scenario.

"Mr. Emerson and I have been busy all the afternoon cutting and titling a picture," said Miss Loos.

"You were a successful scenario writer before you went into partnership with Mr. Emerson. Do you mind telling me why you did so?"

"I wanted the benefit of his knowledge of dramatic construction. I could manage thinking out a story by myself and writing sub-titles for it, but one day Mr. Emerson went through a scenario of mine and made several suggestions about its long lines and explained the playwright's method of suspense and action, and right there I commenced to understand the advantage of having a man with his sort of 'know how' in the firm."

The young woman who supplied a number of Douglas Fairbanks' early successes looked over at her collaborer for confirmation of her remark, but he shook his head.

"Miss Loos is too modest," he said.

"No, I'm not," exclaimed the hostess. "It isn't modesty; it's business sense."

Sauce for the Gander.

It was now the director's turn to be interrogated.

"If it's a fair question, Mr. Emerson, do you mind confessing your reason for going into partnership with a successful builder of scenarios?"

The man whose grasp of his calling was broad enough to permit of his directing the Tree production of Macbeth and follow it immediately with a Fairbanks comedy smiled as he answered:

"Because I was not a successful scenario writer and my business sense told me that a partnership with one was bound to be a good thing—for me, at any rate."

"That sounds reasonable—as the old fellow used to say in the 'rube' drama—but I'm inclined to take Miss Loos' version of the argument. There are so many moving pictures that would be vastly improved by just such team work as you and your collaborator are capable of it is to be regretted there are not more partnerships of the same kind."

"Stick to the Main Road."

"That's true. Story telling before a theatreful of people is entirely different from writing fiction to be published in a book. There are well-defined laws of construction that should be mastered by every one who attempts to write a scenario. However interesting a story may be in itself it will have greater effect upon a body of spectators if it follows the rules of the playwright, whose master-rule—first, last and always—is, 'Stick to the main road.'"

"Five years ago you would have been accused of heresy for expressing such views, Mr. Emerson. It was generally considered the proper thing about that time for a scenario writer to boast that he knew nothing of the stage method of constructing plays and to thank his lucky stars for his unfamiliarity with so outworn and misleading an art. One moving picture concern, now out of business, had a scenario writer who took particular pride in publishing his belief in such a creed."

"The film world has grown wiser since then," was the dramatist-director's comment.

The Disadvantage of Padding.

Conversation next drifted into a discussion of the merits of several important moving pictures, and a light was thrown on the error of not cutting out every foot of film which retards the correct mental and physical action of the story. A difference of opinion over the merits of one of the pictures was accounted for when Mr. Emerson's remark that he enjoyed it very much brought out the following reply from the interviewer and the subsequent explanation:

"I am sorry to say I didn't. The story itself is splendidly human and strongly dramatic, and, taken separately, the producing and the acting are fine; but the picture doesn't move as it should. Several of the most dramatic scenes are stretched out so long they overshoot the mark, and the tension is perceptibly weakened."

"When did you see the picture?" asked the Paramount director.

"At a special showing the night before the regular opening. It was then in eleven reels and ran two hours and a half."

A Half Hour's Difference.

"Go and see it again and you'll change your opinion. It runs two hours now and is as tense and sharp as skilful cutting can make it."

"I'll go tomorrow afternoon, and I'm satisfied I shall agree with you. So many pictures need some one with real drama instinct to tell him when to stop the heroine from running wild-eyed about the room or the villain from trying to kick in the door."

"To sub-title your remark," put in Miss Loos: "A situation is like an argument—when you've convinced the other fellow stop talking."

"Or change the subject! I'm convinced that the Emerson-Loos combination has the right understanding of screen drama, so kindly give me the firm's views on Prohibition and whether it thinks the new law will help the moving picture."

Bravery by the Pint.

Miss Loos had her answer ready first.

"I knew of one time when it didn't," she exclaimed.

"I know of several," chimed in her partner.

"Tell us about your time," said the interviewer to Miss Loos.

"It wasn't my time," she replied. "It happened when David Griffith was making a picture and his favorite dare-devil was the victim—I mean the beneficiary—of Prohibition. The stunt man was an Indian, who would try anything required of him if sufficiently encouraged by liberal doses of fire-water. The day before the famous director was ready for him to do a leap or something of the sort Mr. Redman joined the church and signed the pledge. The next day he refused all offers of fire-water and also refused to do the leap. Mr. Griffith had no one to take the Indian's place, so there was only one way out of it: He got a dispensation for his employe to break his pledge for one day; the Indian took on a full cargo of courage, and the stunt was filmed."

SKY-ROUTE DELIVERY FOR PATHE NEWS

Bird Men Filling Reels of Film With Aerial Scenes Also Make Emergency Distribution.

A PATHE cameraman was the first news operative in history to obtain a photographic record while looping the loop in an aeroplane, and this remarkable picture, which was shown in Pathe News No. 7, released on January 18, immediately aroused discussion and commendation. The man who accomplished this feat was Thomas Baltzell, and it is the culmination of a series of remarkable camera feats that have been done in the air.

First a Pathe News cameraman secured photographs of the departure of the "George Washington" with the presidential party aboard, grinding his camera while perched on the edge of the car of a dirigible balloon. They are combined air and marine views, taking in the upper and lower bays of New York and reaches of the Atlantic, showing not only the maneuvering of the ships of the sea, but also the swift gliding craft of the air.

Emanuel Cohen, editor of the Pathe News, also commends the work over New York City by Carl W. Fassold and H. P. Blauvelt, two of Pathe's oldest and best photographers. Their shots were made from a giant Caproni biplane piloted by Captain Edward L. Williams, one of the most daring airmen in the United States service. Here again they enjoyed ideal conditions of light and atmosphere, and some of the close-ups of the towering landmarks of New York and the intimate view of the Statue of Liberty have never before been recorded.

While the Pathe News has been foremost in aerial work, the finished film itself has been sent by plane on several occasions, both by special emergency service and by aerial post. J. J. Farren, manager of the Victoria and Murray theatres, Rochester, N. Y., believes the Pathe News is the strongest constant feature he shows.

Delivers Film by Airplane.

Calculating that one of the issues would not reach him in time for a special exhibition which he was giving to a group of patriotic organizations, Mr. Farren called up the Buffalo exchange to deliver the case of film to the Curtiss Aviation Field, at the end of the Buffalo city line. Within an hour after he had called up the film was delivered in Rochester by the airman. The manager of the Superba Theatre, Delaware, O., last week returned an issue of the Pathe News to the Cleveland branch by aerial service.

Arthur H. Sawyer Goes South.

Arthur H. Sawyer, supervisor of productions for S-L Pictures, the newly-formed organization, has been confined to his bed for several weeks with influenza. He was stricken following the completion of the initial Sawyer-Lubin production, starring E. K. Lincoln. Mr. Sawyer left New York last week for a month's stay at Palm Beach, Fla., where he hopes to recuperate his strength.

Marin Sais.

Marin Sais Plays Opposite to Star in "Bonds of Honor"

MARIN SAIS, one of the best known leading women on the West Coast, plays opposite Sessue Hayakawa, the great Japanese actor, in "Bonds of Honor," made by the Haworth Pictures Corporation for release through the Exhibitors' Mutual exchanges.

Miss Sais is a true "native daughter." She was born and raised in California, and practically her entire theatrical and motion picture career has been spent in the Golden West.

The young leading woman has been featured in numerous William Fox productions. She has been cast in all sorts of roles, and, thoroughly equipped for outdoor sports by her training at Notre Dame Academy in San Jose, she has often been called upon to exhibit her horsemanship and acquatic ability before the camera.

Starting her theatrical life by playing in stock and then jumping to musical comedy, Miss Sais later turned to the screen, and, among other productions, she has been featured in "Harvest of Gold," "The Son of Cain" and "The False Prophet."

In "Bonds of Honor," with Hayakawa, Miss Sais, chosen for the part because of her marked beauty, is accorded a character that will win for her warm comment from critics, it is predicted by the Haworth corporation.

BRANHAM HITS HIS STRIDE IN DETROIT

Majestic's New Manager Keeps Up the Record Established in Minneapolis as King of Stunts

DETROIT'S theatrical managerial newcomer—Charles P. Branham—has already convinced the Motor City that he was worthy of the reputation gained while in Minneapolis of being the "most sensational showman" ever in that territory and whose history was recently described in the Moving Picture World.

Although in town only a few weeks Branham's first treat to the public was given the week ending January 18, which concluded seven days' showing of "The Midnight Patrol," a Select Special at the Majestic Theatre. Business for the week was the best since the opening week of "The Unbeliever," which holds the attendance record of the house. It was all the way in which Manager Branham handled "The Midnight Patrol" that made it go over so big. First of all, he used twelve-inch daily ads in the newspapers a week before the opening; he posted about 100 twenty-four-sheets and many window cards, one-sheets, etc.

On Saturday and Sunday of the week the picture was to open he went to 20-inch space, and during the week he used more than the ordinary amount of space. Incidentally, he dedicated the picture to the Detroit Police Department. This was unsolicitedly. One night during the week he had the Detroit Police and Drum Corps of twenty-five members march from the central station to the theatre, where they rendered several selections. It is just this sort of thing that has made Branham "the king of stunts." He is always doing them.

The week of January 19 the Majestic played a Goldwyn picture, "A Perfect Lady," with Madge Kennedy. Did he sit still and do nothing? Not at all. He did a lot of advertising, both newspapers and billboards, and at the theatre had eight chorus girls do several numbers on the stage during one of the cabaret scenes of the film. From a real act the scene faded back to the picture where the girls were still doing their number. It was done very cleverly and it was a complete surprise to the audience.

Manager Branham will pull a "stunt" weekly—in fact, whenever he can see the opportunity. It all depends on what the feature is. SMITH.

Broadway Brightened by Big Selznick Illuminations

TWO big electric signs, advertising Selznick Pictures, have been installed at Times Square. These carry the simple announcement "Myron Selznick Presents Olive Thomas in 'Upstairs and Down,' Direction Charles Giblyn." This is the first step taken by Selznick Pictures Corporation in a nation-wide campaign of advertising.

One of these signs, 32 by 34 feet, is on Broadway between Forty-fifth and Forty-sixth streets, and is of an especially novel though simple design. The letters of the word "Upstairs" in "Upstairs and Down" run upwards on a diagonal, each letter standing on the outline of a step of stairs. The lettering on the sign burns steadily, only the outline of the stairs flashing on and off. Each step flashes separately, giving the impression of an ascending movement. This installation was worked out as a suggestion for exhibitors who will later be booking the picture.

The other sign, at Forty-second street and Seventh avenue, is about the same size, but owing to the shape it was impossible to use the stairs design, which calls for an almost square area of illumination.

Negotiations are now under way for still a third Selznick Pictures sign. Arrangements have been practically completed for this structure which, when in operation, will be the largest amusement sign of its kind in the city and will practically blanket Times Square with Selznick Pictures illuminations so that from no point of this center of the world's theatrical life will it be possible to escape the Selznick advertisements.

INDIANA TO GET LIMITED SUNDAY BILL

Senator McCray Withdraws 1917 Measure and Will Introduce Another—Opposition Promised

THE bill legalizing Sunday motion picture shows in Indiana, which was vetoed by Governor Goodrich at the end of the 1917 session of the state legislature, has been killed in the senate on motion of Franklin McCray, senator from Marion county, the author of the measure. The senate's action in the matter clears the way for the introduction of a new bill on the Sunday closing question and it is reliably reported that such a measure is to be presented soon.

In offering the motion for indefinite postponement, Senator McCray explained that exhibitors and other persons interested in a bill to legalize Sunday motion picture shows did not want a measure providing for all-day exhibitions, but only after 2 o'clock in the afternoon. The senator's first motion was to have the bill sent back to the committee with instructions that it be reported for indefinite postponement. Some question, however, was raised as to the proper parliamentary procedure and a motion finally prevailed that it be postponed indefinitely.

The bill, as introduced by Senator McCray in 1917, provided for all-day exhibitions, but in the house it was amended to permit shows to open at 2 o'clock in the afternoon. In the haste of enrolling the measure on the last night of the session the original senate measure was substituted for the amended bill. Governor Goodrich then vetoed the bill because of the all-day provision. Under a constitutional requirement, the vetoed bill was referred to the present legislature.

Senator McCray, it is understood, will introduce a bill in the senate in the near future permitting motion picture performances to begin at 2 o'clock on Sunday afternoon.

Charles W. Jewett, mayor of Indianapolis, who has issued a statement setting forth his approval of the operation of motion picture shows on Sunday, expressed his opposition to any enactment by the state legislature to legalize theatres and Sunday shows without giving each community full power to regulate the situation according to its own needs. It is understood that this kind of a bill probably will be introduced.

Vigorous protests against any change in the Sunday laws which would permit the opening of motion picture houses on the Sabbath have been registered by various ministerial associations and other organziations in the state. Strong opposition is also scheduled to come from a number of the women's organizations in the state and from other sources.

Reintroduce Legalizing Measure.

As an aftermath of the 1917 session of the legislature, Lieutenant Governor Bush on Thursday placed before the senate for further action the motion picture measure passed at the last session but vetoed by Governor Goodrich. The measure was intended to legalize Sunday picture shows, but was vetoed by Governor Goodrich when he discovered that the clause which permitted the shows after 2 p. m. had been altered when being transmitted from the senate to the house and made to permit shows all day on Sunday.

In handing down the vetoed measure, Lieutenant Governor Bush said the picture men were already busy again in the senate, referring to the fact that photographers had placed a camera in the rear of the chamber, with which a flashlight of the members was taken. No action was taken on the measure, but it is presumed no attempt will be made to pass it over the Governor's veto and that another bill will be substituted.

Canadians to Make Big Historical Production

ANNOUNCEMENT has been made at Regina, Sask., that one of the greatest moving pictures ever made in Canada is to be produced in that city during the present year. The production is to be a historical record of the birth and growth of the Canadian West with its romantic advance, red-blooded outdoor life and troublesome early days. One of the features of the picture will be to stage a replica of the Northwest Rebellion of 1885 which ended with the execution of the rebel chief, Louis Riel at Regina. Running through the story will be a representation of the part which the Royal Northwest Mounted Police has played in the growth of the Canadian West. One of the details will be a comparison between the houses, shacks and trading posts of the early days compared with the fine cities of to-day.

The prime purpose of the picture is to tell the world about Western Canada. The scenario is being prepared by Frank Spearman, author of "Nan of Music Mountain," "Whispering Smith," "The Daughter of a Magnate" and other stories. His contract calls for the payment of $12,000, half of which is to be paid immediately. It is to be a propaganda picture on a large scale and Western Canadian newspapers have already become greatly enthused over the proposition.

The managing director of the picture is to be Robert MacArthur, of Toronto and Los Angeles, it is announced, and he will make his headquarters in Regina for the present. His estimate for the cost of the picture is $370,000 and the length will be ten reels. Several thousand Canadian soldiers are to be used in the making.

According to announcements, the picture will be completed in September and will be released before the end of the year.

Cincinnati's Old People's To Be Opened by Syndicate

IT has been announced that the old People's Theatre, on Vine street, between Twelfth and Thirteenth, Cincinnati, is to be reopened as a moving picture and vaudeville house, under the ownership of a syndicate of well-known Cincinnatians, and that a corporation to be known as the People's Amusement Company will handle the house.

Among those interested in the deal made with Heuck's Opera House Company, which owns the theatre, are Thomas A. Reilly, one of the leading figures in local moving picture circles, and active head of the companies operating the Colonial, the Avenue and the Center Theatres; Thomas J. Noctor, well known in political circles; Joseph Ante, manager of the Hippodrome Theatre, and George Talbot, scenic artist at the Grand and Lyric Theatres.

The house will be redecorated throughout and placed in first-class condition for its new use. The lease is for five years, with a renewal privilege, it is understood.

Treasury Department Figures.

The Treasury Department has just compiled figures showing its receipts from various sources under existing revenue laws for the six months beginning with July 1 and ending with December 31, 1918, at the same time showing a comparison with the funds secured by the Government from similar sources during the same period of 1917.

An increase of $83,700.22 is noted in the seating-capacity taxes assessed against theatres, museums, circuses, etc., for while the Government obtained $632,897.66 during the last six months of 1918, it had only obtained $549,197.44 during the last six months of 1917. The receipts from this tax in December, 1918, were $18,457.95, as against $16,440.25 in December, 1917, an increase of $2,017.70.

Paul Bryan Goes Abroad.

Paul M. Bryan, who has been connected with the Gaumont Company's American organization, with headquarters in Flushing, L. I., for some time, left New York January 30, on an extended tour of Europe in the interests of his firm. Mr. Bryan sailed from Halifax, with London slated as his first objective. His passports have been viséd for England, France, Italy and Belgium.

For a long time there have been stories to the effect that the Gaumont Company intended to resume operations in this country on a large scale, and the arrival in the United States in the comparatively near future of Charles Gaumont, active head of the Gaumont organization, would not be a surprising development.

OPEN DRIVE AGAINST RENTAL TAX

National Association Stirs Exhibitors to Need of Action Against Measure Taxing Film Rentals 5 Per Cent.—Urge Signed Petitions to Impress Congressmen

THE success attained by producers and managers of legitimate theatres and attractions in flooding Washington with petitions, when the matter of 20 per cent. admission tax on theatre tickets was being considered in Congressional committee, has inspired the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry to "get busy" in similar manner on the pending matter of the 5 per cent. tax on film rentals that is before the conference committee of Congress. The executive committee of the Association, January 25, has caused to be sent to the forty-eight state chairmen the long telegram we reproduce herewith, urging immediate action by exhibitors throughout the country.

In effect the Association urges every exhibitor to awaken his patrons to the likelihood of increased admissions should the rental tax stand in the War Revenue Bill as now proposed. The 20 per cent. ticket tax was eliminated when the legitimate managers secured signed petitions from audiences in theatres throughout the country and mailed them to the Congressional Committee. The former tax of 10 per cent. was continued in the new measure.

Association Stirs Exhibitors.

Now the National Association is stirring exhibitors to their own defense, urging, through the various state chairmen, that showmen turn themselves into four-minute men (or else secure the services of a competent speaker), make brief speeches to their audiences and have ready to sign petitions that shall be at once sent to Washington. The Association claims that the film tax will increase admissions more than the proposed 20 per cent. ticket tax would have done, and are prevailing upon exhibitors to point out that the rental tax would amount to discrimination against the poor man's amusement while patrons of high priced theatres would not be compelled to pay more than the usual 10 per cent. that has been required of them as a war measure. Here is the telegram that was sent to Association state chairmen:

The legitimate theatres through capable and intelligent four-minute men, followed by the distribution of petitions protesting against the 20 per cent. tax on admission tickets, so flooded the post office with petitions, and thus so impressed the conference committee of the House and Senate, as to cause that committee to strike the additional tax from the revenue bill.

Our own situation with regard to the 5 per cent. tax on film rentals is similar, in that it will be necessary for all picture theatres to substantially raise their admission price. We have not sufficient time to prepare and distribute trailers, but a concerted, powerful and effective protest can be made by each exhibitor himself acting as a four-minute man, or by obtaining a trained four-minute man from his neighborhood.

Have the speaker briefly point out what the screen has done for the Government and the people in support of the war; that the screen has been the school of American patriotism; that it is the chief means of entertainment and education of all classes of the American public to the extent that it not only has become an essential, but a necessary part of the lives of the people; that the tax of 5 per cent. on rentals is calculated to raise between five and six million dollars, and that this will mean that admission prices of all theatres must necessarily be increased, thus preventing a substantial percentage of the public from continuing to receive the education and entertainment of the motion picture, as well as causing the closing of many picture houses and the consequent destruction of large investments in every branch of the industry; that there is no more reason for taxing the film rental than there is for taxing the scenery and properties of the stage production, and that, consequently, the tax on film rentals is not only a discrimination against the motion picture, but it is likewise a tax upon the masses of the people, whereas no such tax is imposed on the comparatively few who attend the legitimate theatres.

Also use slides, and, wherever possible, have film trailers locally made.

At once call mass meetings of exhibitors and their friends, as well as enlist the services of all local organizations. Obtain the greatest amount of publicity in all newspapers that the tax will mean the closing of many theatres, and the loss to the newspapers of advertising.

Execution of this plan will produce a result for the motion picture industry just as it did for the theatrical enterprises. The National Association has employed eminent council, and has done everything else within its power to obtain an elimination of the tax, but without avail. It is now clearly up to the exhibitors if they are to save themselves and the other branches of the industry from this destructive burden.

There is no exhibitor who cannot make a four-minute speech to his neighbors or who cannot obtain a neighbor to make that speech for him. If necessary, read this telegram to each audience as your speech and the public will be with you in this fight.

Every decent American will resent Congress excusing the opera patron from paying his 20 per cent. admission tax and at the same time making the purchaser of a ten-cent ticket to a motion picture theatre pay a 20 per cent. tax, which is exactly what this rental tax we ask you to fight plus the regular 10 per cent. admission tax will do in effect

Go After Congressmen's Exhibitors.

A second series of long telegrams were sent out from the headquarters of the Association in the Times Building, January 27. This second series was addressed to a specially selected list of live wire exhibitors residing in the home districts of the various members of the conference committee.

The members of the conference committee are Senator F. M. Simmons, Newborn, N. C., Democrat; Senator John Sharp Williams, Yazoo City, Mississippi, Democrat; Senator Hoke Smith, Atlanta, Democrat; Senator Boise Penrose, Philadelphia, Republican; Senator Henry Cabot Lodge, Nahant, Republican; Representatives Claude Kitchin, Scotland Rock, N. C., Democrat; Henry T. Rainey, Carrolton, Ill., Democrat; J. Hampton Moore, Philadelphia, Republican; Lincoln Dixon, Mount Vernon, Ind., Democrat, and Joseph W. Fordney, Saginaw, Mich., Republican. It is of the utmost importance that these men be reached by every exhibitor in the United States.

State Censorship Is Threatened in Missouri

CREATION of a State Board of Censors to pass on all moving picture films sold, leased or exhibited in the state of Missouri is provided for in a bill introduced in the House of Representatives at Jefferson City by Representatives Hackett of Pettis County and Ferguson of Ripley County, as house bill No. 327.

The bill provides for appointment of a board of three by the governor, two men and a woman, who must be "well qualified by education or experience" and who shall serve for three years. They must furnish a bond and will receive the following salaries:

The chairman, $3,000 yearly; vice-chairman, $2,500, and secretary, $2,400. In addition to the three salaried members of the board, there is to be one chief clerk at $1,800 a year, two stenographers at $1,000 each, two inspectors at $1,500 each, one operator at $1,400, another operator at $1,200, and assistant operator at $750, another at $600, and such other employes as are needed and approved by the governor.

In addition, the censors are to be paid their expenses and are to have headquarters provided for them in Jefferson City. The moving picture men must pay a fee of $1 for each film passed upon. The board also is given authority to pass on all film posters and advertising.

For failure to submit a film to the censors a penalty of not to exceed $3,000 fine, or sixty days in jail, or both, is provided, and for failure to display the censors' "O. K." on a film, a penalty of not to exceed $50 fine or thirty days in jail, or both.

Scores National Board of Review.

S. J. Baker, manager of the First National's St. Louis exchange, has sent out for publication the report of the committee of fifty, organized in the Mound City in April, 1917, for the purpose of investigating the matter of recommending state censorship of pictures. Briefly, this report charges that the National Board of Review is an incompetent censorship body; that it has failed in its efforts to prevent questionable productions from being shown to the public; that it is dominated by producers, and that its reviews are little short of farce.

This committee has recommended that state censorship of pictures shown in Missouri shall be governed by a law lately introduced in both branches of the state legislature at Jefferson City. Mr. Baker's communication is, unfortunately, of too great length to be accommodated for publication in the space the Moving Picture World has at present disposal.

Censorship Agitation Is Rife in North Carolina

DESPITE the threat of legalized censorship of pictures in North Carolina, exhibitors in that state seem to be paying little heed to the appeals made to them to be up and doing in combating the law which seems about to be enacted. The Washington Exchange Managers' Association, the members of which serve North Carolina exhibitors, continues to urge showmen by every sort of appeal to bestir themselves.

"Do it now and no regrets later" is the slogan. But despite the urgings of Secretary Henry B. Varner of the State Exhibitors' League, and the urge from Washington exchange men, exhibitors are declared to still be lax in an effort that will redound to their own financial benefit. President Samuel Gompers, president of the A. F. of L., has addressed a letter to Secretary C. G. Worley of the North Carolina State Federation of Labor, advancing arguments against censorship and urging organized labor to get behind the movement to combat the passage of the proposed law.

Everybody but the exhibitor himself seems to be going after the matter full speed—with a strong organized effort boosting for the law to be passed.

Ministers Fighting Pictures.

Ministers of Spokane and of Yakima, Wash., have started a movement to try to close all moving picture and other theatres or places of amusement on Sundays and have appointed committees to make further investigations relative to ordinances and report. Petitions have been circulated in Yakima asking signers to request the city commissioners of that place to close theatres on Sunday.

January 26 Attractions at New York Theatres

STRAND—D. W. Griffith's latest Artcraft picture, "A Romance of Happy Valley," was the feature at the Strand the week of January 26. The story has no war interest and is acted by Lillian Gish, Robert Harron, George Fawcett and the usual high grade Griffith cast. A comedy cartoon entitled "Bobby Bump's First Smoke," a scenic study, and the Strand Topical Review completed the film program. Alois Morrice and the Strand Quartette supplied the special musical numbers.

RIVOLI—"Cheating Cheaters," with Clara Kimball Young, headed the bill at the Rivoli. The picture is taken from the Max Marcin stage play and is vastly entertaining. A pantomime, "The Dance of the Yeggman," proceeds the picture. "Ask Father," a Harold Lloyd Comedy; a Prizma production called "Bird Island," and the Rivoli Pictorial were also shown. James Harrod was the soloist.

RIALTO—Tom Moore in the Goldwyn production of Willard Mack's story, "Go West, Young Man," was the screen star at the Rialto. Ora Carew, Jack Richardson, Edward Coxen and Melbourne McDowell are members of the cast. "The Little High Horse," a Bruce scenic; Mack Sennett's comedy, "Never Too Old," and the Rialto Pictorial were the other screen numbers. The vocal artists were Helen Rumsey and Edouardo Albano.

Gaumont Issues Roosevelt Picture.

To fill the demand for a short feature depicting the life of Theodore Roosevelt, the man who was loved by both friends and foes, the Gaumont Company has issued a two-reel special showing Mr. Roosevelt in many characteristic acts and poses, and illustrating the greatest acts of his life of strenuous endeavor.

The Gaumont Company calls attention to the fact that in the scenes in "The Real Roosevelt" the portraits are of the real Roosevelt. Many of the picturesque epigrams with which his vigorous vocabulary enriched our language are shown, as well as a number of the great achievements of the Roosevelt Administration.

WHY PICK ON THE POOR ADJECTIVE?

Logical Presentation of an Argument in Favor of Picture Advertising with Use of Descriptive Terms That Appeal to Imagination without Misrepresentation

By Harry Raver

TO attempt to eradicate the adjective from the vocabulary of the showman would prove as dangerous as depriving a baby of its milk. Who shall say that "to express the quality or attribute of the thing named, or to limit and define a thing as distinct from something else," is a crime, before the bar of some Graduate-Ad Men's Association or another, when our best authority, Dan Webster, makes the mission of the adjective so plain?

However, without personal axes to grind, it seems from the evidence at hand that R. H. Cochrane has made a case, when illustrating his experience with a certain brand of picture which suggestive art advertising failed to establish while the argumentative appeal proved successful; for in all branches of the amusement field the successful buyer of advertising space realizes that his appeal must be made to the average mind, the class representing the masses and not to the Tiffany type of consumer.

Besides, the showman offers entertainment, ever changing in style and dress, which deals with the personal or human element. It has no standard of quality except as measured by its appeal to the emotion. Not being a necessity, as compared with sugar, shoes and shirts for which standards have been established, the consumer attitude toward entertainment is somewhat different.

Theatregoers will patronize amusements season after season, compelled to sit through many plays and pictures not worth the price of admission and keep on attending the same theatres; but the same individuals, if disappointed in the wearing quality of a certain brand of shoes, will never buy any more of that kind.

Without the Adjective Appeal is Nil.

If it were possible to standardize the quality of the motion picture and make them all the same, it would still be necessary to advertise in the vocabulary best liked by the masses—the appeal to the imagination. But the motion picture is human. It is made up of a conflict of personality which differs largely in every production.

It cannot be approached in cold blooded fashion because there is nothing material or matter-of-fact about it, and the man who writes advertisements about motion pictures must realize the personal element he deals with and the intelligence of the man he seeks to interest. Without the adjective an appeal to the imagination is reduced to zero, with the rim rubbed off.

Harry Raver.

However ignorantly the impression has been created that the use of the adjective implies misrepresentation, nothing could be further from the truth. The Bible is a veritable storehouse of adjectives. Who shall say it lies?

Mr. Cochrane recognizes that "there has come to be a standard of honesty in all advertising that makes film advertisers beware of fooling the public." Glancing through the bound volumes of the World of four or five years ago convincing proof may be found that may have seen the light and that the most successful producers and distributers of today are recognizing the value of honesty as a standard.

Overtouted Companies Have Died.

Many overtouted companies have died and gone. Few of the class which played the consumer for an out-an-out "boob" are in the running today, and they have changed their methods to avoid disaster.

The trouble with most ad writers is their insane ambition to dazzle some rival publicist with their superiority. In their eagerness to impress their fellows the real target is often overlooked and the exhibitor wonders what the advertisement is all about.

Raymond C. Hill claims there should be provided a means for the return of the purchase price if the consumer is dissatisfied with his investment. He claims this would solve the whole problem of advertising the picture. But he forgets that the public does not use the motion picture as it does a commodity, but only sees it in the same light as a magazine, a newspaper. Besides, the public would have nothing to return when asking for a refund, in the event of dissatisfaction after seeing a picture, because the thing purchased was not material and could not be returned to the seller.

Don't Argue With the Box Office.

Our relations with the exhibitor may be summed up in a few words: He is not a literary genius or a judge of art. As a class he runs his theatre to make money and he thinks and speaks in the language of his box office. If a classic, costing a million, does not produce revenue for his theatre, that picture is no good. If another picture, inexpensively produced but understood and appreciated by his clientele shows big returns on the count-up, that picture is great!

The exhibitor believes in giving the public what it wants and doesn't believe in reform movements as applied to picture entertainment. If he reads the announcement of a new film production he measures the impression created upon himself by the reception such a picture might be given by his patrons, and he plays it up accordingly in his local exploitation. A bare-fact announcement of the same film would scarcely arouse his interest or cause him to get out and hustle in an effort to make its showing a success. His imagination must be stirred; his emotions played upon or he becomes a lifeless, mechanical machine, for the exhibitor in his locality is known as either a Live Wire or a Dead One and the public patronizes him accordingly.

America is the land of Publicity, the home of the Adjective. Let her banner ever wave!

OTTAWA SHOWMEN REPORT PROSPERITY

Moving Picture World Representative Visits Dominion Capital and Finds Fine Theatres

NAT BREGSTEIN, traveling representative of the Moving Picture World, has finished his tour of Canada, with visits to Ottawa, Toronto and Hamilton, and is now skipping from town to town in territory surrounding Chicago. His reports on conditions in Canada are uniformly favorable, and point to a keen revival of public interest in pictures since the armistice began to shape industrial conditions back to normal.

In Ottawa Bregstein found a good show town, with its many picture theatres exceptionally well patronized. The Ottawa Journal is conspicuous for its co-operation in picture publicity, maintaining a fine department, edited by Will McLoughlin, who runs two pages of well selected reading matter on Saturday, with liberal space scattered through the week. Showmen, in reciprocity, patronize the Journal with liberal Saturday display and "directory" space on other days.

Allan's Regent, management of J. T. Moxley; beautiful theatre, large capacity; 15 to 35 cents. Said to be the first house in the Dominion to introduce community singing.

Casino, H. W. Vance, manager; combination of "tab" shows and pictures; 15 to 25 cents; good business.

Theatre Francais, Mr. Bureau, manager; seats 1,400; 5 and 10, with fair business reported for straight pictures.

National, seats 975; 10 and 15 cents; neighborhood house, doing fair business.

Family and Imperial—management, Harry Brouse, who holds First National franchise for Eastern Canada. Mr. Brouse is also interested in the York Theatre, Toronto. Imperial seats 1,172; has $35,000 organ, and fine program. The Family is a combination house. Manager Brouse is very optimistic.

Center Theatre, B. F. Stapleton, who is associated with Harry Brouse in the First National franchise. Seats 1,200; 15 to 35 cents.

Strand, managed by H. Jennings, who came to Ottawa from Brooklyn a year ago. Seats 700; 15 cents straight.

Give Hull the "Once Over."

Ottawa being closed for Sunday shows Bregstein crossed the bridge and gave Hull the "once over." Here, in a town of 25,000, are three theatres doing business. The Princess, seating 300; the Odium and Eden. The last two owned by Paquin Brothers. Patronage is mostly French, and as the French papers will not accept advertising copy from theatres showmen here have no newspaper publicity whatever.

From Ottawa Bregstein traveled to Toronto and Hamilton, his reports on these towns being reserved for another issue. In visiting theatres Bregstein advances the subscription interests of Moving Picture World, gets the views of exhibitors on business conditions and gathers information of value to distributors. During his travels in the last four months of 1918 Bregstein added more than 1,000 annual subscriptions to the World's list, and he is ahead of his average during his tour of Canadian cities. He reports uniform courtesy at the hands of exhibitors and is finding out how well the World stands with its exhibitor-subscribers.

Agnes Johnston, Scenarist

AT the age of twenty-one years Agnes Christine Johnston is special scenario editress for Mary Pickford. She has already arranged "Daddy Long Legs" and "My Crescent Moon" since she and Miss Pickford went to the coast about two months ago. From early childhood Miss Johnston has displayed an active imagination, and after graduation from high school she looked forward to a college career, but in the meantime she had become so proficient in scenario writing and adaptation that she decided to apply her talent in that direction and assist her younger sister to enter Vassar College, where she is now in her sophomore year. Last summer Miss Johnston took a special course in playwriting at Harvard to fit her for the exacting duties in which she is now engaged.

Agnes Johnston

Miss Johnston has written "Mrs. Slacker," "The Fear of Poverty," "The Shine Girl," "Pots and Pans Peggy," "Divorce and the Daughter," "An Amateur Orphan," "The Great Adventure," "The Fires of Youth" and many other releases of the Thanhouser-Pathe programs.

During her engagement with the Vitagraph company she wrote "Back to the Primitive," a Drew comedy; "Tried for His Own Murder," besides the adaptations of several well-known stories. One of the severest tests of her ability and perseverance, she says, was the arrangement in scenario form of "God's Country and the Woman." The story was given to her one morning and she was told to have it ready the following morning. She worked twenty-four hours without rest and turned the script in at the appointed hour. "Ancestry" is another picture of Miss Johnston's, released by American in 1915.

Associated Advertisers to Dine.

Routine business occupied the attention of the members of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, Inc., at their regular weekly luncheon, held at Wallick's January 23. President P. A. Parsons presided at the meeting, which was attended by over thirty members.

The association welcomed back to membership Lieutenant Harry Day, who for the past six months has been acting as Amusement Officer at Camp Upton, and Jacques Kopfstein, who recently received his discharge from the navy. Both spoke entertainingly of their experiences in the service.

Arrangements are being perfected for a dinner to be held by the members on the evening of February 15. Harry Reichenbach is the chairman of the committee in charge. The dinner will partake of the nature of a celebration of the homecoming of the members who have been in the service. Among the latter is Captain James Loughborough, who has just returned from France, who will tell of his experiences.

Tarkington Baker and A. L. Johnson, both of Universal, were elected to active membership.

Bach Succeeds Shurtleff.

C. E. Shurtleff, who has been associated with the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation for the past year in the capacity of general sales manager, has resigned. After a six weeks' vacation in California, Mr. Shurtleff will return to New York to affiliate himself with one of the several interesting projects now in the process of formation, which he will announce at a later date. Before joining the Hodkinson Corporation, Mr. Shurtleff was sales manager for Select.

W. A. Bach succeeds to the duties previously carried out by Mr. Shurtleff. Mr. Bach joined the Hodkinson organization a year ago in the capacity of assistant sales manager, previous to which time he was special representative for the Universal and sales and advertising manager for M. H. Hoffman, Inc.

OMAHA WELCOMES "VIRTUOUS WIVES"

Manager Thomas of the Rialto Arouses the Curiosity of Nebraska City's Residents and They Storm His Box Office for a Straight and Record-Destroying Week

Illustrated by Brinkerhoff

"WELL, there's a house record we won't break in a hurry," H. M. Thomas, manager of the Rialto Theatre, Omaha, Neb., held out to the gaze of his assistant a memorandum showing the total gross receipts for a week's run on "Shoulder Arms."

"We certainly stretched ourselves to the limit on that production," was the reply. "There wasn't an advertising possibility of any character that was overlooked. I suppose it will be six months before we can put over another big banner week like that. Talk about crowds! I didn't think there were so many people in Omaha."

Three weeks elapsed. Then Thomas spoke again about house records, this time to a reporter for the Omaha World-Herald, who knows as much about the motion picture business and the exhibitor's problems as any one can know without being the president of a film making or film distributing organization.

"That house record on 'Shoulder Arms' has been whipped," he told the reporter.

"I thought it would be," responded the newspaperman. "You had a bully campaign on that attraction last week."

"Say, only half of what I did in advertising, publicity and general promotion work shows on the surface. You don't know but fifty per cent. of the real dope on what we did to put that picture over to the biggest week that any theatre in Omaha has ever had on anything, whether it is motion pictures, vaudeville, legitimate road shows, patriotic assemblies or Presidential visits."

"What makes you think I don't?"

Sent Out 3,000 Fake Postals.

"Well, for instance, do you know that we sent out three thousand special postal cards to as many women, giving other women's opinions on the production?"

"No. How did you get the opinions of other women before you started the week's run?"

"That's just it. I didn't get them. They were faked, but, oh man, how they did pull! I selected the names of three thousand women from the city telephone directory, and to each of them I mailed a postal card, each one signed by a feminine name, such as Josephine, Maude, Elizabeth, Maxine and Eleanor. The cards read: '"Virtuous Wives" is some picture.'

"Great stuff!" the reporter commented. "What else did you do that didn't show in your newspaper advertising and publicity?"

"Well, did you see the lobby display?"

"No, not after the opening day. Was too busy to get around again that week."

Featuring Another Exhibitor's Opinion.

"Holuh, of the First National Exchange, received a letter from L. M. Garman of Lincoln, in which he said: 'Just finished playing Anita Stewart in "Virtuous Wives" and broke the house record for the year 1918. It is a hundred per cent. feature in every sense of the word. When will the next Anita Stewart feature be released?'

"I used that letter—the original copy—as part of the lobby display. And people surely did read it. I was just a bit doubtful about what effect another exhibitor's opinion on the production might have on the public. But by the way they read and obeyed you'd think they had known Garman for a lifetime and that he had taught George Washington how to tell the truth."

"Another little credit mark for you in the Pioneer column of the Novelty Promotion sheet," said the reporter. "Go on. I'm out of date."

"Do you remember what happened to George Monroe at Beatrice, Nebraska, on that so-called big feature he ran a few weeks ago? Remember, he opened to $300 the first day, and receipts on

But I recall that incident just to impress you more with the fact that Sunday's business was a turnaway from the moment we opened the doors, and on Monday, the second day, the crowds began mobbing the box office. The sidewalks and streets were jammed for a hundred feet either way. Wish Monroe had been here."

Even Music Store Had a Run.

"That's all right," interrupted the reporter, "but I am more interested in cause than effect. You haven't even offered yet to buy a drink in your excitement."

"And you should have heard the cussing out I got from A. Hospe, the music dealer," Thomas went on. "The Rialto orchestra made a feature number out of that composition called 'When You Look Into Her Eyes.' It made a tremendous hit with a packed house. And every house after the first show seemed to grow in its enthusiasm for it. And, oh boy, how that strain did tie up to the situations in the picture. Wowee! Well, as I was saying, Hospe telephoned me Monday night and wanted to know why the devil I didn't use my head, and let him know, in advance, about what we were going to do with 'When You Look Into Her Eyes.' The box office girl told me that there were about two hundred inquiries for the name of the song. And Hospe said he had seventy-four copies in stock, which were sold within three hours after the first show, and calls came for several hundred more."

Advertised Show in French.

"And now I'll tell you some things that perhaps you don't know," said the reporter. "Take that ad you ran in the papers on Monday, the one written in French and which you headed 'The Way They'd Advertise "Virtuous Wives" in Gay Paree.' That received more comment than any piece of copy that has been run in a local paper in months. I've heard dozens of people talking about it, and wishing they could read French. Guess they thought there was spice in the text."

"Search me, I can't read the language," replied Thomas. "It got my curiosity worked up, so I figured it would do the same for others."

"Oh! Boy! What a Week!"

"And on top of that you're a robber," the newspaper man charged.

"Who told you I played poker last night?" Thomas snapped.

"No one. I don't know what you did in poker, but you surely did steal the stuff the Omaha Bee put out to advertise the fact that they would begin next Sunday to publish serially the story of 'Virtuous Wives.'"

"Yeah. Let me tell you about that," and the face of the presiding genius of the Rialto fairly beamed. "I had decided on Tuesday that a four days' run on the picture wouldn't begin to exhaust the possibilities for patronage. So I 'phoned Holuh and got an extension of two days. I asked for three, but the print was booked to open somewhere else on Sunday. Then, on Thursday the Bee sprung that ad and big news announcement about the serial publication of the story.

Bee Wasn't Exactly Stung, But—

"Guess they thought I was going to be unable to make any use of the fact, because I had advertised to close the run on Thursday. They were willing to get the good will the production had created for the novel, so I didn't see why I shouldn't be willing to divert to the picture some of the nice things and fine opinions they had expressed about the story. You remember I used that ad on Friday, and let me tell you, the Sunday and Monday crowds would have been ashamed of their modesty and good conduct had they seen the way the later bunches stormed the box office.

"Wowee, what a week it was."

"Where did you get the dope from which you wrote the big ads for the picture?" the reporter inquired.

"Out of the press sheet. There's some wonderful promotion copy in that 'Virtuous Wives' press sheet I got from the exchange. I was enabled to use all of it, and, as you know, that is exceptional. The cuts were particularly good. It made a bang up campaign."

"Well, are you satisfied for the present without any more big banner weeks?"

"No, sir! I said a few weeks ago that we couldn't break the 'Shoulder Arms' record for at least six months. And it didn't take six weeks, and believe me, it was some record to break. Now I'm going to watch every chance to beat 'Virtuous Wives.' And next time there'll be a week's run, and an option of additional days without a break."

Predict Howling Success for Detroit Exhibitors

THE Detroit Association of Motion Picture Exhibitors, recently organized, is almost sure to be a howling success. It has started out along the right lines, dues are exceptionally low, it being the purpose of the organization to get all exhibitors affiliated and not to make any assessment unless conditions justify. Another meeting was held January 23 at the Hotel Tuller, which was largely attended.

The officers are Edgar F. Kirchner, Family Theatre, president; Harry Goldstein, Plaza Theatre, vice-president; King Perry, Luna Theatre, secretary; and J. C. Ritter, Rialto Theatre, treasurer.

There are a lot of problems confronting the Detroit exhibitors. For instance some very drastic and unreasonable amendments are being proposed to the new building code of the city which are a direct "slam" at the motion picture houses. Then the fire marshal's department is after the theatres "hot and heavy" with regard to standing room not only in the foyer but in the lobby as well.

There are other vital mattters affecting the industry which Detroit exhibitors are getting prepared to combat. So again we say that it looks as if this time there will be a real organization.

"Under Four Flags" for Schools.

Arrangements are being completed by the Division of Films whereby thousands of American school children will witness the Government's great Victory picture "Under Four Flags." Recognizing the timely interest of the picture and its remarkable historical interest as well as its patriotic appeal, many prominent educators have adopted the idea of securing the film for exhibitions in the schools. Denis J. Sullivan, manager of domestic distribution of the Division of Films, states that the interest among educators is intense, and that he is receiving applications for the film for school purposes from all over the country.

PROHIBITION WILL BENEFIT INDUSTRY

So Says Schlesinger, Back from a Long Trip, Basing Statement on Observations in Dry States

BACK in New York from a mid-west sales trip that started July 23 Leon Schlesinger, special representative of "The Manx-Man" company, gave some interesting impressions of exhibitor conditions as he found them on his half-year jaunt.

"The worst case of close-down that I encountered in my travels was in Macomb, Illinois, where the local exhibitors had to put the shutters up for fourteen weeks," said Mr. Schlesinger. "Very luckily I had my picture in just the week preceding the first of the 'flu' period. But a lot of communities recognized that fear was a friend of the epidemic and that diversion of thought was a prophylaxis. These went easy on their local exhibitors.

"I was gratified to learn on my return to Manhattan that the exhibitors had not been compelled to close at any stage of the sickness and that no community has had a better health record than New York. In the small town especially the motion picture show is the main diversion of the masses, and when you close it up you give the public extra time to think of its troubles.

"Exhibitors were very blue during the last stages of my trip over the prospects of the admission tax being doubled. Now that this has been settled for the best I am sure that many of them who were afraid to sign up for the expensive features will feel differently. The exchanges handling big pictures should feel this new optimistic spirit speedily.

Prohibition Will Benefit Pictures.

"My observations in dry territories through which I passed convinced me that in prohibition, too, the picture business will be benefited. The majority of exhibitors in those territories would not have 'booze' back for anything; and when the whole country becomes dry I do not see why the national exhibitor will not have that feeling. It was said on every hand in territories not yet gone dry that the present liquor people would become exhibitors after July 1, but this is not indicated in the already dry territories, where few ex-liquor people are to be found among the exhibitors.

"A great mistake was made by the producers and exchanges in neglecting to advertise in the trade papers during the close-down period. Exhibitors who were often too busy to digest the contents of the trade journals properly in ordinary times read them from cover to cover—first line to last—when they were compelled to stop their activities. It gave them a fine chance to get a line on the market, and many of them were surprised that the manufacturers and exchanges did not take advantage of this. I was glad to see the leading theatres in affected districts keep up their advertising in the local papers, although it was not devoted to any especial attraction and usually the size of the copy was cut."

Mr. Schlesinger said that the story that the World printed in September about his "hopping a freight" when he missed a passenger train at North Judson, Indiana, was "substantially true as printed," although the Rambler's cartoon was "slightly inaccurate" in showing him atop the caboose when as a matter of fact he had a very comfortable seat inside. Schlesinger came to New York for a conference with "Manx-Man" Sales Director J. L. Kempner. As this paper told at the time of his departure, Mr. Schlesinger's mission was to meet exhibitors face to face with exploitation plans on the "Manx-Man." In his work he was extended every facility by the Goldwyn exchanges, who have charge of the distribution of the picture. He visited Buffalo, Detroit, Chicago, Milwaukee, Fort Wayne, Du Bois, Springfield and eighty of the principal cities and towns in northern Indiana, southern Iowa, north Illinois and southern Wisconsin and secured dates for his attraction in every one of them.

Community President Goes to France.

President Warren Dunham Foster sails this week (January 31) to investigate the conditions obtaining in the overseas branches of the Community Motion Picture Bureau of New York, which distributes at cost, through the Y. M. C. A. and Foyer du Soldat, to the soldiers and sailors of all nations.

In Mr. Foster's party are A. H. Brunner, assistant to president; W. B. Patterson, of Philadelphia, general auditor; his assistant, Thomas A. Dye, of Pittsburgh; John T. Benning, of Wilkes-Barre; A. Gil-Spear, of Nazareth; Lieutenant Henry L. Armes, of Boston, and Edward R. Phelps, the overseas director for the bureau.

COMMON SENSE IN STUDIO MANAGEMENT

Milton Hoffman Applies It Around the Lasky Lot and Disclaims Any Desire To Be "Efficiency Man"

THREE years away from his old home town and back again to find everybody greeting him as a long lost brother is an experience that makes Milton Hoffman believe that it's a great life, weaken or not; and in Mr. Hoffman's experience is an inspiration to publicists—a silver lining to the cloud kicked up by the old mimeograph—for it was as a film publicist that the present manager of the Lasky studios in Hollywood landed in the film capital.

Now it is his job to keep 450 people busy, without waste of time or material, on a ten-acre tract in the heart of Hollywood and a ranch of 1,500 acres, twenty minutes away from headquarters. Stage room to the extent of 47,000 square feet must be kept in Mr. Hoffman's mind's eye while endless detail "feeds up" to the production of photoplays by six active companies.

The World representative, in his interview with Mr. Hoffman, started to say something about "efficiency," but the studio manager did a verbal back somersault and landed with both feet on the middle of the expression. "Call me a 'common-sense man,'" said Mr. Hoffman, "but never an 'efficiency man,' for that's all I aim to do—apply common sense to the problems of picture production."

Has Seen Plant Grow.

Six departments with responsible heads and assistants concentrate on the production of photoplays at the Lasky studios. When Mr. Hoffman started with Lasky there was a studio occupying 60 by 150 feet of space, and in three years the expanding plant has surrounded and absorbed the original building until it stands as the center of a vast expanse of glass roofs and subsidiary buildings that all graduate into the mammoth stages. Right now construction of three new property buildings is progressing nearly to completion—concrete structures that are the latest additional expanses of the original Lasky plant.

"In all of our departments," said Mr. Hoffman, "we employ specialists. Our painters and decorators are skilled workmen—specialists in their line. Every set for every production is planned in advance; studied out with an eye to the fitness of painting, draperies, properties and effects. From the time that the home office is advised that a story has been accepted for production and they have notified us that it has been purchased we specialize in that story as much as though it were the only production we were to make in the Lasky studios.

How the Ways Are Greased.

"Frank Woods, manager of the scenario department, goes over the story with me, and its course through the studio is mapped out. The continuity writer is designated and the director selected. Then the heads of the art, property, wardrobe, casting and research departments are put in touch with the situation, and preparations are begun to equip the production in advance of actual 'shooting.' When the director and his assistant are ready to begin everything they need is prepared, and the production travels along to completion without loss of time or material.

"This treatment of productions is nothing more than common sense," continued Mr. Hoffman, "and the overworked expression of 'efficiency' doesn't enter into the matter at all. We treat our employes like human beings for the reason that it is common sense to do so, particularly when we are so amply rewarded by their friendly co-operation. We have a time to begin work in the morning and a time to quit at night, but we make no effort to compel directors and players to conform rigidly to the time-clock operation of our system. There is no wilful waste of either time or effort, and we get the results we are after."

An Age of Specialization.

Mr. Hoffman referred again to the matter of specializing in the various departments he controls, and to illustrate his point declared that he had frequent applications from men who claimed they are "able to do anything there is to do with moving pictures." This class of men Mr. Hoffman never employs. He claims they are of a past era in pictures and are out of step with the present age of specialization.

"Those men are still in 'moving pictures,'" said Mr. Hoffman. "They do not realize that the production of motion pictures has become a specialized art and that everybody in the game must now be craftsmen. Everybody employed around a studio should be expert in some particular feature of the work, and to find these specialists and apply their abilities properly is my specialty."

During the past several days Mr. Hoffman has been renewing old acquaintances along Main street. He declares that while pictures are made on the West Coast the news and "politics" of the game are created right here in little old New York and always will be. He declared the transition from studio activities to a few days of big city life was refreshing; but it is not likely he will remain here long. In the few moments the World man visited him in Pete Smith's office messengers brought him a half dozen telegrams, and it looked more and more every moment as though the manager of the Lasky studios would reach under the desk for his hand-bag, grab his hat and hop the first train for Los Angeles.

"This 'seeing New York,'" said Mr. Hoffman, "is all right for an hour or two, but I'm used to being busy and I can't enjoy quiet city life. That's common sense, isn't it?" HILL.

Seely Goes Abroad to Push Robertson-Cole

WALTER HOFF SEELY, general manager of the division of films of the Robertson-Cole Company, 1600 Broadway, left New York on Wednesday, January 29, for Halifax, whence on Saturday, February 1, he will sail for England on the Aquitania. Mr. Seely is accompanied by Marcus Beeman, formerly of the Division of Films, Committee on Public Information, who will have charge of the new Robertson-Cole Company headquarters in London.

Primarily Mr. Seely is going abroad to superintend the opening of the London headquarters, and to complete the details in connection with the deal whereby Chester Beecroft recently obtained the Continental rights to all the Robertson-Cole photoplays produced in 1918 and which will be made during the present year.

Much significance to the future of the foreign film affairs of Robertson-Cole is attached to Mr. Seely's trip abroad at this time, when affairs on this side of the water are pressing enough to demand his attention almost every minute, but it is certain that the foreign activities of Robertson-Cole will be greater than ever following Mr. Seely's visit.

It was the intention of Mr. Seely when he left New York to remain abroad about five weeks. Most if not all of this time will be spent in London, although it is possible he will take a trip to Paris, which will be a center of activity for Chester Beecroft in his promotion of the Robertson-Cole films which have just come under his control.

The British headquarters of Robertson-Cole will be established, upon the arrival of Mr. Seely, at 93-95 Wardour street, London. Under the arrangements with Mr. Beecroft, the Robertson-Cole Company retains all the rights to its pictures for the United Kingdom.

Robertson-Cole are "going after" British trade. The signing of H. B. Warner, who is a great favorite with British filmgoers, was received by English exhibitors with approval, and the films starring this actor will be made with as much view to their appeal to Britishers as to Americans.

Trade Board Makes Correction.

The War Trade Board recently announced that cinematograph films had been placed on the free list for exportation to Switzerland. Shippers are now being advised that the inclusion of films in the list was incorrect and that films must still be consigned to the Societe Suisse de Surveillance, Berne, Switzerland.

RUBBERNECKING IN FILMLAND

Los Angeles Correspondent Personally Conducts Our Readers Through the West Coast Studios

By Giebler

IT'S all over. Filmland's fast and furious fortnight has passed into history. The tumult and the shouting have simmered down. The members of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit who visited with us have folded their tents like the Arabs and have wended their ways to their eastern and northern and southern and middle western homes.

A. H. Blank has returned to his Des Moines. Robert Lieber has gladdened the people of the Hoosier State with his benign presence once more. E. B. Richards is telling the folks down at New Orleans how much we have on them in the way of climate. J. D. Williams and David P. Howells and Walter Hayes are again pressing the flagstones of Broadway with their little feet.

Aaron Jones and Watterson Rothacker have returned to the city of winds and weather. E. H. Hulsey is eating up space in the papers of Dallas anent his return. H. O. Schwalbe has been welcomed by the brass band of Philadelphia. Fred Dahnken has returned to our would-be rival town, San Francisco. Claude Jensen is again settled in Seattle.

Kunsky Sent for His Family.

John Kunsky alone remains. Detroit is a fine, big town, but our sunshine got into John's system, and he sent for the wife and family, and is going to revel in climate for a few weeks more.

Many of the other members of the industry who came to help us entertain the First Nationals have also departed.

Samuel Goldwyn has gone; Winnie Sheehan has gone.

Adolph Zukor, J. A. Berst and Ricord Gridwell, Hiram Abrams and Benny Shelberg and others are still here, but in spite of that things are dull, and we have nothing to do but make movies and watch the movements of the Five Stars, who are busy getting themselves into shape for their new and revolutionary project of playing a lone hand in the production and distribution of pictures.

The visiting film magnates were welcome; far be it from us even to hint at anything to the contrary, but they did disturb the hitherto even tenor of our ways and make things difficult for some of our "personal representatives" whose clients demand a daily mention in the papers.

Personal Representatives Submerged.

It was almost impossible to get away with anything in the local press with just an ordinary movie star as a subject when the editors had such names as have graced our hotel registers during the past two weeks to ornament their pages with.

One personal representative complained bitterly to me about this condition.

"I'll bet," he said, "that if I was to have my star butt a bull off the bridge they'd want me to lead the bull up to the office of the paper and show him to the city editor, and even at that I might not get more than a paragraph on it."

Another thing that suffered was our afternoon and evening thespian lobby parade, a custom originated by some of our public-spirited players in their desire to help entertain the tourists.

An actor wearing his best street clothes, top hat and stick in one hand, light coat draped gracefully over the other arm, spats agleam from the recent elbow grease of the cleaners, was a grand sight as he marched down the wide lobby of our hotel, and one to make any tourist from Iowa or Michigan forget the price of his railroad ticket.

Interfered with Parading Players, Too.

There was a time when this spectacle was to be enjoyed without stint or cost, but during the trying days through which we have just passed, the practice was sadly interefered with.

The parade simply could not be staged with any kind of proper effect, with the usual wide lobby that led from revolving doors to tea room all cluttered up with film magnates of various kinds.

The parader was forced to dodge and side-step a bunch of film producers here, and sashay around a gang of exhibitors there, until he got clear out of his usual stride and looked just as if he were going somewhere in a hurry instead of trying to give the visitors a treat.

As one thespian succinctly said:

"Dammit, man, it takes all the drahma out of the thing."

This condition had the effect of keeping many of our players who are usually on exhibition, at home in their bungalows.

One evening just after the Famous Five made their declaration of independence, and excitement was running high, I was addressed by a tourist with a hawklike gleam in his eye and a bunch of post cards in his hand.

Helping Iowan to Rubberneck.

"Brother," he said, "you look like you might be pretty well acquainted around here."

I made modest acknowledgment of the fact.

"I am going to write a few cards back to the folks in Iowa, and I want you to point out some of the important people of the movies, so I can say 'Just saw So-and-So,' do you get me?"

I got him. Within easy eye-shot was at least a score of big ones.

"Look right over there by the post," I said. "That tall man is T. L. Tally; talking with him is Hiram Abrams; the fellow with the Texas hat is E. H. Halsey."

"Wait," said the tourist. "Don't go so fast. What are their stage names?"

I explained that the gentlemen referred to operated under their own cognomens.

"They are the big men of the industry, though. They represent the money, the spondulix, the Old Jack, of the industry," I said.

"No use putting them down," said the tourist. "Their names wouldn't mean anything to the people of Ottumwa."

Then I really "got" him, and I tried

Scenes from "Infidelity" (Fox).

my best to find the kind of celebrity he wanted.

He Knows a Few Actors, Though.

"The small man over there is Adolph Zukor," I said, "surely you have heard of him?"

"Is he an actor?" he asked hopefully.

I confessed that Mr. Zukor was not an actor. The tourist shook his head. I pointed out a lot more, even showed him Harry Reichenbach, and he wanted to know if Harry was a comedian or something. Then I quit. But I know that tourist thinks I was kidding him or holding out something on him.

I saw him later getting what he wanted—Jimmy Tynan was exhibiting Al Cohn to him as "comede" Charlie Chaplin.

We are glad the visitors came and hope they come again, and the next time we hope they will not stick around the hotel so much, but will give us a chance to show them the town.

I don't think a single one of them went up on the Angel's Flight car, a most magnificent trip. It takes sixteen seconds and two and a half cents in money to make the ascent, but once on top of the hill, a fine view is had of the city and its environs, and for an extra nickel the eye can be delighted with a view through a camera obscura that's almost as good as looking at a moving picture.

MAYOR JEWETT FAVORS SUNDAY SHOWS

Indianapolis Executive Declares Wholesome Sabbath Entertainment Is a Community Need

CHARLES W. JEWETT, Mayor of Indianapolis, upon whom the ministers of that city recently made a demand that he enforce the law which would prohibit the operation of motion picture theatres and other forms of amusement on Sundays, has rallied to the support of the motion picture interests, by coming out flatly in favor of Sunday shows.

The Mayor set forth the city administration's position on the question in a detailed statement in which he declared that clean, wholesome entertainment on Sunday —such as provided by the motion picture theatres of the city —is a community necessity and not a desecration of the Sabbath. In making the statement he also announced a system of regulation to prevent any abuse whatever of the privilege of operation which he is to accord the exhibitors.

Beginning February 1, Mayor Jewett announced, all pictures of indecent and immoral character will not be permitted at any time during the week or on Sundays; all vaudeville, burlesque comedy, plays of any kind or character, acts and parts of acts and regular performances with stage costumes or otherwise will be prohibited on Sunday, and that on and after that date the motion picture shows in Indianapolis will not be permitted to open their doors before 1:30 o'clock p. m. on Sunday. He said that in connection with the exhibition of motion pictures no act or acts of any kind shall be permitted on Sunday, with the exception of musical numbers such as vocal and instrumental solos, quartets, glee clubs and orchestras.

Will Appoint Supervisor of Pictures.

In discussing the censorship question the Mayor said that in view of the fact that the present law affords authority for the supervision and control of the kind and characters of pictures shown, he would appoint Miss Clara Burnside, supervisor of the women police, to have direct control of complaints and censorship of motion picture films.

"As a matter of fact the moving picture censorship systems open up a field which has been productive of about as much abuse as it has good in many of the states in which it is in effect," said the Mayor. "However, I am of the opinion that the question is one that should be dealt with by the local community. If the State Legislature would pass a law giving to local officials express authority to deal with the question, including censorship, it would, in my opinion be a step in the right direction."

Mayor Jewette's statement on the Sunday closing question was a reply to the set of resolutions adopted recently by the members of the Indianopolis Ministerial Association, in which they called on him to close all theatres on Sunday and to give a definition of the city administration's policy in regard to the operation of the motion picture theatres on Sunday.

Favors Bill Legalizing Sunday Shows.

The statement was made shortly after Mr. Jewett had conferred with a committee representing the exhibitors, theatre men and ministers. Those who were present at the meeting are Charles Olson, of the Central Amusement Company, operating the Lyric, Alhambra and Isis theatres; S. Barret McCormick, of the Circle Theatre; Martin M. Hugg and Leo Rappaport, attorneys for the motion picture interests; Roltare Eggleson, of B. F. Keith's, and Rev. Morton C. Pearson, president of the Indianapolis Church Federation.

It was agreed in the conference, it is understood, that any legislation the motion picture interests may ask at the present session of the Indiana Legislature will not restrict the right of the city governments to regulate the Sunday amusements. It is Mayor Jewett's idea, it is said, to have a bill introduced that would wipe off the statute books the present law which makes the Sunday operation of theatres illegal and put the power to permit or prohibit Sunday picture shows in the power of all local city governments in the state.

The enforcement of the Mayor's new policy in regard to the operation of the theatres will compel a number of the local vaudeville houses that have been giving Sunday performances to close their doors on Sundays or simply give motion picture shows. The order also hits at motion picture houses that have been in the habit of opening their shows before or at noon on Sunday.

Adams Joins Blackton Forces.

William S. Adams, who has just been released by Uncle Sam from Washington, where he has been doing special camera work for the Government, has been added to the J. Stuart Blackton production staff. He is to be assistant cameraman on future photoplays.

Minneapolis Trade Board Outlines Working Program

BECAUSE of numerous inquiries asking what the Minneapolis Film Board of Trade, Inc., proposes to accomplish, E. A. Eschman, president of the new organization, has caused the following letter outlining its program to be written and mailed to exhibitors of the Northwest:

Dear Sir:—It will be of interest to exhibitors of motion pictures in the Northwest to learn that the managers of the leading exchanges of Minneapolis have completed an organization to be known as the Minneapolis Film Board of Trade, Incorporated. The object of this organization is:

First—To solve the common problems of exhibitors and exchanges arising:

(a) Because of the relations of exhibitors and exchanges with common carriers and the like, over which we have no direct control and little influence individually.

(b) Because of the practices, which are considered undesirable, of some exchanges and exhibitors.

(c) Because of the nature of and the unusual conditions and customs existing in the motion picture business.

Second—To bring about a more harmonious and thorough understanding between the various factors of the motion picture business, particularly exhibitors and exchanges.

Third—For the beterment of the motion picture industry as a whole.

The Minneapolis Film Board of Trade, Inc., wishes to impress upon exhibitors the fact that this board is in no sense whatever formed to further the interests of any exchange or set of exchanges. The services of this board are at the command of each and every exhibitor at all times; consequently, it will be in order for the exhibitor, as well as the exchange, to report any irregularities in the conduct of the motion picture business as these cases may come to your notice.

The members of the board are imbued with the idea of benefiting to the fullest extent the factors of the motion picture industry operating in this territory and with your co-operation and assistance we know that the desired ends will be accomplished.

We will take the liberty of addressing you from time to time regarding matters which will deserve your special attention.

Young Again Directs Williams.

The latest Earle Williams feature, "The Man Who Woudn't Tell," which is said to be doing a record business at the present time, is particularly interesting in that it marks the return of James Young to the staff of Vitagraph directors.

Some of the most noteworthy of Vitagraph productions in the past were directed by Mr. Young, and his reengagement by Vitagraph not only brings him back into the fold once more, but his assignment as director of the Earl Williams pictures reunites two old friends. One of the most noteworthy pictures ever produced, Vitagraph's "My Official Wife," was directed by Mr. Young, and it will be remembered that Earle Williams was a leading member of the big cast that played in the production.

The small advertisement is not to be despised—especially when it is an announcement in The World's Classified Advertising Department.

MANHATTAN EXHIBITORS TALK OF CLUB

Lee Ochs Deplores Lack of Interest Among Managers and Draws Parallel to Chicago

TWENTY-TWO members of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Manhattan held its final meeting at its old headquarters, 729 Seventh avenue, on Tuesday, January 28. After the reading of the minutes of the previous meeting, Lee A. Ochs, the president, said: "There are two attacks which threaten us at the present time and they are both local. One is the attack of the Bronx Home News on violations by the exhibitors of the standee law. The other is of the same character, agitated by the Harlem Home News.

"This league has not done anything against the 5 per cent. film tax, censorship and the proposed bills to appoint a State film commission, which threatens to be passed in the present State Legislature. I do not want to be head of this league as it is.

"It was suggested at a luncheon the other day that we form a club of 200 members, from all the branches of the industry directly interested in theatres, making the dues $50 a year with the addition of $50 initiation fee—like the Allied Amusement Association of Chicago, with a 100 per cent. membership of all theatrical managers. This association was able to raise $19,000 to fight the operators' demands and withstand them. Our organization is not strong enough to offset anything."

Sam Trigger said he could not understand why the exhibitors should swamp their identity. "Why invite the manufacturers and the distributors?" he said. "I believe in an exclusive exhibitors' association. If we lose our identity, we will be asked what has become of the exhibitors?"

Mr. Ochs replied: "There is no chance to organize an exclusively exhibitors' body. Look at these rooms! I am ashamed of them. I am ashamed to invite our friends here, and after February 1 we will have no home. Let us get twenty-five, fifty, a hundred men together who will form and maintain a club that will mean something to the exhibitors and the whole industry when we need to do things for our good and protection. Let us get a clubhouse.

At the suggestion of Frank A. Gorman, it was voted that a committee of five be appointed by the chair to draft plans and canvass the possibility of organizing an exhibitors' or a motion picture club. It was also decided that a ball be held in the second or third week of March.

CANADIAN EXHIBITORS VOICE WRONGS

Showmen and Exchangemen Meet on Common Ground to Discuss Interests in Maritime Provinces

AT a meeting of the executive committee of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of the Maritime Provinces of Canada, held in the Imperial Theatre in St. John, N. B., on January 6, in conjunction with the Exchange Managers' Association, Vice-President McKay occupied the chair. Other members present were Vice-President R. J. Macadam of Halifax, N. S.; Vice-President W. W. O. Fenety of Fredericton, Prince Edward Island; Vice-President J. J. Gaudet of Summerside; and the Secretary, W. H. Golding of St. John.

During the course of the meeting it was moved that a letter relative to the new advertising charges be addressed to the Exchange Managers' Association disapproving of minimum and percentage charges for advertising matter in connection with film service, recognizing that the only just method is to charge an exhibitor the fair market value for unmounted paper supplied to him or her, and a fair rental for mounted paper, photos, cuts, slides and other returnable accessories. The fairness of charging full value for such articles as are not returned promptly and in good condition was acknowledged.

A resolution also submitted by Vice-President Macadam and seconded by W. W. O. Fenety signified the approval of the league of any legitimate steps taken by the Exchange Managers to protect themselves against bad debts and delinquent exhibitors. Copies of these resolutions were ordered sent to the Exchange Managers' Association, with explanatory letters.

A letter addressed to the finance minister, Sir Thomas W. White, Ottawa, Ontario, requested that a modification of the reel tax on motion pictures be made so that it will bear less heavily upon exhibitors in the smaller towns where population ranges from 8,000 downward to village proportions.

A letter also addressed to the provincial secretary requested that the Government give consideration to the matter of compensating theatre workers for wages lost by reason of the ban placed upon public gatherings during the late epidemic of influenza, this compensation to be based upon the 55 per cent. provision of the workmen's compensation act and in accordance with the mind of the Manitoba Government on this selfsame question.

President McKay suggested during the meeting that a personal appeal be made to all exhibitors in the jurisdiction of the League to have reshipments and trans-shipments made promptly and with scrupulous attention to the interests of one another.

It was also decided to send a communication to the exhibitors of the Maritime Provinces to join the League, which is now in vigorous health, and to associate themselves with its work now being entered upon with renewed zeal.

Induct Cincinnati Officers.

The new set of officers of the Moving Picture Exhibitors' League of the Cincinnati Chamber of Commerce was duly inducted into office at a recent meeting, and President A. G. Hettesheimer took charge of the work of the organization for the year 1919. An important piece of business handled at the same meeting, aside from routing matters, was the unequivocal and unanimous indorsement voted the activities of the Ohio State Screen League, which has been formed for the purpose of fighting the movement on foot against Sunday pictures.

KOPLAR-GOLDMAN EXTENDS INTERESTS

St. Louis Exhibiting Concern Takes Over Shenandoah, Park and Kings Theatres

A THEATRICAL deal involving the transfer of the ownership of the Shenandoah, Park and Kings theatres to the Koplar-Goldman interests was announced last week. These theatres have been controlled by the Louis A. Cella estate, under the management of Frank Tate.

The transaction will bring under the control of the Koplar-Goldman syndicate fourteen of the largest theatres and moving picture houses in St. Louis. No figures in regard to the deal have been made public.

Another epochal development in theatrical affairs of St. Louis was the announcement that the Marcus Loew interests are planning the construction of a million-dollar playhouse on Washington avenue. Leopold Friedman, counsel for Loew, declared that the theatre would house 3,500 persons.

The reopening of the Princess Theatre, Grand and Olive streets, is announced by Frank Tate, the opening date to be about March 1. This playhouse has been in the dark for more than a year, and its operation will furnish another popular priced amusement place for the city.

Harry Koplar, head of the Koplar-Goldman Company, becomes, by virtue of his deal with Tate, one of the largest proprietors in the country. He entered the amusement field in St. Louis in 1907 by establishing one of the first open-air summer shows at Montgomery and Fifteenth streets.

His first venture was based on borrowed capital. From this small beginning he has developed his amusement interests until he is at the head of fourteen theatres. They are the Montgomery, Lindell, Novelty, Maffitt, Cherokee, Lafayette, Plaza, Gravois, Arco, Lowell, Mikado, Shenandoah, Park and Kings. A new playhouse is in course of construction at St. Louis avenue and Twentieth streets.

William Goldman, associate of Koplar, came into the theatrical field several years ago, when he secured control of an airdrome at Maffitt and St. Louis avenues. Under Goldman's management it developed into a successful house. He and Koplar combined and have experienced unprecedented success.

Sydney Garrett, distributor of S-L Pictures in foreign countries, talking over certain scenes with Ralph Ince to be incorporated for foreign movie audiences in the initial feature starring E. K. Lincoln. The star is evidently interested in the idea.

Taylor Brings to America "The Better 'Ole" Negative

ALTHOUGH he had just braved the submarines in October to visit New York for a close-up view of American producing activities, Managing Director John H. Taylor of London Inter-Ocean arrived last week at Inter-Ocean Building, New York, for another two weeks' stay. Mr. Taylor is optimistic about conditions in England and does not think the coming of peace will see any abatement in the quantity of American films used over there, provided the quality keeps up.

With Mr. Taylor on the steamship Lapland came the negative of "The Better 'Ole," which Captain Bruce Bairnsfather, creator of the original "Old Bill" cartoons, had been working upon in London. Mr. Taylor stated that of the many films with exceptional drawing power he had seen in his career as a picture man none had appealed to him more strongly than "The Better 'Ole" and largely because of its novelty side.

The carbons and accessories handled by Inter-Ocean will be distributed in England by Major A. H. Sowerbutts, who has just received his discharge from the Royal Artillery and previous to the war was well known in the London trade as manager of the Warwick Trading Company and Film Libraries, Ltd. Major Sowerbutts had considerable studio experience, as a camera, projection and lighting expert, before coming to the rental side of the business, having been an electrician before entering the picture field.

This, in the opinion of President Cromelin of Inter-Ocean, adapts Major Sowerbutts peculiarly well to the business of distributing the Inter-Ocean accessories line, since he will be able to demonstrate and install his articles, when necessary, due to his long technical experience. Accessories are the Speer carbons, the Fulco supplies, Globe Steel Reel and the Wohl Studio Lamps. Major Sowerbutts made the trip to America to close for these lines with Eugene H. Kaufman, accessories manager of Inter-Ocean, and expects to return Feb. 10.

Postpone Release of "Red Glove."

"The Red Glove," Universal's latest serial starring Marie Walcamp, is to be released on March 17, according to announcement by Universal executives this week. The serial had previously been set for release the third week in February, but the postponement, Universalites believe, is a wise move in more ways than one.

Universal exchanges will be able to show exhibitors at least five episodes of the serial before release date. Incidentally Universal will have more time to work out its advertising and newspaper campaigns on the serial.

Deny They Will Abandon Plans.

Stories that have been circulating throughout the film colony to the effect that the plans formed by Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks, Charlie Chaplin, William S. Hart and D. W. Griffith would be abandoned are flatly denied by every member of their organization.

John Fairbanks, manager of the Douglas Fairbanks Studios, says that the famous quintet intend to go right ahead with their plans as originally outlined.

"This is not an organization that can be completed in a few hours or a few days," he said. "We are going right ahead with our plans, and any intimation that we may abandon the project will be from an opposing source and will have no basis."

Mrs. Charlotte Pickford, mother of Mary Pickford, says there has been no changes in the plans of the five artists and that no changes are contemplated.

D. W. Griffith, Charlie Chaplin and William S. Hart are all emphatic in their denials that the organization is to be abandoned or changed.

Fox to Continue Making Comedies.

According to Winfield R. Sheehan, general manager of the Fox Film Corporation, the fact that Henry Lehrman is no longer head of the studio will make no difference in the production of Fox comedies. Fred Fishback and Jack Blythestone, both well known comedy directors, who have been operating at the studio, will continue production of comedies the same as ever.

High production expenses are said to have been the cause of the trouble which resulted in Henry Lehrman being deposed. Mr. Sheehan would make no other statement in regard to the matter except to say, "we have just dissolved partnership."

Henry Lehrman declares that he will continue to make comedies and plans to distribute them to exhibitors independently.

Fox Sunshine Comedy Lost.

The negative of a comedy produced for the Fox Film Corporation by the Sunshine Comedies has disappeared in a mysterious manner. According to statements given out at the studio, the film was prepared for shipment to New York and was in the hands of the Express Company when it was discovered that the case, instead of containing film, was filled with dirt.

Local detectives at work on the case have as yet found no clue to the disappearance of the film.

Syd Chaplin Makes Denial.

Sydney Chaplin, who was reported last week to have signed a contract to make two five-reel light comedies for the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, with himself as the star, now enters a denial of the story and says that he has made no contract with the First National.

Quinn Forms Organization.

The Motion Picture Co-operative Association, with J. A. Quinn, of Quinn's Rialto Theatre, as president and director-general, has been organized in Los Angeles.

According to Mr. Quinn, the organization will classify stars and furnish exhibitors with data as to their drawing powers, select stories and advise and regulate advertising. A co-operative basis for the production of films is also one of the aims of the association. Mr. Quinn names many persons prominent in the film industry as being identified with him in the project.

"Winnie" Sheehan Goes East.

Winfield Sheehan, general manager of the Fox Film Corporation, who has been in Los Angeles looking after Fox interests for over a month, has left for New York. Mr. Sheehan plans to stop at New Orleans, Atlanta and Washington on his way East.

Arvid E. Gillstrom, who came out to the Coast two months ago to direct the Lee kids in their new picture, "Smiles," and Mrs. Gillstrom have also left for the East, where Mr. Gillstrom will direct George Walsh at the Fox Fort Lee studios.

Samuel Goldwyn Finishes on Coast.

Samuel Goldwyn, head of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, who arrived on the Coast several weeks ago after an extended trip throughout the country, finished up his business at the Goldwyn Studios at Culver City and left for New York on Jan. 23.

Balboa Plant Leased.

The plant of the old Balboa Company at Long Beach, which has been idle for nearly a year, was reopened last week by Art Film Company of Iowa. The property was leased through the assignees, the Los Angeles Wholesalers Board of Trade. George D. Watters is general manager of the company, and Fred Sullivan, of New York, is director. The corporation will maintain headquarters in Des Moines, and the films to be made in the West will be chiefly of an educational nature.

Mary Pickford Serenaded.

A pleasant surprise was planned for the entertainment of Mary Pickford while she was convalescing from her recent attack of influenza, by Harry Leonhardt, manager of the new California Theatre. Mr. Leonhardt, hearing that Miss Pickford was able to be about again, took his entire orchestra out to the Pickford home one evening after the show, and serenaded the star. On account of the quarantine the members of the orchestra could not be invited to enter the house, but next day each musician received a photograph and a note of thanks from Miss Pickford.

Off to Mexico.

Rex Beach has been issued a passport allowing him to travel in Mexico during the next few weeks. He will be accompanied by a friend, Edward A. Salisbury. Both men are interested in land investments in Lower California and Mexico.

Burned in Explosion.

Joe Miller and Harry Clifton, while engaged in making a comedy at the Selig studio on January 22, were severely burned as the result of an explosion of an acetylene tank. The men, one of whom was burned most severely on hands and face, and the other on his arms and legs, were taken to a hospital for treatment. Both are expected to recover. E. A. Martin, a member of the company, was nearer the tank than the two injured men when the explosion occurred, but he escaped unhurt.

Victim of Double Pneumonia.

James M. Fitzgerald, known as "Big Slim," a comedian employed at the Rolin studio, died in Los Angeles on January 21, of double pneumonia following an attack of influenza. Fitzgerald, who was six feet six inches in height, had the distinction of being the tallest man in motion pictures. He leaves a wife.

Lehrman's Secretary Dies.

Miss Helen Morrison, for five years private secretary to Henry Lehrman, died last week of influenza. She was buried in Hollywood Cemetery and Henry Lehrman and members of his staff acted as pall bearers.

Jack Pickford in New Home.

Jack Pickford, who is rapidly recovering from his recent operation, has moved his belongings and those of Olive Thomas, his wife, into a handsome residence on Wilshire Boulevard and Gramercy Place, which will be the permanent home of the young couple while they are in Los Angeles. Young Pickford expects to be able to go back to work within a few days.

Broken Arm Causing Trouble.

Lois Weber, who broke her arm several months ago as the result of a fall on a slippery floor, is suffering great pain from the arm, which was supposed to be entirely cured, but which may have to be operated on and reset before it will cease to cause trouble. Miss Weber is planning to go to New York for treatment as soon as she will have finished the Anita Stewart production on which she is working.

Studio Shots

NIGEL BARRIE, of the Royal Air Forces, is in Los Angeles, playing the leading part opposite Alma Rubens in her new production. After this picture Barrie will go over to the Clara Kimball Young company to play leads.

Charles H. Christie has gone on a trip up the west coast, by way of San Francisco and Seattle.

The Roscoe Arbuckle company has gone to San Francisco for special scenes for a forthcoming comedy.

Cecil De Mille is about to begin the filming of the Edgar Selwyn story out at Lasky. No one is telling the nature of the story except to say that it deals with a big modern problem!

Jane Novak plays oposite Rupert Julian in the William J. Neidig story, "The Fire Flingers."

Al Ray has been engaged by the Fox company to star in coming productions. Elinor Field will play opposite lead with Ray in his first picture under the new arrangements.

Larry Semon, of Vitagraph comedies, left Los Angeles for New York on the 12th, and expects to be back in time to start his next picture on January 27.

Mr. and Mrs. William C. De Mille were guests at a reception held in Los Angeles for Wytte Bynner, the poet.

Ralph Clark, manager of the First National Exchange in New York, was a visitor at the Christie studio last week.

Eddie Laemmle went to New York to attend the funeral of his aunt, Mrs. Carl Laemmle.

The quickest route to a market for used films is via The World's Classified advertising. A trial will prove this assertion.

Essanay Schedules Four of Its Earlier Chaplins

ESSANAY has scheduled four of its early Charlie Chaplin pictures for a new showing. The release dates have been set two weeks apart and the subjects chosen are "Shanghaied," released February 15; "A Night in the Show," March 1; "The Bank," March 15, and "Police," March 29.

This is the first showing of new prints on these subjects, which were produced shortly after Charlie Chaplin joined the Essanay forces nearly four years ago. These are four of Chaplin's best pictures. New prints have been made from the original negative under the Spoor-Thompson processing method.

It has been so long since the public has had an opportunity to view these pictures, it is believed that they will be practically new to the majority, and will be enjoyed just as much as originally. In fact there are few Chaplin fans who would not gladly sit through one of his screamingly funny comics even though he remembered all of the various antics. His best pictures are good for more than a one-time laugh.

These four releases are now booking through the George Kleine System, whose representatives are in all General Film Company exchanges.

Lieut. Robert Kane Gets French War Decoration

THE legion of friends who hailed Robert T. Kane as the best of fellows when he was president and general manager of Paralta Studios, in Los Angeles, will be delighted to learn that he was decorated with the Croix de Guerre December 19, at the time of the formal presentation of decorations to the 316th Train Headquarters and Military Police, in which service he ranked as lieutenant. The information comes to Moving Picture World from 1st Lieutenant Marshall F. Brockway, one of Lieutenant Kane's fellow-officers, who writes as follows:

"Lieutenant Kane, during a very heavy gas attack and shell fire, realizing the great danger that would result to a column of ambulances filled with wounded, which had halted in order to adjust masks, removed his own mask with utter disregard for his personal safety, aided the wounded in adjusting theirs and set the column into motion out of the gassed area, thereby relieving great suffering and stress. He continued to do this until he had succumbed to complete exhaustion."

Greet James Gordon Victor Smith.

Formal announcement has not as yet been made, but it became known this week that Albert E. Smith, president of the Vitagraph Company, had added James Gordon Victor Smith to his Vitagraph family in New York City, on Friday, January 17.

The advent of James Gordon Victor brings the promising young household of Mr. and Mrs. Smith to the number of five, there now being three girls and two boys in the family.

Mrs. Smith and "young" Mr. Smith are doing splendidly and a nurse in attendance stated that fifteen minutes after his arrival, James Gordon Victor indicated an almost uncanny tendency, for one so young, toward the professional pathway followed by his father.

Exhibitors and Operators Wage Dispute Still Open

THE meeting held in Fraternity Hall, January 18, by the Allied Amusement Association was devoted chiefly to the securing of signatures from exhibitors who could testify that they had signed the new agreement of the operators union under duress.

Another meeting was held Monday, January 20, at the same place, at 11 o'clock a. m. This meeting was called by the following wire, which had been sent out Sunday afternoon, January 19. and delivered to exhibitors the same evening: "Attend meeting Fraternity Hall, Monday morning, 11 o'clock. Sign no papers meantime."

About 160 exhibitors were present, representing over 225 theatres. Business was mainly concerned in ascertaining if any operators had refused to work or had quit their positions, or had attempted by threat or otherwise to influence the signing of the new wage scale.

What Prompted the Meeting.

It developed that on Saturday, January 18, officials of the operators' union had a statement printed for the purpose of presenting it to exhibitors to be signed. This statement was to the effect that the exhibitor who signed it had not been intimidated, threatened or coerced into signing the new wage scale by the operators, but that he had—if he had signed the new wage scale at all—done so voluntarily. This printed statement was taken to picture theatre owners throughout the city by several committees of operators on Saturday evening and Sunday. This action was learned Sunday by the officials of the Allied Amusement Association and led to the calling of Monday morning's meeting by wire.

The hearing in Superior Judge Foell's court, which had been set for Thursday, January 23, was changed to Wednesday, Jan. 22, Attorney Jacobson, who presided at the Monday meeting, announced. After fixing the date of the next meeting for Friday, January 24, the meeting was adjourned.

On appearing in court Wednesday both parties in the case were advised by Judge Foell that the hearing of argument for a temporary injunction against the operators' union was postposed until Tuesday, January 28.

Friday's meeting of the Allied Amusement Association was well attended. Attorney Jacobson was in the chair.

The chief matter discussed was the report of Alfred Hamburger, who has charge of an employment agency for moving picture operators in his office, in the North American building on State street. Mr. Hamburger had been employed by the executive committee of the Allied Amusement Association for this work, as a matter of precaution and production.

Mr. Hamburger announced that in reply to advertisements in the daily papers for moving picture operators, several hundred applications had been received. Some of the applicants had and some had not city licenses, Mr. Hamburger stated. A number in the latter class declared that they were willing to take their examinations at once.

Receive Several Hundred Applications.

Mr. Hamburger declared that, in his judgment, among the applicants there are just as competent men as any of the operators now employed, and that he was ready on short notice to place operators in case any theatre had trouble with the operator, or operators, now employed.

Among other matters discussed was the motion for injunction against the operators' union, on which Attorney Jacobson expressed himself as being confident of winning; but he admitted that in proceedings of this kind there is always a doubt as to the outcome.

The next meeting of the A. A. A. was set for Wednesday, January 29, at 11 o'clock a. m., in Fraternity Hall.

Laemmle Raises Goldman To Be Division Manager

SIDNEY GOLDMAN, manager of the Chicago office of Jewel pictures, has been appointed division manager of all Universal exchanges in the Central States.

Just three years ago Mr. Goldman sought his fortune in Chicago in the picture game. He carried a solitary letter of introduction as his mascot, and this led to his appointment as night manager of Vitagraph's Chicago office, then in charge of the veteran exchange manager, Ike Van Ronkel.

The initiated know that the position of night manager is far from being a sinecure, never to speak of its many worries and difficulties; but Mr. Goldman stuck to the job with a tenacity and grit that won him much favor. In less than six months he became a city salesman, and three months later he was selected as assistant manager of the Central Film Company, this city. He held that position for six months, when he was appointed manager of Goldwyn's Chicago office. He filled that position with distinction until Carl Laemmle, learning of his ability, appointed him manager of the Chicago Jewel exchange, which he has filled with signal ability ever since.

One day last week Mr. Goldman received another token of the high favor in which he is held by Carl Laemmle.

Scenes from "The Long Lane's Turning" (Exhibitors' Mutual).

This came in the form of a promotion to the position of district manager of Universal exchanges in the Middle Western States, as previously stated. He will have full charge of Universal exchanges in Chicago, Milwaukee, Omaha, Des Moines and Minneapolis, on and after February 1. He will continue to make Chicago his headquarters, however, though his new duties will necessitate considerable traveling.

To those who know him best Mr. Goldman is modest and unassuming. To a friend who recently pressed him hard for an answer to the question as to what had contributed most of his success in so short a time, he replied with a smile: "I owe a lot of it to hard work; but the real source, which has furnished the everlasting plugging and persistence and hopefulness, is my wife. To her any success I may have gained is mainly due."

"A Romance of the Air" a Week at De Luxe Here

A ROMANCE OF THE AIR," featuring Lieutenant Bert Hall and Edith Day, will be given a special week's showing at the De Luxe Theatre, Wilson avenue and Broadway, beginning Sunday, February 2. William F. Maher, manager of the De Luxe, has arranged with Frank J. Flaherty, manager of the Film Clearing House, Inc., and Rex Lawhead, assistant manager of the Independent Sales Corporation, for a combined effort in exploiting the event in a thoroughly up-to-date and efficient manner.

Nearly everyone knows that Lieutenant Bert Hall and Lieutenant Colonel William Tham are the only living members of the famous La Fayette Escadrille, whose contests in the air against the Hun flyers have passed into history. Lieutenant Hall's exploits covered three battle fronts, to which the medals he wears bear witness. "A Romance of the Air" is based on Lieutenant Hall's book "En l'Air," and was partly filmed last summer on the Ithaca aviation field, under the direction of Franklin B. Coates, and is seven reels in length.

Carle E. Carlton, the producer of the feature, and Manager Flaherty has arranged so that Lieutenant Hall will be in Chicago for the entire week of the showing, and he will appear daily at the De Luxe. Mr. Carleton was in the city the week of January 21 and took an active part in the preparations.

Edith Day, who plays the leading woman's role in the picture, is at present starring in "Going Up" at Cohan's Grand, and it has been arranged that she will preside at a matinee tea on Monday, February 3, given in the De Luxe Theatre. By good chance Joseph Lertora, who is playing the part of the French aviator in "Going Up" at the Grand, and who played the same character in "A Romance of the Air," will assist Miss Day at the matinee tea just mentioned.

All stations on the elevated lines in the city will be heavily billed, announcing the attraction at the De Luxe, which is beside the Wilson avenue station, so that immense crowds may be expected form all parts of the city.

The De Luxe was enlarged and thoroughly renovated last summer, and seats 1,400 persons. Manager Maher has sent an excellent orchestra of fourteen pieces, thoroughly skilled in playing musical accompaniment to pictures, so that the week's showing will doubtless prove a memorable one to patrons.

All the leading dailies will be liberally patronized with advertising space, and this, with reading notices and the extensive billboard advertising, will familiarize the public at large with the big show.

Clever Advertising Wins at Savoy Theatre, Chicago

S. SIMANSKY, owner and manager of the Savoy Theatre, out on West Madison street, recently showed his friends and fellow-managers a new thing or two in the manner of advertising pictures.

Notwithstanding the fact that two large houses in his immediate neighborhood had already showed Griffith's "The Greatest Thing in Life" he decided to run the same picture in his house of 500 seats on January 19 and 20. The results astonished himself and his neighbors as the Savoy was overtaxed by the attendance on both days—afternoon and evening—and the sidewalk in front was blocked.

Now as to Mr. Simansky's manner of working the apparent miracle: About ten days before the opening date he distributed small cards about the size of an ordinary business card, which bore the printed question: "What Is the Greatest Thing in Life?"

Several days later he passed out other cards, on which were printed, "'The Greatest Thing in Life' will be portrayed in D. W. Griffith's big production at the Savoy Theatre Sunday and Monday, January 19 and 20." Special mention of the picture was also made in the preceding week's program and in that for the current week.

It seems simple, but it worked wonders.

National Y. W. C. A. Forms Moving Picture Section

THE Central Field Committee of the national board of the Y. W. C. A., Chicago, has advised this office that the moving picture section of the national Y. W. C. A. is planning to make and show moving pictures on a large scale in its after-war program.

Mrs. John D. Rockefeller, Jr., and her committee on housing of the organization has just approved the buying of a projection machine, booth and screen for the showing of pictures in the first of the Y. W. C. A. recreation houses, which will soon be opened in Charleston, S. C. This means that the girls who make the recreation house their home will be treated to a free picture program one evening every week in their own hall.

Mrs. Rockefeller is very particular in the selection of pictures for these recreation houses, and has issued the following dictum concerning them: "I desire that the pictures shall be not only of a high moral standard, but that they shall also be educational and of dramatic value."

Miss Sutherland Griffith, who was at one time a moving picture actress in Hollywood, Cal., is the leading spirit of this movement, which will not be confined to this country, but will embrace the women of all countries.

Miss Griffith recently superintended the sending of a special exhibit of pictures to France, which will be used among all classes of women there. These pictures show various cities in the United States, views of our public schools, institutes and local industries; also rural life and the use of modern farm implements, American sports, country club activities, etc.

A great many of these pictures are devoted to industrial life and are intended to show what women in all parts of the world are doing along that line. One picture devoted to the welfare of children the world over shows a "Better Babies" exhibition, which is highly instructive in the care of children.

The pictures just referred to are the first sent out of America by the Y. W. C. A., but it is the intention, in the near future, to send out others to China, Japan, India and other far-off countries where a Y. W. C. A. program is in operation.

Miss Griffith has the ruling voice in the selection of pictures, and she exercises the greatest care and her finest judgment in the task.

Joliet, Ill., Soon to Have Splendid Picture Palace

JOLIET, ILL., will soon have one of the largest and most costly moving picture theatres in the Middle West, I learned from M. M. Rubens, of that city, last week. The Rubens Brothers, of whom there are three in the business —Harry A. and Claude B. being at present in the service of their country and soon to be mustered out—own at present in Joliet the Princess, with 1,200 seats; the Lincoln, with 1,100; the Colonial, with 500; the Crystal, with 700, and another, which has just been completed, but not yet opened nor named, with 950 seats.

It is the intention to erect a theatre which will seat 2,400 and to close several of the theatres named, which will be in the territory covered by the new house. This will save overhead expense, in addition to offering more attractive programs and up-to-date musical accompaniment.

The site of the new Rubens' theatre will be included in a massive four-story building about to be erected on the property of M. A. Felman, which has a frontage of 400 feet on the main street of Joliet and a depth of 165 feet. Felman's Boston store and New York store at present occupy the plot of ground, but these will be removed, and Mr. Felman will become a partner in the Rubens' enterprise. It is expected that Mr. Felman will occupy the ground stores of the new building to combine his former business. The upper stories of the structure will be devoted to offices and apartments.

The entire investment for the enterprise will be $300,000, of which the new theatre will claim $175,000. Work on clearing the site will begin in early spring, and it is expected that the new theatre will be opened in the spring of 1920.

The general management of all the Rubens' houses is in the care of George B. Rubens, of Indianapolis, who is general superintendent of the Indianapolis Light and Power Company. He has financial charge of the new enterprise. M. M. Rubens advised the writer that the Lincoln Theatre most likely will be continued to accommodate road shows as heretofore as it has all the requisite facilities.

Rogers Makes Encouraging Trip.

F. B. Rogers, Pathe's popular Chicago manager, returned Monday, January 20, from a special trip to the key cities of the Middle West which lasted ten days.

"I never saw a better outlook for business than exists at the present time," said Mr. Rogers. "Exhibitors in the cities visited by me are all feeling much encouraged over the picking up of business."

Rockford, Freeport, Galena, Dubuque, Clinton, Rock Island, Davenport and Moline were visited.

Pathe special features on the selective booking plan are in the greatest demand at present and bring the most money, Mr. Rogers informed the writer.

Manning Will Make His Own Serial.

Norman Manning, well known in film circles in Los Angeles and New York, stopped over in Chicago on his way to the Coast Wednesday, last week.

Mr. Manning has just returned from service in the Royal Air Force in Canada, with headquarters in Toronto. He joined the force as an American citizen in May, 1918, and was on the way to England when news of the armistice was flashed by wireless. He was mustered out about a month ago and will soon engage, so he says, in making a serial of fifteen episodes. He has the story already at hand and is awaiting his star, who will soon complete the work in which she is at present engaged.

Mr. Manning was formerly manager of the Balboa Amusement Company and later manager of the Astra Company at Los Angeles.

Charles F. Stark Visits Chicago.

Charles F. Stark, sales manager of the Spoor-Thompson laboratories in New York, paid a visit to Essanay's headquarters last week and returned to the metropolis Tuesday, January 21. Mr. Stark, when seen by the writer, reported very encouraging business with the Spoor-Thompson processing machine, and said that numerous inquiries are coming to the New York and Chicago offices concerning it.

L. B. Goulden Back to Friedman.

J. L. Friedman, president of the Celebrated Players' Corporation, when seen last week felt so buoyant that he exclaimed: "My business this month is so much larger than for the same month last year that I cannot make a comparison." And there were no earmarks of boasting in it either.

He announced that Louis B. Goulden, just back from service in the army, made his first call in Chicago at his old headquarters in the offices of the Celebrated Players, where he was given back his old position as sales manager of the Chicago office. President Friedman was pleased to show his preference in a matter of this kind.

World Representative on the Wing.

Nat Bregstein, traveling representative of the Moving Picture World, came into the city Friday, January 24, from Detroit and Canada, where he spent about three weeks. He reported excellent business in Montreal, Ottawa, Toronto and other cities. Detroit is booming. Mr. Bregstein left for Milwaukee Saturday, January 25, after which he will visit other Wisconsin cities and then Minneapolis and other important cities in Minnesota.

"Mickey" Illinois Rights Bought.

The Mickey Film Corporation of Illinois, of which F. O. Nielsen is general manager, has purchased the rights for Illinois to "Mickey," an eight-reel feature, in which Mabel Normand plays the titular role under the direction of Mack Sennett.

A trade showing of "Mickey" was given by Mr. Nielsen at Orchestra Hall January 23, and it was largely attended by exhibitors, who were enthusiastic in their praise. The critics of the daily press were also present, and Kitty Kelly, of the Herald-Examiner, wrote an extended review of the picture. A review of "Mickey" will be found in the Moving Picture World, in the issue of August 10, 1918.

Woodlawn's Owner Helps School.

Andrew Karsas, owner of the Woodlawn Theatre, practically gave the house over to the Parent-Teachers' Association of the John Fiske school on Friday and Saturday, January 24 and 25, a handsome share of the receipts being donated to the vocational fund of the school mentioned. For the occasion the screen version of "Little Women," from Louisa M. Alcott's story, was one of the attractions.

Director Hand Back from Navy.

Johnnie Hand, one of Chicago's favorite orchestra leaders, was recently discharged from the naval service at Great Lakes training station and will resume his former work. Mr. Hamlin will preside over an orchestra of fifteen pieces henceforth at the Hamlin Theatre on Saturday and Sunday afternoons. Before joining the naval forces Mr. Hand was the popular leader of the Covent Garden orchestra. The Hamlin has introduced several attractive innovations recently, which are rapidly bringing it up to the front rank in moving picture entertainment.

PUTS BLAME ON CANADIAN EXCHANGES

Famous Players Official Says Distributors Should Change Titles That Vaunt Our Valor

MUCH discussion has been raised in Canadian film circles because of the fact that American films of a patriotic nature showing American personages with captions such as "Our President," "Our Heroes," etc., are imported from the United States without changing these pictures to meet local requirements. The Canadian film patrons do not like to see these pictures, which, while they are splendid patriotic offerings in the United States, at the same time give the Canadians the impression that the American people in the States are braggarts and wish to take all the credit for winning the war, according to Canadian film men.

It is stated that such motion pictures have turned the public against picture theatres in Canada in various instances. While various film men in Canada have blamed the American exporter for this condition, it is apparent that there is another side to the story.

In discussing the situation last week, Arthur S. Friend, treasurer of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation who has had correspondence with Canadians on this matter, said: "I am sure that if I were a Canadian I should resent everything that even seemed to try to say that any country was solely responsible for the winning of the war. To attempt to divide glory is a very sorry business at any time.

"It isn't quite fair to put all the blame on the American producers, however. A very large share of it, in fact I think substantially all of it, belongs on the shoulders of the Canadian distributors. The Canadian distributors could have very readily, and at very small expense of trouble and money, eliminated the objectionable titles and substituted others that would not have been objectionable to the Canadian public.

"I suppose that very few of the objectionable pictures were ours, but it does strike me very forcibly that somebody was—to us the vernacular—asleep at the switch. I know very well that our American distributors would call our attention to any such mistake before the harm was done and I am sure that no one would have me think that the Canadian distributors were one whit less alert. As a matter of fact, the Canadian distributors should certainly have been alive to what was happening.

"The feeling which is said to be expressed on the part of the Canadian motion picture public is to my mind, perfectly justifiable. It is quite obvious that certain pictures of strong patriotic theme for the United States presentation could be entirely misinterpreted in Canada, at the same time placing this country in the wrong light among our neighbors. Summing up the entire situation it seems quite evident that the Canadian distributors are responsible for the condition which caused so much comment in their film trade."

Death of William Gray.

William Gray, who for the past ten years has been in charge of the Biograph laboratories, died on Friday, January 24, at his home in New York City of influenza. He was born in Cambridge, Mass., thirty-eight years ago and leaves a wife, who is seriously ill from influenza. It was while nursing her that Mr. Gray contracted the illness which proved fatal. The funeral services were held Tuesday, January 28.

George Randolph Chester Is Vitagraph Script Chief

GEORGE RANDOLPH CHESTER has become editor-in-chief of Vitagraph's scenario department, says an announcement from Albert E. Smith, Vitagraph's chief. Mr. Chester will immediately assume his new duties, with headquarters in Vitagraph's big Brooklyn studio.

The appointment of Mr. Chester marks the most important acquisition of the year of its kind to the credit of a photoplay institution. It places at the head of Vitagraph's editorial corps a man who ranks among the most felicitous writers of the day, either for stage or the magazines. The fertile imagination that devised the breezy and buoyant situations that made the "Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford" stories a distinctive contribution to literature and created in the hero of those tales the most refreshing character that has ever flattened furrows out of foreheads is now to be exerted in a similar cause via the newer agency of administering amusement to the masses.

CENSORSHIP FIGHT TO BE NATION-WIDE

Association's Committee Elects Gabriel Hess Chairman—Will Have a Branch in Every State

THE initial meeting of the new censorship committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry was held at the Association headquarters in the Times Building, Wednesday, January 22. Plans were discussed relative to making the activity of the committee national in scope, and the preliminary steps for the carrying out of this idea were immediately put into effect.

The committee perfected its organization by the election of Gabriel L. Hess, of Goldwyn, as chairman, and Frederick H. Elliott as secretary. The other members of the committee are D. W. Griffith, William A. Brady, Louis Innerarity, William M. Seabury, Paul H. Cromelin, Walter W. Irwin, P. A. Powers, Arthur S. Friend, and J. Robert Rubin. John E. Pembleton represented D. W. Griffiith.

A Chairman for Each State.

Chairman Hess announced that he would immediately appoint a chairman in each state with power to name well known citizens upon a state committee to combat censorship. Wherever possible the services of the same men who acted as state chairmen in all of the war work that was carried on by the association will be obtained. Chairman Hess sent the following telegram to each of these state chairmen who composed the War Work Council of the National Association.

"Will you act as chairman and organize in your state a committee opposed to censorship of motion pictures. Suggest prominent men of your state not affiliated with the motion picture industry be among those named on committee. Wire if any bills pending in legislature aimed at censorship of motion pictures."

It was also decided to appoint an exhibitors' advisory committee for New York State to work in co-operation with the Censorship Committee. Chairman Hess designated for this work Marcus Loew, William Fox, Max Spiegel, B. S. Moss, Hugo Riesenfeld, Louis F. Blumenthal, William Brandt, and Sydney S. Cohen.

Plans for the active co-operation of the motion picture companies on the Coast were put into effect in the form of a telegram to D. W. Griffith, in which he was advised of his appointment as a member of the committee and told briefly of the censorship situation. P. A. Powers, who left for the Coast last week, will confer with Mr. Griffith on his arrival and go over the censorship situation in detail.

Consideration was given to a plan of campaign to be inaugurated for the purpose of circularizing propaganda in opposition to the bill introduced in Congress for the creation of a Federal Picture Commission and in opposition to the measures now before the legislatures in New York, North Carolina and several other states.

To Use Trailers and Slides.

It was finally decided to have a quantity of trailers made for circularization in the territories where the censorship question was active. These trailers will be distributed by the various exchanges and supplied to the exhibitors free of charge. A slide campaign to cover the territory now in danger will also be inaugurated.

In order that no stone may be left unturned in this campaign against censorship it has also been decided to organize a body of Four-Minute men throughout the United States to speak in the theatres in opposition to censorship.

Community Booking Plan Gets An Additional Boost

FROM Chicago is reported an experience that is cited by the Fox Film Corporation in additional support of the plan for community booking. It is regarded as especially significant because of the proximity of the two houses.

Harry Miller, an exhibitor, says: "Tom Mix in 'Treat 'Em Rough' was the biggest clean-up in the history of the Alcazar. After a week's run to capacity I booked it for a second week at the Star. All they did over there was to tear up the brass rail in the lobby trying to get in."

The Star Theatre is across the street from the Alcazar. "If the Star had been owned by a competitor," says a statement from the Fox offices, "it probably would have been impossible to book 'Treat 'Em Rough' there."

The Alcazar business, Mr. Miller stated, represented over $600 a day for seven days in a house with 297 seats, and at a twenty-five cent admission. He regards this as a record.

"This telegram," says the Fox corporation, "is typical of what Tom Mix features are doing. He is having week runs in such theatres as the Olympia in Boston, the Orpheum in Cleveland, the Rose in Chicago, the Rialto in San Francisco, the Pickwick in San Diego. Three and four day runs are given regularly in some 100 of the best first-run house including Proctor's theatres in Mt. Vernon and at 125th street in Manhattan, the Strand in Buffalo, the Rialto in Indianapolis, the Alhambra in Cincinnati, the Crown in Houston, Texas.

"I believe Ton Mix is absolutely fearless. He will attempt any stunt the script calls for. We are about to release a picture in which he rides up two flights of stairs and leaps horse and all, from a balcony to a roof below under which the bandits of the story are in parley. In making the picture this roof gave way more quickly than was expected, the horse lost its balance landing on its feet and sinking to its knees. Mix clung on and got up laughing.

"Mix is also a crack shot. When he shoots the spot out of playing cards or the pipe out of a man's mouth it is the real thing."

Ouimet Makes New York Visit.

L. Ernest Ouimet, of Montreal, was in New York the week of January 27. He went direct from New York to Toronto, and after looking after his exchange interests there will return to Montreal to adjust his business affairs previous to starting—February 8—on a trip to Los Angeles for a stay of three months. The motive for Mr. Ouimet's trip to Los Angeles is to join his family, who went there about three weeks ago on account of the illness of his twelve-year-old daughter, Alice, who died January 25, two days after reaching the Coast. She was suffering from heart trouble and contracted influenza while en route. In her weakened condition she could not withstand the attack. Mr. Ouimet's many friends will be grieved to hear of his bereavement, and join us in expressing sympathy.

SUNDAY STATUS REPORTED BY MAYORS

Twenty-one New York Cities Sanction Showing on Sabbath—Five Mayors Also Declare in Favor

Albany, Jan. 27.

FIFTY of the fifty-nine mayors in New York State have expressed themselves on the Sunday showing proposition, following such request from the State Mayors' Conference, the headquarters of which are located in this city. Mayors in twenty-one cities report that motion picture houses are open in their respective cities, while mayors in five other cities, where motion picture houses are now closed on Sunday, report to the Mayors' Conference that if they had the right by law to regulate the opening and closing, the houses would be running. The mayor of one city in which Sunday movies now prevail reports that the houses would be closed if that city had the right under the law to regulate by ordinance.

The report, the most comprehensive yet secured in an effort to determine the true status of the situation as preliminary to legislation which will be introduced during the next few weeks to come in an effort to legalize the Sunday movie in this State, covers not only an answer to the question as to what cities are now enjoying Sunday motion picture shows, but also secures an expression from the mayor of each city as to whether or not in his opinion Sunday shows would be permitted if regulated by ordinance.

The adjoining table gives in brief the situation as it exists in fifty cities in this State, mayors of nine cities still to be heard from.

It will be noticed from the table that Sunday motion picture shows now prevail in Amsterdam, Buffalo, Corning, Fulton, Glen Cove, Glens Falls, Hornell, Jamestown, Lockport, Lackawanna, New York, Niagara Falls, Oneida, Olean, Rochester, Syracuse, Salamanca, Tonawanda, Troy, White Plains and Yonkers.

No Sunday Show Demand in Corning.

Supplementing the replies from mayors of several cities, it is interesting to the industry, according to the mayor's view of the situation as it exists, that there are but a few of what are termed "chronic kickers" in Corning to Sunday movies; that the general public in Cortland would not or do not demand Sunday movies for entertainment. In Jamestown, for instance, objections can be expected, and in fact do exist from the Ministerial Alliance. In Lockport there has been no objections to Sunday movies in the last three years.

The last week has brought no new developments, at least to the surface, in connection with motion picture legislation at Albany this session. The bill introduced last week calling for the appointment of a commissioner of censorship, etc., is still in committee. There is, however, considerable talk among the senators and assemblymen as to just what attitude they will take when the Sunday movie proposition comes to a vote.

Ruralite Will Vote Against His Views.

One Senator who was a member of the committee of 1917, which spent some little time in New York investigating the situation, remarked today that inasmuch as he came from a rural community, his attitude must be that demanded by his constituents, and which would, however, be contrary to his own views. This means that his vote will again be against the legalizing of the Sunday motion picture show in New York State. According to his own version, the bill has no more chance than a snowball in Hades.

Watertown is taking an active interest in an effort being made in that city toward securing Sunday movies. The Brotherhood of the Asbury M. E. Church is openly opposing the proposition, and in a petition the church protests against any action on the part of the mayor or the common council toward Sunday movies on the grounds that these officials have no right to act under decisions in the Supreme Court.

How Senate and House May Line Up on Sunday Issue

Albany, January, 27.

IN the way of a preliminary line-up of the Senate and Assembly of this state on the question of legalizing Sunday motion picture shows, and the influence which must be expected to exert itself by reason of the locality from which a member comes, it is of interest to note that the Senate this year contains 28 residents of cities and 13 of rural sections. Of the 150 members of the Assembly, 84 come from cities and 68 from the rural districts. When the Sunday movie proposition comes to a vote, it is only reasonable to figure that the bill will receive the support of members residing in cities where Sunday shows now prevail, and that the bill will receive opposition from senators and assemblymen who hail from country districts and who will undoubtedly follow the desires of their constituents.

Last November's election resulted in 22 new members entering the Senate, with Harry C. Walker, then Mayor of Binghamton, replacing Lieutenant Governor Edward Schoeneck, of Syracuse, a city which enjoys Sunday movies. But what is of more importance, Henry Walters now becomes Senate leader in place of Elon R. Brown, of Watertown, where there is a strong opposition to the Sunday motion picture show. Walters comes from Syracuse.

It is important to supporters of the Sunday motion picture bill to know that out of the 51 members of the Senate at the present time 20 reside in New York and Brooklyn, 13 of the number being lawyers. Eight other members reside in cities having Sunday movies, three of the number living in Buffalo. Thus, out of the 38 Senators from cities, 28 come from places where Sunday shows are now the rule, a situation which in itself should offer encouragement to those backing the measure. Politically, there are 29 Republicans and 22 Democrats in the Senate.

In the Assembly of 150 members, there appears to be an assured support from 71 because of the fact that they come from cities having Sunday shows. All told there are 84 out of the 150 residing in cities, leaving 66 members as representing rural sections, and from whom opposition must be expected by reason of resolution and action already taken by many small town societies who are already busy in lining up against any bill that will give the State Sunday movies. Twenty-six members of the Assembly are farmers.

Speaker Thaddeus Sweet of the Assembly comes from Phoenix and represents a rural area with a considerable population. Politically the Assembly lines up with 94 Republicans, 54 Democrats and 2 Socialists, a factor which must be taken in consideration if any attempt is made to have the Sunday movie bill a party measure, a move which is doubtful, however, in view of the fact that while the Legislature is Republican, the Governor is himself a democrat.

Upstate, considerable activity has appeared of late both for and against Sunday movies, both sides seeking an early expression in order that their representatives in the Legislature may be able to more correctly interpret the wishes of their respective communities.

Rambles Round Filmtown

With WALTER K. HILL.

The Rambler.

Stop! Look! Listen! —Be Duly Warned!

FROM Pat Dowling, who does the heavy lifting on Mary Pickford's personal publicity (a man who signs himself "Yours for the prohibition of press agents"), we have received the following letter, bearing on a matter of such very great importance that we hide it here where few will read it. Mr. Dowling writes:

"The following facts are set forth for your own information and that of the public at large in order to clear up a situation rumors of which have gone forth in the Associated Press:

"After an important meeting last night in the Alexandria Annex Bar, which is not yet bone dry (the meeting could not be held in the main bar as that was full of actors), an amalgamation of the Little Five was consummated which will in no way be connected with the Big Five, who have united to market their own photoplays, these being D. W. Griffith, Douglas Fairbanks, Mary Pickford, Charles Chaplin and W. S. Hart.

"The Little Five will be composed of Scoop Conlon, Mark Larkin, Bennie Zeidman, Jack Lloyd and myself, the same wishing it known that they have neither arranged to release their films through Al Cohn nor Charlie Fuhr. It has been reported that Cohn, having been seen in the same bar in conversation with Ed Durling and other important factors in the industry, was about to retain his interests in the above Little Five. However, we wish it known authoritatively that this is not the case.

"Carlyle R. Robinson has been mentioned in dispatches as the Silent Partner. At the next meeting (which will be held behind locked doors at Mrs. Pshaw's lunchroom in Hollywood) it will be decided whether or not Robinson will be allowed to release with the Little Five, thus making Little Six—just like a Buick! One of the important things which the Little Five will undertake is the elimination of non-paying publicity. Tom J. Geraghty will write the continuity.

"The Little Five does not believe that the editors should be forced to take non-productive publicity along with the big stuff, a thing which has heretofore been rammed down their throats under the program system. Above all it will eliminate waste, prove that the story is the thing and elevate the cinema art for art's sake alone.

"The Little Five is willing to confide in you, Mr. Hill, as being a trustworthy newspaper man, who will see to it that the facts are not garbled and that the exhibitor knows the truth. Hence the announcement at this time. No further statements will be made until our legal adviser, Dennis Levitsky, arrives from New York."

Negatives Are Positively Mixed.

At present there is a tax of half a cent a foot on all positive prints, of which there is only one for each picture, and a tax of a quarter of a cent on all negatives, of which there may be thirty or forty for each picture. The proposed tax would require a new payment every time a film moved as long as it was in circulation.—New York Tribune.

Writing Themselves Out of a Job?

Here's a bit of publicity that would indicate things are getting serious:

"The motion picture press agent has in the course of the ages acquired such a tremendous reputation for imaginativeness that he is always credited with having invented anything unusual that really happens. Consequently the public is deprived of many choice bits of news, which the press agent doesn't write because he knows no one will believe them."

Joe Reddy, between struggles with his new job and thoughts of matrimony, has discovered, in the Johnson's "Cannibals of the South Sea," that married women in the Fiji Islands are designated from other fair ladies of their tribe by having their two upper-center front teeth knocked out.

Pete Smith retorts that in other and more civilized climes it is the husbands who are often thus marked for identification.

He says serials act upon him like raw meat.

"They have tonic properties, or calories, or something," he says. "Anyhow a serial is the only sort of literary stunt that doesn't fag me after rewriting it for the third or fourth time. In fact, the effect is sustaining, even nourishing.

"After mentally going over a perfected sequence—say, where the super-villain confronts and chases the 'goil' until the hero, with a sledgehammer, crashes out of a room above stairs to hurl himself between them with weapon poised. Well, after mentally rehearsing anything like that I am as refreshed and invigorated as if I had been to the ice-box for a thick sandwich of chopped beef with plenty of pepper on it."

"Mayhap," he concludes, "I can develop the serial stimulus until meals are the least of my worries."

We Call Vera a "Perfect Cat."

The following sentence in the writings of Vera Bloom, of the New York Telegram, made us wish Vera were a man so we could write to her and swear:

"There is hardly a time when the public is not disillusioned at seeing one of its idols without the carefully concealed glamour of the stage or the studio. Especially the screen stars, for it's a curious fact that a film beauty isn't necessarily beautiful in real life, and even the knack of taking a lovely photograph often counts for nothing at all before the motion picture camera."

Speaking in defense of several hundred screen queens we have never seen in our lives and never expect to we repeat:

Vera Bloom is a "cat!"

"Honeymoon for Three" is a film title that could include "The Two Brides." But who's the groom?

"TEASERS" FOR "FIGHTING ROOSEVELTS"

Manager A. Johnnie Mack, of Hill Theatre, Newark, Proposes Novel Idea for Good Advance Heralding

THE interest awakened by the exploitation possibilities of "The Fighting Roosevelts" has brought to Moving Picture World the active co-operation of one of New Jersey's "live-wire" exhibitors—A. Johnnie Mack, manager of the Hill Theatre, Newark, where the First National attraction will eventually be played. Manager Mack makes a specialty of "splashing" a picture; doing stunts involving extensive and novel advertising, and in this way has brought the Hill from a losing proposition to a big money-maker.

Last week the World presented advertising suggestions for "The Fighting Roosevelts," grounded on a dignified and unsensational method, without, however, advising against "stunts" such as the one Manager Mack indicates in his appended contribution. There are many ways of getting money out of a picture, and we are submitting Manager Mack's suggestion as one of them. Mr. Mack's letter follows:

"After viewing 'The Fighting Roosevelts' I have concluded that it is a timely and a truly wonderful picture not only from the point of production, but it can be sold to the public, and with the proper advertising campaign it is a clean-up.

"There are so many advertising possibilities to the picture that almost any exhibitor can arrange an original campaign and get away from the boiled, made-to-order material furnished by the exchange. While this is usually good, yet the live-wire exhibitor knows his territory best and can produce a much better result by pulling local original stunts.

"I am inclined to think that a teaser campaign would be a real business-getter for the more than one day exhibitor. This can be elaborated upon according to the advertising allotment. I would suggest that the newspapers, the poster boards in and around the theatre, a frame for the lobby and anything that can be utilized carry the following five days before the opening:

"Then use the cuts and pictorial matter on the picture.

"The picture, I feel sure, will do the rest. While it is not a 'drammer,' it is a pictorial biographical story of 'America's Greatest American.' Every man, woman and child knows 'Teddy' and will sure want to see how 'he rose in the world'; and it would not do any harm to sink in the fact that all money realized from the exhibition of the film will be turned over to the Red Cross. A letter to the local patriotic bodies might bring results from this angle.

"This picture might be termed a legacy from Roosevelt to the American people. The picture will tell more and teach more than all the books published about the exploits of his strenuous life.

"During my experience in the picture field there is only one rule to follow: Book a good picture and get the money. But it is not possible unless you tell the folks what you have to sell, and tell it all to them as briefly as possible."

Last week, in the World's own advertising suggestions, reference was made to Literary Digest for January 18, the issue carrying cuts of Colonel Roosevelt at various ages reflected in "The Fighting Roosevelts." We now suggest that exhibitors who play the picture would do well to secure both the January 18 issue and the Digest for January 25. In this last dated periodical will be found excerpts from various newspapers, relating in detail, too, many of the incidents that have been worked into the picture.

There will be found reference to the frontier barroom incident; to the political activities of Roosevelt in Albany; to his work as police commissioner in New York and to the San Juan Hill incident. Cecil DeMille at Work on Edgar Selwyn Story

CECIL B. DEMILLE, whose Artcraft photodrama, "Don't Change Your Husband," is released January 26, has started the filming of his next Artcraft production, the picture taken from a play by Edgar Selwyn, which was recently purchased by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. Mr. Selwyn, by the way, who went to California several weeks ago with Mr. DeMille and has since been at work on the scenario of the new picture, has just returned to New York.

Once again wonderful settings, fine gowns, exquisite furnishings and drama of the highest order, it is said, will be revealed in this production. Moreover, Mr. DeMille is enthusiastic over the dramatic possibilities of the story, which he declares is one of the most vital, timely and powerful that he has ever had the good fortune to work from.

Speaking of elaborateness of investiture, the settings of "Don't Change Your Husband," which was written by Jeanie MacPherson, are the work of Wilfred Buckland, art director. The decorations were arranged by Howard Higgins.

The somewhat ultra-modern fashion of the rooms occupied in the story by Schuyler Van Sutphen deserve particular mention. These are the apartments of a dilettante, an art connoisseur, but reflect the somewhat ephemeral character of the occupant. They are tasteful but give an impression of dandyism.

Newspaper Co-operates With "Movie" Advertisers

THE St. Louis Star is setting an example to other papers in big cities where advertising from moving picture exhibitors is solicited as a part of the amusement display. In addition to running a live and well selected reading department, covering pictures in general, the Star features a directory of theatres where pictures are shown, the exhibitor changing his advertising copy daily.

On the front page of the Star advertisements are not accepted at any price, hence a display announcement there attracts unusual attention. To give their exhibitor advertisers the best possible service the Star runs in prominent display a "box" on its front page carrying this announcement:

Here's a 1,000-Seat House in a Town of 500 Persons

IF the whole town of New Alexandria, Pa., were to attend the local picture house it would be only half full, according to W. F. Huffman, the owner, who said, however, that the surrounding towns and mining settlements contribute a generous share of his patronage. Mr. Huffman, who controls a large construction business, had a large quantity of building material on hand a few years ago and his company also owned a big lot in the town.

It was at the time of the roller skating craze, and he thought he could utilize both the lumber and the lot to advantage, so on the eve of his departure on a Western trip he told his foreman of his plans.

"How big will I make the building?" the foreman inquired. "Oh, fill the lot," answered Mr. Huffman.

When he returned the building was finished, but it was considerably larger than he had anticipated; and so New Alexandria has a 1,000-seat theatre for a 500 population town.

FACTS AND COMMENTS

Oil on the Troubled Film Waters

DOWN in Texas, in the central western part of that vast country, the film business is looking up. Forgotten now are the recent lean days of the closed houses. As our Dallas correspondent points out, Texas has very frankly gone oil mad. While other lines of trade have been hard hit, for once the film business is an exception. Dallas, the center of the exchangemen in Texas, feels the boom. Bookers and shippers are quitting their jobs, exhibitors are leaving their theatres in charge of their wives. All are rushing to the oil fields. In the midst of the turmoil modern picture theatres are taking the places of the temporary structures.

Wives of motion picture managers have been known in bursts of confidence to intimate what would happen if "I were running this theatre." Possibly some of these Texans may return from the oil fields and find things have happened in their absence. Maybe they'll think they don't know so much about the show business after all. You never can tell.

The Open Censorship Season Is On

NOW that the legislative sessions are in full swing the introducers sincere and otherwise of regulatory bills aimed at the film industry are rolling up their sleeves. There must be real pleasure in this exhibitor-baiting sport—that is, if we may judge from the amazing frequency with which these measures pop up year after year. The National Association is laying the foundation for a combat with the forces its members describe as mistaken. Of course, there are times when they have been known to use language possibly a trifle more ungentle. "They shall not pass!" said the poilu on the ramparts outside Verdun. No better motto could be recommended by the association to its various state committees.

Indianapolis Has a Regular Mayor

MAYOR JEWETT, of Indianapolis, is a public official who does his thinking in a clear head and who has the courage of his convictions. He has remarked in the course of the settlement of what had been a local controversy that wholesome entertainment on Sunday, such as that provided by the motion picture theatres of his city, is a community necessity and not a desecration. He has decreed that after February 1 no picture show shall be permitted to open before 1:30 o'clock on Sunday afternoons. While it is of no public concern we do feel like saying that any exhibitor who gets into the clutches of the Indianapolis law for opening his doors before 1:30 on a Sunday afternoon will find no sympathy here. Nor will he either if he is arrested for keeping open after midnight!

Beware the Program Man Bearing Gifts

ELSEWHERE we print a letter from the Chief of Police of Sterling, Ill., in reference to the program swindle. A few weeks ago we published a similar warning of a man operating the same scheme in the New England towns, variously claiming to represent a house in New York or Albany. The scheme has also been worked in New York City very recently and no doubt in other sections of the country. Because the programs are to be supplied without charge to the theatre the manager does not make a rigid investigation, but if you are visited by a stranger who wishes to give you free programs and collect from the local merchants for their advertising, first make certain that the person represents a reputable concern and then warn your local merchants and the banks not to make payment until proof of publication is supplied.

Australia Closes Down Theatres

THE news that comes from Australia is unpleasant, to say the least. The closing down of the theatres in that country due to influenza will mean a loss to the producers of the United States of approximately a million feet of film a month. These are the figures of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce. It is to be regretted there still remain so many communities where the health authorities are unable or unwilling to see the better path as Dr. Copeland of this city has pointed it out—that the danger of infection is probably less in well ventilated theatres than in many other places of public assemblage.

And Now It Is Phil Lang

INFLUENZA again reaches into the film trade this week. The latest victim of the epidemic is Phil Lang, scenario editor of Vitagraph. Like the great majority of the men in a new or comparatively new industry he, too, was in the class of young men—in the early thirties. He had gone far in his profession, however—in fact, he had contributed his full share to elevating scenario writing to the dignity of a profession. And he was an honored member of it.

MAKING SOMETHING HAPPEN

By Edward Weitzel

ONE of the new school of playwrights born of the Little Theatre Movement is an unconscious humorist. The stage directions which follow the description of the first act setting of a play of his contain these words: "For a long time nothing happens."

And sometimes nothing ever happens. Nothing, at least, worth making into a play or a moving picture.

The result of the scenarist's labors occasionally may be summed up in the remark of the gambler's wife from Texas. The lady was being shown through the Mormon Temple at Salt Lake City. The guide had been pointing out the wonders of the building and enlarging upon the difficulties under which it had been erected. Said he:

"When the Mormons came to this place, there was nothing here."

Said the gambler's wife:

"You haven't much here now."

A Small Order for a Playwright

THE business of the playwright is to make things happen. That is why one man leaves his comfortable armchair, his pipe and a half-read book; another man his cheerless hall bedroom, and the Joneses their game of cribbage—they all want to see something happen. A page of life that shall stir their imagination, arouse their sympathies, tickle their sense of humor and take them entirely out of themselves is what they are after.

A small order for a playwright!

What more simple than to string situations together?

And this art of the moving picture is so easy for the beginner—one may tell his story with as many or as few characters as he pleases, and wind and twist about at his own sweet will. All outdoors is at his command, and the resources of the novelist and the landscape painter are his. Very simple, indeed!

No wonder the scenario editors are flooded with contributions.

Stories That Are Self-Willed

BUT there is something more to be said about these contributions that are mailed to the scenario editors in such abundance: Very few of them are accepted for production. The demand for available scenarios is growing more insistent all the time; and the number of rejections is also increasing, in spite of the army of untrained writers that are doing their best to keep the industry supplied with material.

What can be wrong? Is it possible that making things happen in the right way in a scenario is a difficult and highly specialized art? Furthermore, is it another stumbling block in the path of the beginner that some stories are so self-willed and impossible of being guided they defy the skill of the most experienced and able of scenarists to lead them in the way they should go, if they are to fix the attention of the spectator and give him the enjoyment for which he has paid?

Unfortunately, it is even so.

Sustained Mental Action

AN encouraging sign is the appearance of a comparatively new grade of screen story that is based on mental action rather than on physical. Its appeal is intellectual as well as emotional. A recent example is a commendable attempt along these lines.

Its chief merit is the way the mental action is sustained—the skill with which things are made to happen.

Screen fiction is intended for presentation before a body of spectators that may number from two hundred to two thousand.

It requires the art of the playwright to build plots that will meet the demands of such a condition.

A Good Rule to Remember

THE art of playwriting is largely a question of selection. Scenarists should set this down in their book of rules. Also bear in mind that one of the chief sources of power in the moving picture is often made the cause of its greatest weakness—the scope of its material. The stage dramatist is forced to stick to his story. He cannot cut back to this or that unimportant incident or halt the movement of the plot while he throws in a close-up of a baby and follows it up with a long shot of a landscape.

Stick to your story, scenarists, and make things happen.

Pathe Makes Promotions.

O. P. Fauchier, formerly a salesman for Pathe's Indianapolis branch, has been promoted to manager of the Indianapolis branch, succeeding R. F. Schrader, who has been made manager of the Pathe branch in Pittsburgh.

Both of these promotions are in line with Pathe's policy of advancing from the ranks men who have proved their worth. Both Mr. Fauchier and Mr. Schrader are Pathe men who have made good and their promotion to that service.

ONTARIO SHOWMEN TO HAVE EXCHANGE

To Go After Offices Interested in Exhibiting— Have Promise of Support from Producers Here

AFTER months of deliberation, the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Protective Association of Ontario, headquarters at Toronto, has decided to enter the film exchange business, and the formation of the Canadian Exhibitors' Exchange with a capital stock of $100,000 has been started. A prospectus has been issued by Secretary Thomas Scott and stock application forms have been distributed among members, while a committee composed of nine exhibitors of the province has been appointed to canvass the field.

Announcement is made that the association has secured the promise of "abundant support" from several moving picture producing companies in the United States, and it is also planned to co-operate in Toronto with two or three exchanges which have not acquired any moving picture theatres for their own use.

In a circular letter which has been issued by Secretary Scott, it is pointed out that the exhibitors, particularly the members of the association, have a number of grievances, one of which is that one or two exchanges have been bidding for leases of theatres. The result has been that exhibitors have found it necessary to pay considerably more rental in order to save their businesses. An instance is pointed out where one exhibitor was forced to pay $800 more a year for rent in order to retain his theatre.

To Cancel with Exhibiting Exchanges.

At the last general meeting of the association, which boasts of a membership of approximately two hundred exhibitors in the Province of Ontario, it was unanimously decided to cancel contracts with exchanges which are also interested in the exhibiting end of the moving picture industry.

Announcement is made that the Canadian Exhibitors' Exchange will be managed by a board of directors who will be chosen by stock holders annually. The committee appointed to conduct preliminary operations includes: A. A. Huttlemayer, Queen's Theatre, Niagara Falls; J. C. Brady, Madison Theatre, Toronto; W. G. Sturgess, Imperial Theatre, Toronto; J. Crang, Oakwood Theatre, Toronto; F. Guest, Strand Theatre, Hamilton; H. Alexandra, Park Theatre, Toronto; W. Bailie, Cum Bac Theatre, Toronto; W. F. Sexton, Family Theatre, Toronto, and L. Feighan, Eclipse Theatre, Toronto.

GLADISH.

Goldwyn Buys for Moore "The City of Comrades"

SAMUEL GOLDWYN has purchased from Basil King screen rights to the author's remarkable story, "The City of Comrades," serial publication of which has just been concluded in the Saturday Evening Post. It will be a starring vehicle for Tom Moore, following the production he is at present engaged on, "A Man and His Money."

Mr. Goldwyn feels he has reason to be proud of his acquisition of this story by the author of a previous Goldwyn success, "The Spreading Dawn," in which Jane Cowl starred. That also was a Post story. Mr. Goldwyn obtained motion picture rights to "The City of Comrades" in the face of lively competitive bidding from half a dozen of the larger producers.

The action of "The City of Comrades" is laid largely in New York, from which the story takes its name, and this probably will necessitate a trip to the Metropolis from the Coast by Tom Moore early in the spring for the photographing of important exterior scenes. The story gives the Goldwyn star the most humanly sympathetic role he has had. As Frank Melbury, scapegrace son of wealthy parents, he is the central figure in a love story woven with the imaginative skill that is Basil King's and as unlike a hackneyed motion picture plot as it is possible for a story to be.

Run Sunday Shows by Request.

William McKenney, owner of the Empire moving picture theatre in Lancaster, N. Y., has been running Sunday shows on a temporary permit. This action was the outcome of a petition signed by a number of taxpayers for these performances.

Would Amend License Law.

Albany, Jan. 29.

There was introduced in the Assembly today a bill which seeks to amend section 18 of the General City law, by providing that an application for a motion picture operator's license must be accompanied by an affidavit of a licensed operator showing that the applicant has served as his assistant for not less than six months. Permits must be obtained from the license authorty to act as such assistant, and the assistant may not himself operate a machine.

Pittsburgh's Mutual Fast Getting Settled

THE Pittsburgh branch of the Exhibitors' Mutual Distributing Corporation, which was cleaned out by the recent film building fire here, is now doing business at its new location, 123-125 Fourth Avenue, the old Kleine exchange. Manager Rippard states he will have the adjoining storeroom, which will enable him to have one of the largest and best ground-floor locations in Pittsburgh.

Workmen are putting up partitions, paintings, installing vaults, etc., and in a week or so the exchange will be completed and will be the best Mutual ever had in this city. Brand new furniture has already been delivered, and Rippard says he will have an ideal film exchange and one that will meet all requirements of the authorities.

Joe Merrick, assistant sales manager at the home office of the Mutual in New York, was on hand the day after the fire and lent a hand in bringing order out of chaos.

Mutual shipments are being made without a hitch, and the entire force is at work, with the exception of three or four who are still in the hospital.

Allens Still Expand in Canada.

The next new Allen Theatre in Canada will be at Winnipeg, Manitoba, according to an announcement by Ben Allen, president of the Allen Theatrical Enterprises of Toronto. Mr. Allen has been in Winnipeg for some weeks. Three sites are in view, and the theatre will be a million dollar proposition.

The Allen Theatre, Edmonton, was opened in November, and the new Allen house, Regina, was opened in December. The company now has some 35 theatres in the Dominion. The concern now controls the Dominion and Rex theatres in Winnipeg.

Another interesting theatre change in Winnipeg was the recent purchase of the old Osborne Theatre property by R. Kershaw, former president of the Manitoba Exhibitors' Association. This theatre was damaged by fire more than a year ago, but it is to be reconstructed and will be re-opened shortly.

Winnipeg Association's New Offices.

George A. Graham, owner of three successful moving picture theatres in Winnipeg, has been elected president of the Manitoba Exhibitors' Association in succession to R. Kershaw who has resigned. Mr. Graham represents the moving picture business in the Winnipeg Rotary Club and has been an active worker for the film interests in the Province of Manitoba. Other officers for the current year include M. J. Williamson as vice-president, and M. E. Ferguson as secretary-treasurer. The latter was re-elected.

Incidentally a committee of twelve, representing the exhibitors, stage and theatre employes, exchanges as well as dramatic and vaudeville houses, has been busily engaged in organizing the Manitoba Theatrical League and a general meeting of the proposed body will be held shortly in Winnipeg. The first move of the league will be to present a request to the Manitoba Government for the removal of the Provincial Amusement War Tax.

Sheetz Goes to Penitentiary.

Harry L. Sheetz, also known as C. A. Belmar, has been sentenced in Federal Court in Cleveland to one year in the penitentiary. Sheetz was indicted by the federal grand jury in Cleveland in 1914 on a charge of using the mails to defraud. Under the name of Belmar, Sheetz operated the Belmar Moving Picture Company, of Youngstown. He advertised through the United States mails that he would furnish motion picture machines for $15.

The advertisements went into prominent theatres and motion picture show magazines and among those who took up his offer were Wisconsin and Florida people who sent their money but did not receive the machines. Before Sheetz was brought to trial on this charge he was tried and sentenced for horse stealing in Dauphin county, Pennsylvania. Upon his completing his term Sheetz was arrested by a federal officer and taken to Cleveland.

TEXAS OIL BOOM EXCITES PICTURE MEN

Group of Fort Worth Film Merchants Form Big Company—Prospects Good for Many New Houses

OIL, with its alluring promise of fabulous riches acquired over night, is making its disturbing influence felt in motion picture circles of Texas and Oklahoma. With gusher after gusher coming in daily amid the fields at Burkburnett and Ranger Texas has very frankly gone oil mad. Bankers, stenographers, clerks and day laborers are all dabbling in oil stocks, leases and royalties. Fortunes are made in a day and presumably lost just as quickly, although one never hears of the man who loses or "strikes a duster."

Film row in Dallas has lost many of its employes owing to the oil fever. In all parts of North Texas exhibitors have left their shows in the hands of their managers or their wives and have packed their grips to go to the oil fields. Forests of derricks are sprouting through Western Central Texas, and hundreds of oil drilling companies are being organized, with hundreds more to follow.

On Dallas film row an oil company is being organized among the exchangemen. In Fort Worth the motion picture men, with Pierre Levy as trustee, have organized a monster oil company. Everybody's doing it!

While the oil boom has had a depressing effect on other lines of business motion picture men from both theatre and exchange report just the reverse. The excitement has given a touch of life to communities which had been depressed from the influenza, and theatres in Dallas and other Texas towns are crowded. Business is better than in many weeks.

The oil boom saved the moving picture business in Fort Worth. The demobilization of thousands of troops stationed at Camp Bowie was hardly noticed with the influx of oil promoters, investors, drillers, brokers, dealers and office employes by the thousands, all of them prosperous and all of them craving amusement.

Out in the actual oil fields in Eastland, Wichita, Hamilton, Throckmorton, Lampasas, Stephens, Erath and adjoining counties indications are that modern motion picture theatres will be erected in numbers to take the place of the temporary structures erected to accommodate the crowds who have swarmed to what appears to be the greatest oil fields developed in the history of the United States.

The little towns which have sprung up over night will become permanent communities, with the establishing of refineries and the placing of the oil production and sale on a permanent basis following the expansion of the fields and the extension of the boom. Several Dallas business men, it is understood, are interesting themselves in plans for the construction of standard motion picture theatres in this section of Texas.

Just how long the boom will continue even the most optimistic cannot predict. While it lasts the moving picture business should establish a record.

Pittsburgh May Have Two New Exchange Structures

AS a result of the film building fire in Pittsburgh recently this city will very likely get several new film buildings. It is understood the owners of the property at 938 Penn avenue will not make the necessary improvements as laid down by the city authorities, and several capitalists are securing options on locations and getting estimates on the probable cost of such a building.

Two sites are under consideration, and the intention is to make the building large enough to house many of the leading exchanges. Director of Public Safety Pritchard is ill, and his approval of the sites cannot be secured at the present time, but it is thought quick action will be taken and the building erected in a short time as soon as the preliminaries can be arranged.

In addition to this Famous Players-Lasky will erect a building of its own. This concern also has three sites under consideration, and work will be started just as soon as the sanction of the city is forthcoming. Al Lichtman, general manager of distribution, and J. A. Harrison, chief engineer of the building department of the company, were in Pittsburgh January 15, and are looking up sites, building laws, etc.

Good Business in Rural Missouri.

Exhibitors in rural Missouri are enjoying unprecedented success. This is the report brought back by S. J. Baker, manager of the St. Louis First National Exhibitors' Circuit, after a two weeks' tour of rural communities.

"With the boys coming home; with the influenza epidemic departing for parts unknown and with ideal weather, the exhibitors are doing big business," Baker declared. "Every exhibitor I talked with was optimistic."

Few Good Screen Stories Received from Unknowns

REFERRING to the recent announcement of the Fox Film Corporation of the purchase of a story for William Farnum especially written by George V. Hobart, and of the purchase of "Cowardice Court" by George Barr McCutcheon for Peggy Hyland, Hamilton Thompson, William Fox scenario editor, spoke this week of the great difficulty in finding good screen stories outside the work of well-known writers.

"We are anxious to discover new talent," said Mr. Thompson, "but the record of acceptable work from unknowns is not an inspiring one. The willingness of William Fox to give new people every opportunity is well known, and this, added to the value of a new writer securing a Fox production, brings us perhaps more than our share of unsolicited manuscripts. But though they come in a deluge, very, very few—say one out of a hundred—has anything even to recommend it "Manuscripts come written on every conceivable sort of paper (usually on both sides) and in every kind of chirography.

"In spite of all this, we read, or start to read, with an absolutely unprejudiced mind, every story that comes in. A 'find' is occasionally made. But meanwhile most of our stories are furnished by established writers who have developed the expert technique that the writing of motion pictures requires. We are about to announce a number of new manuscripts thus secured, which will add some equally famous names to those already on the Fox list of well-known authors."

COURTESY TO RULE UNIVERSAL IN 1919

President Laemmle Outlines Distribution Policy and Reviews Work of the Past Year

CARL LAEMMLE, president of the Universal Film Co., has outlined the distribution policy of Universal for 1919 and according to his statements the outstanding features of the new rule are "courtesy" and "co-operation."

The great success attained by Universal during 1918 has been the subject of much comment among distributors and exhibitors of the country during the past few months, and in laying stress upon the great strides Universal made along the highway of success last year Mr. Laemmle expresses the opinion that 1919 is to be a banner year for his organization and for exhibitors displaying its products.

According to the executive Universal's success in 1918 was chiefly due to the producing of big, timely films with unquestionable box office value, the proper exploitation of them by Universal and by exhibitors with Universal's assistance. It is pointed out that "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin," "The Geezer of Berlin," "Crashing Through to Berlin," "For Husbands Only," "The Talk of the Town" and many other Universal pictures were among the biggest box office successes of the past year. Mr. Laemmle states that these films were a success because they were truly extraordinary productions, but that they were developed into record breakers because Universal felt its duty to the exhibitor did not end with the delivery of the celluloid reels to the exhibitors but ended only when the limit of co-operation had been reached.

"All Universal exchanges are now being conducted by men with long exchange experience and who have knowledge of the exhibitors' difficulties as well as their own end of the business," said Mr. Laemmle. "A merit system has been inaugurated among exchange managers. Not alone will they be judged by their sales records but by the number of complaints they receive from exhibitors. Our district managers are making regular inspections of all exchanges and are empowered with authority to settle all disputes. Each claim against exchanges is to be thoroughly investigated and settled fairly and as speedily as possible.

"Universal's 1919 policy is an innovation of which it is justly proud. No other company has ever attempted such a big co-operative campaign. Universal is banking on this new policy to bring about its greatest success."

Universal City Men Back from French Battle Front

THREE former Universal City employes returned from France January 26 with the camouflage battalion, assigned to the Fortieth Engineers, following over ten months of constant work on the firing front. Lieutenant Lee Lawson, former technical director and the organizer of the Los Angeles camouflage unit; Sergeant Clarence De Witt and Sergeant Harry Divver are the returning soldiers, and each has an interesting tale of his experience, trying to "fool Fritz" in France.

Lieutenant Lawson stated that the camoufleurs accompanied every regiment in the army into the firing lines and worked under observation of the enemy for ten months, sometimes all night as well as all day.

Lieutenant Lawson was wounded at Chateau Thierry by a falling aeroplane and at the second battle of the Marne by machine gun bullets, Sergeant De Witt was gassed twice and Sergeant Divver was wounded twice.

Lieutenant Lawson stated that Master Engineer Carroll, formerly employed at the Lasky studios at Hollywood, having passed through ten months of warfare without a scratch, contracted influenza while en route from the front to Brest, France, and died before the train reached its destination.

After the eastern members of the camouflage unit are mustered out at Washington Lieutenant Lawson will take the western members of the battalion to Los Angeles, where they are sure to receive a hearty welcome.

BOTH FORD AND GOLDWYN BOOST WEEKLY

Two Sales Organizations Combine Forces to Place 7,000 Contracts on Educational Release

IN every section of the United States the Goldwyn organization has begun an intensive sales campaign to close contracts with a minimum of two thousand exhibitors in the smaller towns for the Ford Educational Weekly. This campaign is in keeping with the wishes of Henry Ford.

In a sales campaign that began the day after Thanksgiving Goldwyn booked several thousand contract customers for the Ford Weekly prior to the first release of this attraction through Goldwyn on January 12. Naturally the larger portion of this business at the outset began at the top, assuring in the beginning the big first-run accounts, then the neighborhood or second-run houses in every community.

With this accomplished a map of the United States took its place in the selling mechanism of Goldwyn as applied to the marketing of the Weekly, and the present campaign calls for the placing of contracts in every county in all the states and territories of the Union in which there is a motion picture theatre. Simultaneously sales effort is being directed toward placing the Weekly with every grange or farmers' organization in the United States, as well as with fraternal and lodge organizations and churches in little communities.

Henry Ford's gigantic mechanism is accustomed to sales efficiency from its own people and expects it from any organization having business relations with it. It is ready at all times to give its closest co-operation to help its distributor ally close up "open spots" in its war map, and is alert to discover unsold points and help in devising ways of selling them.

There are in the United States alone 10,500 sales agents of the Ford Motor Company. Not only are these representatives called upon to canvass every motion picture theatre and exhibitor within their reach, but they are called upon personally to produce each a minimum of one theatre contract.

Not until there are 7,000 individual contracts for that number of theatres in hand will Goldwyn or Henry Ford feel that they are obtaining the necessary circulation for the Weekly. Forthcoming releases of the Ford Educational Weekly are: February 3—"Carrying Old Glory to the Seven Seas"; 10—"Canada's Mountain of Tears"; 17—"Where 'Spirit That Won' was Born"; 24—"Rough Stuff."

Shun Program Men

APPARENTLY there is an epidemic of what is known as the program swindle, for from several parts of the country there have come complaints from managers who have innocently aided these operators to swindle local business men. This letter from the chief of police of Sterling, Ill., is self-explanatory of the scheme:

City of Sterling, Illinois,
Police Department,
January 20, 1919.

Moving Picture World,
New York City.

The early part of this month a man by the name of A. J. Klien, representing the Klien Poster Program Company of Chicago, made his appearance in Freeport, this state, and also in Sterling. His scheme is to induce the local manager of some showhouse to agree to use his programs, the manager to take him around and introduce him to the business men of the city in order to sell them space in the program. Of course, wherever possible, he would collect in advance for these advertisements and that would be the last seen of A. J. Klien.

I have a letter from the police department of Chicago stating that there is no such firm as the Klien Poster Program Company in that city.

Would it be asking too much of your firm to publish this man and stop his game? It is easy to work and no doubt he is still plying his trade.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

New York Advertising.

PROBABLY no city in the country offers such poor motion picture advertising, except in isolated instances, as New York. Eighty per cent. of them cannot afford to go into the newspapers even where a price concession is made, and the rest do little or no real advertising. Look at this motion picture department from the Evening Mail, one of the newspapers making a special effort to get picture advertising.

but two of them show real selling talk. Just two out of fifty-eight houses tell their patrons not only what they have, but make an effort to sell them. The United States tells that it has "The Famous Drury Lane Success." That is not much, but it is at least an effort to interest the possible patron. The Plaza, advertising "Cannibals of the South Seas," does a little better. It tells that this film was made at the risk of death. These are absolutely the only two displays out of 58 which do more than tell the title and star. Twenty-four houses announce the play and star, and one advertises the title without mention of the players. The other thirty-one houses merely announce "special feature" or some similar line. The cut shows a section of the third column taken from a little below the top. Just one of the nine spaces mentions the attraction, and this is a combined picture and vaudeville house. One theatre advertises, "Extra program today," but loses any value this announcement may have by keeping it standing. This is just as bad as "special feature," which seems to be the favorite line. The idea of putting in advertising is to get people to come to a theatre. It does not pay merely to advertise a theatre. Most of these houses are neighborhood houses. Everyone in that section knows that it is a theatre, and that it is on a certain street between two other streets. They do not have to look in a newspaper to discover that fact. When they consult a paper it is to see what is playing at the house, and if they are merely told that it is a special feature they lose interest. It is a plain waste of money to buy space and then not use it. It might help where the titles are named even in a city spread over the area of New York, but the essence of the directory idea is that it lists the plays and possibly draws persons from other sections who desire to see some particular production. If the productions are not named, then the use of the space does not even help the paper. It gives the sheet a certain advertising income, but it spoils what might be made a feature by keeping it dead and without interest. It is not an easy matter to get display in a single half or three-quarters of an inch, nor is it supposed that the house expects display in the small space it buys, but a few of the houses do get something approaching display in a three-quarter space, as the cut shows. They also manage to get some prominence through a reverse signature cuts. Of these the Adelphi stands out best on the page. It also gives the best proportioning of the space.

Most of the suburban houses look more to the neighborhood paper to carry their advertlsing, and we reproduce a portion of a page from one of the Brooklyn papers. This has three editions, covering three suburban sections, and carries mostly local notes and personals. It reaches about eighty per cent. of the possible patrons, since it costs but five cents a month by route boys. Here the spaces taken are larger, but there is still the same lack of selling talk. The paper is a weekly, coming out Saturdays, so the bill for the coming week must be given in full, but no effort is made to advertise the Saturday showings, and only the larger of the houses come into the advertlsing space—those which might be termed sectional rather than neighborhood houses. Most of the advertisers seem to trust to the liberal reading notices given to sell the attractions, and even the Brooklyn downtown houses do not play up their features with other than the announcement. The two smaller displays are for the leading Loew houses, the Metropolitan being the latest and largest of the Loew Brooklyn houses, though it does not get better than two two and a quarters, while the De Kalb gets three and a halfs. In each instance the space is shared with vaudeville. With only two changes of bill, it should be possible to offer the menu more invitingly. Most of the Brooklyn houses trust to programs and limited local posting. They do not seem to make any effort to get the people in with newspaper appeal, even where they take space. The regular Brooklyn papers (as opposed to the locality paper) do not do much, and there is little more given than the bare announcement. It all goes in big display, and any sellling argument that is carried goes in the reading notices. About the best Brooklyn advertiser is the Brevoort, with two five and a halfs. This lists the soloists and the selections to be played by the orchestra. It is in a good residential section and apparently finds that it pays to play up good music. It ls about the only house to use this appeal, though several houses have good music. It ls hardly to be expected that the outlying houses can spend much money for general circulation, but they might, at least, make good use of what space they do buy.

The larger New York houses are the only ones coming into the general run of theatrical advertising in all of the daily papers, and the Rialto, Rivoli, Strand and Broadway are about the only regulars. The Strand takes more space than either the Rialto or Rivoli because those two houses can pair their display and get about the same effect. The general Rialto and Rivoli is about a two two and a halfs, in which the two houses share the space. There is not much room for selling space and little effort is made to give more than the main tltle and the review, which is a house number. The filler reels are not mentioned. More might be sald in the same space without loss of display. There is certainly room for a full list of the subjects, but the house seems to sink or swim on the big feature, as a rule. This is not always a winning scheme, as often the two houses have some single that will help sell if people only knew about it. The Strand takes a double three and a half, using a hand-lettered design where this is permitted. The advertisement clipped is from a Chrlstmas display, which accounts for the Christmas trees on the sides. The hand work is clear, but it does not stand comparison with type display. Compare the hand-lettering with this display from the Times, which does not permit drawn designs nor over-heavy type. At first glance the advertisement seems less conspicuous than the drawing, but it is more legible and it is easier to —We'd like to charge two dollars admission for the big photoplay production which opens at the Broadway Theatre to-night, but we're not going to.

—We'd like to be able to say to the rest of the world, "This picture played to $2 per head in New York." But we're not going to.
—We think the production is worth $2 of your money, but of course we're prejudiced; so we're going to put the devilish temptation behind us.
—We're not going to raise the regular prices at all. We've decided it will have a better effect if we send you away from the Broadway Theatre feeling that you got more entertainment for your money than you ever got in your whole mad career.
—We don't know how to advertise "The Heart of Humanity" because so many great things have been said about ordinary pictures that there's nothing new left to say when a really big thing like this comes along.
—So we're hoping that our plan of playing at regular prices will result in your doing all of our advertising for us, mouth to mouth or heart to heart.
—We are betraying no confidence when we say we hope the Broadway Theatre will be packed every afternoon and evening as long as "The Heart of Humanity" continues to throb.

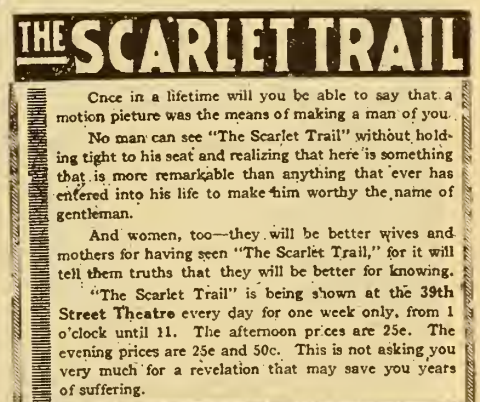
pick up from the printed page. The small lines are six point as against a relative ten point for the hand work, yet they are more easily read, and get over better. For legibility the hand work can never compare with the clearly-cut type faces. Were it possible to read the hand work more easily, type faces would have been cut along those lines long ago. As it stands, the type books give but two faces in imitation of hand-lettering, the Pen Print and Pen Print Bold, and these have but a limited use, and like the script letters these faces are small for their point size. Compare these two examples and you will realize that the type has the advantage.

The Broadway now and then uses a reading advertisement, more or less along the lines of the Griffith advertising. It tried this cheme for "The Heart of Humanity," taking a double five and a half inch space. The reading advertisement is



THE SCARLET TRAIL
Once in a lifetime will you be able to say that a motion picture was the means of making a man of you.
No man can see "The Scarlet Trail" without holding tight to his seat and realizing that here is something that is more remarkable than anything that ever has entered into his life to make him worthy the name of gentleman.
And women, too—they will be better wives and mothers for having seen "The Scarlet Trail," for it will tell them truths that they will be better for knowing.
"The Scarlet Trail" is being shown at the 39th Street Theatre every day for one week only, from 1 o'clock until 11. The afternoon prices are 25c. The evening prices are 25c and 50c. This is not asking you very much for a revelation that may save you years of suffering.

conspicuous beyond its size where the rest of the page is in display, and it gets a lot of talk over in small compass—and size is important where there are ten or fifteen papers to be covered seven times a week. The argument in this display ls not as good as it might be, for the essence of the talk is to the effect that they might put the show in the Broadway and raise the prices for the sake of telling the out-of-town patrons that it cost two dollars on Broadway, and it adds that prices are not raised because the management wants to send the public away satisfied that it was the best entertainment ever bought for that money. On its face this sounds like good argument, but many are apt to feel that the Broadway would have charged two dollars had the show really been worth that price, and from thinking that will believe that it is not much above the average. The straining for frankness is apt to create the wrong impression and make people believe that the show is not as good as it really is. Another reader advertisement in the same issue is for the propaganda film, "The Scarlet Trail." This is only a double three and a half and is unusual in that the name of the house is buried in the body of the text instead of being used as a signature. This works all right in this instance, for the text is in ten point, and with the name set in full-face it is easy to pick it from the body of the story. These two readers considerably augment the volume of display in the regular papers, for, as a rule, the Broadway space runs much smaller and the four advertisements are all that a majority of the papers get. There are so many issues that to take proper space in all of them would bankrupt the most prosperous house, and yet all must share alike, so it is split up into unimpressive fractions. Now and then a film is advertised with pages and half pages, and it keeps the press agents talking for weeks.

Here's a Scheme.

The Dayton Theatre, Dayton, Ohio, worked a good idea for Christmas. The house changes twice weekly, and in the usual course the Christmas bill would have been the same feature already shown for two days, but by booking in "The Greatest Thing in Life" for a four-day run, they not only got an exceptional attraction, but they opened the day with a new bill that would get the crowd which has already seen the previous bill on Sunday, Monday and Tuesday. The Christmas display was a three tens, mostly type lettering, though the chief title is obscured by the lettering. In the reproduction it is bad, but even in the original the letters run so closely together that they must be puzzled out. They are half an inch in height, but owing to the length of the title, they are so closely set together that only a person familiar with the title is able to read it at first glance. It will sell as a Christmas attraction, but it points the moral that hand-lettering is something to be employed sparingly and with caution.

Not Well Patronized.

Here is a reproduction of a page from the Baltimore Sun. It is a well-conducted page, but it gets surprisingly little patronage, all things considered. There are but 58 column inches used by sixten advertisers. It should be possible to take larger space than this, and it would be politic, as well, for a paper of the influence of the Sun can do much for the pictures and should be encouraged in its work by liberal support. There is also a directory running a little more than seven fours, with 23 houses scheduled. Most of those 23 houses should be represented in display ads. The daily paper that comes to be recognized as a picture organ becomes a power, and if it should decide to drop the department because of lack of support, it will actually hurt attendance through creating the impression that the vogue of the picture is over. This may appear to be far-fetched, but it is none the less true.

The Photoplay Page from the Baltimore Sunday Sun, Which Shows a Rather Small Advertising Support When the Value of the Vehicle Is Considered.

Forecasts.

The Elmwood, Buffalo, tried a new one in a recent program, in the shape of weather forecasts, printed just about the date box at the top of each page. Of course it is not practicable to give the forecast for an entire week, and it is just this point which constitutes the catch. People see the caption, tell themselves it is impossible, and then read the first one to verify their suspicions. They get something like:

Clouds will lift for those who spend the afternoon or evening at the Elmwood.

No squalls on the voyage of 1919 for those who seek leisure at the Elmwood.

Blue Mondays and Troublesome Tuesdays do not exist for those who get their sunshine at the Elmwood.

The Elmwood program runs a page to a bill, one or two days to the program, and this permits the forecast to run at the top of the page on each bill. And the Elmwood does one thing worth while copying. It repeats the Sunday program. Most programs run from Monday to Sunday, and are distributed to the patrons on Saturday. The Elmwood gives the bill for two Sundays and gets in many who may have forgotten the Sunday bill from the preceding program.

Catching Up.

Having overlooked the Mrs. Charlie Chaplin bet with "Borrowed Clothes," the Casino, Chicago, promptly proceeded to catch up with "When a Girl Loves." This does not seem to be a regular title for a Harris feature, but it works in well with a honeymooner, and perhaps it was specially printed up for this department. Mrs. Chaplin is almost better advertised than her husband. We do not like that heart background for the portrait. The cut is too fine a screen and fades into the background. A stipple effect would have been better. Here is a case where Benday would have worked well.

Projection Department

Conducted by F. H. RICHARDSON

Important Notice.

OWING to the mass of matter awaiting publication, it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second sets of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Disgusted and Discouraged.

Recently the editor visited a very high class theatre in this city. He watched the show, and then mounted to the projection room to wish the men behind the whole works the compliments of the season. Naturally they asked how we liked the show, and we replied to the effect that, barring several fine examples of stupidity on the part of the man who directed the production, and a bit too much speed, at places, in the projection, it was excellent. And this is about what then took place in the conversation line:

Projectionist: "Yes, I know it is too fast, but the schedule time is too short for the film we have."

Editor: "You are wrong. Only in a few places was the projection speed fast enough to do real injury. Had you been on the job at the observation port and slowed down on those scenes, making up the time on some scenes where a bit more speed would have worked no damage, you could have made the whole thing quite acceptable."

Pro.: "I grant you that, Mr. Richardson, but here is the situation: My manager does not appreciate that kind of work. He does not pay salary enough to justify the strain of that sort of thing, for it is a strain to project in that way. At Christmas he gives each employe a small sum in money, and the ushers get just as much as do we here in the projection room. I have worked hard. I have tried to do my duty, and now all I want to do is get out of a profession to which such slight recognition is shown, and in which hard conscientious work meets with no reward worth speaking of. I am discouraged and disgusted! The very highest grade of work gets no recognition, but if we run into a bad carbon and for fifteen seconds the light is bad there is plenty of hell raised, and we are lucky if some squarehead in the audience does not indulge in sarcasm at our expense."

Mr. Exhibitor, I wish I might grab your combined necks and rub your combined noses on the foregoing. I would like to make you go without food or drink until you had read it at least two thousand times! It is every word truth, more shame to you! How do you expect good work if you offer no encouragement to your projectionist? Haven't you ordinary intelligence enough to grasp the simple fact that it is nothing short of an insult to place your projectionists on the same level with your ushers, in Christmas presents or in anything else? Good pay and good working conditions are absolutely essential, because without them you cannot get good men; but there is no use getting good men if you, by your attitude and treatment, show that you don't appreciate good work. If you, Mr. Exhibitor or Manager, don't care a d——n, why should your projectionist? If you show that you consider your projectionists as of no particular importance, why should your projectionists labor hard to excel? If you show by your actions that you don't consider the projection room as worthy of any especial consideration, is it not just human nature that the men therein will adopt an "I-should-worry" attitude? And is not that going to react on your screen to the damage of your box office? Answer me that!

Just as the projectionist with whom I was talking, so will your men become discouraged and disgusted. They will cease to try to excel! Especially with the high-class man who is capable of high grade work a word or act of encouragement goes a long ways.

For years the editor of this department has made this department a leader in projection matters all over the English-speaking world. It has been hard work. In the face of the fact that he could command even a higher remuneration elsewhere he has stuck to the Moving Picture World, and intends to stick. He doesn't mind the hard work, and it is very hard sometimes, too. Why?

I'll tell you! It is for the simple reason that the individuals composing the Chalmers Publishing Company have been and are my FRIENDS. They have appreciated what I have done. They have encouraged me by that appreciation. They have not tried to place me on the level of the office boy. Do you think I could or would do what I have done for money alone? Not on your life. I am well paid, yes. But that I accept merely as something which could not well be otherwise. My inspiration to excel comes from the recognition my work receives from those who pay my salary and the encouragement that gives me to strive to deserve it. And it is even so with your projectionists, Mr. Exhibitor, provided they be men worth having in your projection room at all.

Convey to them the idea that their work is of slight importance, and very soon they will not be straining any nerves to excel. Sneer at the art of projection and very soon there will not be any art to it. Put the projectionist on the level of the usher and soon he will be interested in just one thing, viz., drawing his pay Saturday night. When Richardson tries to talk to him of high class work he'll yawn and say: "Aw h——l, what's th' use"? And another blow will have been dealt the long suffering motion picture industry.

Griffiths Explains Divergence of Ray.

John Griffiths has heeded our request for more light by focusing his thinker and projecting the following a matter of sixty miles or more to the department screen:

"With reference to your comment on Solar's letter, p. 1078, December 7 issue, in which you ask our views as to what limits divergence of rays beyond aperture. First, principal rays do not represent theory only. The principal rays mean the central ray of the bundle of rays coming from each point of the object. The principal ray is a very important factor, in that it is by this ray we determine the true direction of each bundle, or cone of rays. Now, understanding that a cone, or bundle of rays, emanates or comes from every pin-point of the object (the front surface of the condenser in the case under discussion), and that the rays forming these cones, or bundles, are and must be divergent from the surface of the object, still the cones, or bundles, are, as a whole, convergent, since the points on the object whence the cones emanate may be widely separated, and the ray diameter is, as a whole, reduced. An apt illustration of what I mean would be two hunters shooting at a target placed 100 feet distant, using shotguns. Let us suppose the marksmen themselves to be separated by 20 feet. The shot "scatters" and covers a circle three feet in diameter at the target. A line drawn through the gun sight to the bullseye would correspond to the principal ray. Each gun would shoot a diverging stream of shot, and a line through sights to target would be convergent from each hunter to the bullseye, although the shot-streams would themselves be divergent. That is why it is necessary to base our calculations on the direction of the principal, or central rays, and it has been lack of knowledge of this one thing which has caused so much discussion as to where the image of the object is reversed. Actual test will show that the reversal is always at the plane where the principal rays meet the axis, and that is why, in photography and in lantern-slide projection, the reversal always takes place within the lens. If the image reversal takes place outside the lens in motion picture projection, it must be because the principal rays meet outside the lens, and a careful study of the incident light in M. P. projection proves this to be the case, as I shall show.

"In your diagram B, in the article under discussion (December 7 issue), conditions are illustrated which do not occur in practice, although the illustration is sufficiently clear that I get your meaning. Referring to above diagram, the film point receives rays from all parts of condenser surface A—B, hence will project a complete image of the condenser surface, and the line of direction will be along a line drawn from the center of the condenser through the point of the film involved. The line of direction must therefore, perforce, be diverging away from the axis, hence will need the refractive power of the projection lens to make it reach the axis again. As these center, or principal rays leave the axis at the condenser surface, they will reach the axis again at the image of the condenser surface, which is the cause of the reversal of the film image at the condenser image, instead of within the lens, as in photography; also it is the reason why the projection problem differs from the photographic problem. In projection we have to guard against the divergence of the principal rays, which, under ordinary conditions becomes insolavable if the E.F. exceeds 7 or 8 inches, but under photographic conditions, or in stereopticon projection this handicap is not encountered because the principal rays are convergent to the lens.

A little consideration will show that only a single ray, or a small parallel beam could pass through a point of film under the conditions shown, as from one point of the crater. Beyond point R would be an arc image of the condenser surface (Cannot accept that latter. True, the condenser image is carried in the beam at that point, but it is too tremendously out of focus to be dignified by the name 'image.'—Ed.), so that the film point would only pass one point of the condenser image, instead of the whole image, but if the whole image were at R, then the point of film would receive rays from all points of the condenser surface (see diagram), hence would project a full image of the condenser, and its size would be in proportion to the distance from film to condenser and the film to the lens. I think the question you want answered is what kind of bundle or cone of rays would pass through a point of the film if the crater were not exactly focused at the film, and this is, I believe, answered by the dagram accompanying this letter."

In short, brother Griffith, you, as I understand the matter, hold that the rays in lower portion of cone or bundle X pass through the film in straight lines, without divergence. In other words, that the individual cones of light from points on object (condenser) continue straight ahead until intercepted by the projection lens. You hold, in short, that the individual cone action is as per figure 1, in which A, B is the condenser surface, C the aperture, D the projection lens, E, E the principal rays, and F their crossing point. Your claim is that only the principal ray has to do with focus, and that the crater will be focused only at point F, insofar as concerns those two cones of light. Well, I dunno! However, reverting, in mind, to figure 47, page 119 of the handbook, I guess there can be no question but that figure 1 does illustrate the exact action; also figure 48, same page, shows conclusively that each individual spot of the screen is illuminated by a point of the condenser. Studying these two photographs merely serves to impress me with the fact that we still have worlds of things to learn about the projector optical system.

What Society Owes the Returning Projectionist Soldier.

Corporal G. A. Yager, a former projectionist and department correspondent, writes from Wichita Falls:

"Just read article by W. A. Oswald, E. E., December 14 issue. Am of the same opinion as he with regard to desirability of standardization of examinations, though, as you say, it is impractical in these United States at this time at least. With regard to making projectionists of our disabled soldiers, it would be a decided injustice to those men in the army [illegible] projectionists before they entered the service. It is a well known fact that the supply of projectionists exceeds the demand—not the best kind, I'll admit, but the best the average theatre manager is willing to pay for. No course—not even the one Mr. Oswald describes—can give a man sufficient experience to successfully compete with able-bodied men who have already had years of experience. This is true, even though the man completing the course may have the better technical knowledge. All kinds of promises were made to us men who enlisted or were drafted into the army, but it seems to me the only ones receiving any visible encouragement or support in the matter of re-employment are those who have been wounded and those who were farmers before enlisting.

In the foregoing, I have spoken out of my own experience, I am expecting a discharge at any time now, and naturally am looking 'round for a position. Not one projectionist in a thousand could make a successful farmer, and where will we discover that curiosity, a projectionist who wants to be a farmer? I have written everyone who I know in this territory, but have found nothing open. Just how is the discharged soldier, with dependents, expected to go on living when he has finished doing "his bit" and is dropped? If you, Friend Richardson, know of any one wanting a projectionist, will you be good enough to let me know."

Mighty pertinent questions Friend Yager is asking! When we (society at large) wanted the man's services, and maybe his life (with mighty small monetary return), we spoke real loud about "patriotism," and how we would do our part by taking care of him when he returned. We and the average employer drew rosy pictures of friend doughboy marching majestically home with laurels on his brow, all the girls kissing him (unmarried ones we speak of now, of course), roses strewed in his path and his job waiting to receive him back into its open arms, probably at increased pay—though even our superior brand of enthusiasm when we wanted him to go did not always quite compass the latter. Oh, yes, we were going to do wonders, we were. But that's all over and past, and the doughboy has done his part. The war is over, and now it's "the morning after." The first few thousands of returning ones were greeted with a roar of whistles, howling mobs, and the world was theirs. Cigarettes rained from windows as they passed. Pumpkin pies were thrust into their hands, and girls waved and threw kisses as they were joy-ridden about. And the mob yelled itself hoarse. That was the first few days. Then the next few days they did the same thing, but with decidedly l-e-s-s noise. Then some ships came in with less whistles and less crowds. And now, when the return has, as it were, but barely started, the Government has ordered that no more whistles or noise producing instruments be turned loose when transports come in. And I venture the guess that within a few weeks the returning soldier will get mighty little greeting from any outside relatives and personal friends, or delegations of societies whose duty it is to meet them. Lucky was the man who got back on the first boats. He gobbled the reception which should have been spread around to include all.

But to get back to the projectionist. Society did not intend to lie to you, Brother Yager. It meant precisely what it said when it said it. But that was long ago. The "morning after" things look very different, you know. The I. A. T. S. E. & M. P. M. O. and the editor of this department have done what was possible to shut off what seemed a deliberately planned scheme to flood the profession not with half-trained men, but rather men with no adequate training at all. We pointed out to the Vocational Educational Board down in Washington the injustice of such a course, both to the disabled soldier and to the men who had given up their positions in good faith, expecting to return to them when discharged from the army or navy. The I. A. will do all that is humanly possible to take care of its returned members. This department will be more than glad to act as a medium to put managers in touch with returned soldier projectionists, so far as it is practical so to do. But unfortunately such a thing is hardly practical because it would involve too much delay.

To sum the whole thing, Brother Yager, we appreciate your position, and know exactly how you feel, but it is the way of the world. It is easy to create a debt (society owes you a job as projectionist when you return), but d——d hard to pay it.

Impertinent Criticism.

Not so very long ago a certain projectionists' union took umbrage because I, in dealing with another matter connected with the union, made the statement that, according to reports, its members were not delivering the goods in proportion to the high scale they were receiving.

To this the union took exception, declaring my criticism of matters in that city to be "impertinent." I have since had the work in the town in question carefully checked up by two thoroughly competent men, both of whom agree that my criticism was fully justified. One of these men timed one of the projectionists, who merely glanced through the observation port at his screen three times in seven minutes. But I only mention this incident as citing the reason for this editorial.

In the first place, I most emphatically dispute the proposition that criticism of projection in any city can possibly be "impertinent," so long as it is honest and made from apparently good grounds. The projectionist holds a public position. Hundreds or perhaps thousands of people each day pay an admission price, the "value received" of which will depend largely upon what the public sees upon the screen. More than this, if the result upon the screen is good, but through lack of knowledge, indifference or laziness on the part of the projectionist there is waste of machinery (unnecessary wear or other damage), or of electric power, or of light (which means wasted power), or of film life, then the industry as a whole is saddled just to that extent with unnecessary overhead expense, which must be paid for in the end by the public. It therefore follows that the projectionist cannot crawl back into his shell and declare it to be the business of no one but him and his boss what he does, or that criticism is "impertinent." In the city in question the criticism does not so much concern actual screen results, though my reports have it that there is little or no artistry in governing projection speed (which may or may not be the fault of the projectionists) as with rewinding practice, failure to watch screen, failure to match up optical systems to avoid waste and other items having to do with economy of projection practice. One projectionist in the city in question was seen to rewind a large reel of film from and to a very crooked reel in less than one minute. As nearly as the observer was able to tell without close inspection the film was first-run, or very nearly so. I venture the assertion that this one rewinding injured that film, assuming it to be comparatively new, not less than fifty cents per thousand feet. Is not such raw work a just subject for criticism. Can a man call criticism of such a bonehead action impertinent? Personally, I would call him impertinent to call himself a projectionist or even an operator. He is not a good imitation of either. He either does not know the first elements of his business, or else is too infernally lazy to arrange his rewinder for proper rewinding speed. Of course, it may be said in rebuttal that the projectionist must work with what he has, or that he is forced to do rewinding while projecting, and is therefore forced to hurry through the operation. In some cases where the manager refuses to supply a motor for rewinding, and obliges his projectionist to rewind while projecting, the excuse has just ground, but even in these cases it is no uncommon thing to find a projectionist rewinding at race-horse speed, and then loafing around the room while the motor runs the show. Only when the projectionist hurries through the rewinding and then immediately gives his undivided attention to the screen is the excuse a real one. Where a motor is supplied it is possible for the projectionist to reduce its speed to the proper rewinding speed (10 minutes to the thousand feet of film where possible, and in no case less than five minutes), and, if he does not do it, I don't call him the right man in the right place by several long jumps. And rewinding is just one item in many. There is a fallacious idea prevalent among projectionists that so long as they have a brilliant, fairly evenly illuminated picture, without discoloration of the light, their work is high class. Piffle! These things are of great importance, of course, but they are merely a few items in the long list necessary to make up high class work.

But to get back to our subject. Let no projectionist or projectionist union for one holy minute imagine itself to be immune from criticism. The very idea is in itself impertinence to the industry. We are all justly subject to criticism—heaven knows I get my share, and welcome it because it shows my possible faults and how to improve.

Framing by Picture Light.

B. A. Aughinbaugh, Mingo, Ohio, submits the following:

"Have made a little discovery, which, while doubtlessly old, came as a convenient surprise to me, hence could not help mentioning it to you. You have advised the framing of the picture before it is projected to the screen; also you have advised various plans, such as battery lamps inside the head, swinging lamps in front of the projection lens, et cetera, to give light for this purpose. I did not find the swinging lamp convenient, and substituted a flash lamp until a week ago, when our flash lamp battery went dead and I tried threading without same. To my surprise I found the light reflected from the screen on which the other machine was projecting a picture was ample for the purpose. I also found it gave a truer frame than did the flash-lamp method.

"Just now we are puzzled by failure of our voltmeter to register until main switch is thrown in, although it is on the dynamo side thereof."

Your plan of threading with light reflected from the screen is, of course, childishly simple, but do you know it is a stunt which, obvious as it is, had never occurred to me, and I venture a very large percentage of the men will have to admit the same thing. To accomplish it the revolving shutter must be set in open position and the fire shutter must be open, of course. As to the other matter, I am writing you by mail concerning it. You have things somewhat twisted—your ideas, I mean. Maybe I can set you right.

An Old Idea.

Andrew L. Stone, Jr., San Francisco, sends drawing of shutter, with following letter:

"Have an idea for flicker reduction which I have no means of trying out thoroughly. The idea is to have a revolving shutter consisting of one main blade of just the necessary width, and then, instead of having one or two flicker blades, to have three or four of smaller dimensions, which would tend to equalize the flicker. Diagram explains."

Sorry, Friend Stone, but your idea is an old one, and wont work. Aside from that one item it is all right. The reason it wont work is that you would have one comparatively long period of darkness and then several short ones, whereas flicker is reduced to its lowest denomination by having periods of light and darkness of equal duration and spaced equally apart. I can hardly imagine a form of two or three-wing revolving shutter which has not already been tried, tried and retried time, time, time and again.

Likes the Handbook.

The following extract from a letter from Clifford T. Winters, Sun Theatre, Gothenburg, Nebraska, is typical of many communications:

"Please find attached my personal check for $3.40 for year's subscription to Moving Picture World and both sets of questions. Received third edition of the Handbook some time ago. Am very much in love with it. In fact, I just could not get along without it. The handbook certainly is a mighty big thing for the projectionist. I realize I am only an operator. Have been projecting along for a year, and it is my ambition to become a real projectionist, in all that term implies. I can see plainly there are no better text books or mediums for learning than the Handbook and the projection department of the Moving Picture World. Have derived much valuable knowledge from them both already, and expect to derive more."

And there you are! The receipt of just such letters as this is a very common occurrence in this office. In both the Handbook and the department we try to deliver the goods, and the proof that the Handbook is the real thing is found in the fact that its sale was practically as great during the past year as it was the first year it came out. It sells itself. A projectionist has but to examine the book carefully to decide that he really needs it in his business. Those who have bought them are our best book salesmen.

Uses Handbook to Great Advantage.

Joseph H. Parker, Anyox, British Columbia, asks for address of the J. K. & E. Company, which has been forwarded by mail, and says:

"As soon as you publish the book, 'Questions and Answers on Projection,' I shall be in a hurry to forward its price. Am anxiously awaiting publication of the new lens charts. Have third edition of handbook and have used it to great advantage. Best wishes for the New Year."

Don't know where the good neighbor absorbed the idea that I am expecting to publish a book, "Questions and Answers on Projection." Might do that some time in the future, but at present the handbook serves the purpose in seemingly very satisfactory fashion. May the coming year bring you all kinds of good fortune, friend Parker.

Raymond W. Fisher, Fairbury, Neb., orders question booklets and says:

"When are manufacturers going to give us the left-hand projector? It would be a good move, for when a man is working on the right-hand projector with the left-hand one in operation, and the tempo (get that) of projection ought to be changed, how in heaven's name can he do it? Oh, yes, by the way, when are we to be able to get those lens charts on heavy paper for framing; also what will the cost be? Come now, speak right up and don't sulk about it!"

Friend Fisher had some trouble getting the question booklets. Says he sent coin and wrote twice about it. Dunno, brother F. First time your order reached me so far as my files show. Probable reason is that you included the order in a subscription order. Don't do that. Where the money for handbook or subscription and for booklets is sent together it makes a lot of bother, and may cause errors. The booklets are sent out by the editor of this department personally. Send three-cent stamps separate from orders for other things. As to cost of charts on heavy paper for framing, why, it would depend on how many orders were received. I'll let you know about it a little later. First, I want to know whether or no any holes can be knocked in the charts. I am myself coming to the view that a right and left hand projector with one large observation port between the two would be a distinct step forward toward better projection. When it will come I don't know. Depends, as I have said before, on how many of you demand it. Yes I "got" the "tempo." Correct time, brother—absolutely correct.

New York City Gains in Population.

New York City has a brand new inhabitant, and the Precision Machine Company has one brand new and perfectly good business booster. William C. Franke, formerly of Boston, Hub of the universe, in the state the Mayflower made famous, is the man who hath folded his tent and stalked, not stolen forth, heading his land cruising barque toward the mecca of these United States, ycelpt New York. And here he is. And here is New York. And there is Boston, right where she has always "bean."

But, joking to one side (Saturday Evening Post please accept apologies), Francke is a live wire. He is a hustler from Hustleville, and I don't know which is the more to be congratulated, he or the company which has secured his services. But, anyhow, they're both lucky, and I'm glad of it, for they're both frien's of mine. Boston has lost one high tension unit and New York has grabbed it unto itself, as "Little Ole" has the habit of doing—and there you are.

Probably Not.

Yale R. Roots, Irwin, Ohio, asks:

"Can a 35-40 volt 1.5 generator be connected directly to an arc with satisfactory results, omitting the rheostat, of course?"

If you mean a D. C. generator and a projection arc, no, it cannot, because a D. C. projection arc will not operate satisfactorily at such low voltage. The A. C. projection arc operates at 33 to 48, but I could not say whether you could get away with such a proposition with an A. C. generator or not. Never saw it tried. The D. C. generator can be used in conjunction with an arc without a rheostat, provided it is a compound wound machine and the compounding is of the kind to give what is known as "constant current." If the generator is of that type, and the arc you wish to operate is not a projection arc, you most likely can get at least fairly satisfactory results. The difference between the projection and the ordinary arc is that the former must have sufficient length to remove the negative tip at some distance from the crater, in order to present a clear field of light to the lens, and this calls for not less than 45 volts under any condition I know of.

Edison Repairs.

John W. Lunger, Washington, New Jersey, desires information:

As to the second hand projector matter, those having a machine they wish to dispose of will please send particulars to John W. Lunger, proprietor Washington Opera House, Washington, N. J. However, I would suggest that our classified advertising department is the proper place for such matters. It is, I think, very generally read, and offers a proper and inexpensive medium for such matters as this. As to Edison repairs, you can secure any desired Edison projector parts from the Baird Company, 24 East 23d street, New York City. The actual repairs can probably be handled by Lewis Swaab, Philadelphia—see his advertisement for street address.

Tips for the House Manager

Conducted by E. T. KEYSER

HOW TO KEEP TAB ON TICKET SALES

Also, How to Keep Them Entirely to Yourself, Cut Waiting Line and Satisfy the Tax Man

TICKET selling in the modern picture theatre is a very different proposition from the days when the lovely girl in the booth lost count on the sales while shifting her wad of gum and unconsciously gave too much change to the fan who told her that she had soulful eyes.

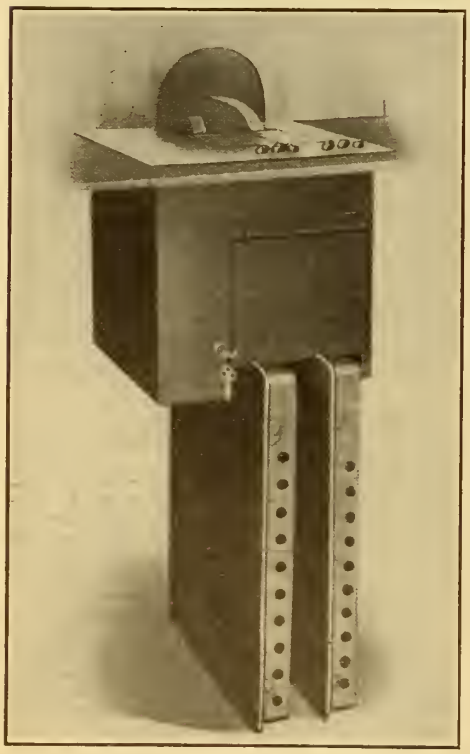
The transaction has arrived at a point where it is necessary to be sure that proper tax returns may be instantly made, that no tickets are lost or mislaid, and that while the manager may ascertain at any moment just how many admissions have been sold, his competitor may not also keep tab on him by the simple method of purchasing a numbered ticket at both ends of the show.

Labor Saving Devices Made the Change.

To no small extent these changes have been made possible by the utilization of labor-saving and mistake-eliminating ticket vending devices well up in the forefront of which are the products of the Automatic Ticket Selling & Cash Register Company, of 1731 Broadway, New York.

The new model of the Automaticket Register just brought out by the above concern is a device which every up-to-date exhibitor and house manager can study to advantage, and the longer he studies it, the more impressed he will be by its possibilities.

In the first place, its accuracy is such that the United States Government will accept its registration of ticket sales without checking up ticket numbers. This feature permits the use of un-numbered tickets and of maintaining absolute secrecy regarding the volume of the house business, while the sales for any desired period of time may be accurately totaled at the will of the manager.



This Is the Automaticket.
Note Magazines and Lock.

It Is Easy to Install.
You Can Do It Yourself.

By speeding up the sales, it eliminates to a minimum the line of waiting customers, reduces lobby congestion and enables the cashier to give entire attention to accurate change-making.

Keeps Business Under Lock and Key.

The Automaticket Register will issue tickets of different prices and color. It keeps the business under lock and key, as a master lock controls tickets, register and mechanism.

The mechanism is so arranged that the device will issue tickets in numbers up to and including five in a continuous strip and a separate and independent device keeps tabs on each denomination of ticket sold. Moreover, it uses a pre-printed ticket, permitting each exhibitor to have his own exclusive design, which cannot be imitated or faked.

The motor actuating the mechanism runs equally on either direct or alternating current, and only when an operating key is depressed, thus reducing current consumption to a minimum.

A feature of the Automaticket is that it uses "accordion fold" tickets, taking a charge up to four thousand at one load. A gummed splicer attached to the end ticket of each bundle permits the continuous addition of a new supply to the strip before it becomes exhausted, which is something that will be appreciated by the manager who desires to load the machine at his convenience.

The illustrations show the device in its entirety, the ease with which it may be installed and how the ticket strips are loaded into the magazine. These registers are built in four different types, dispensing two, three, four and five different priced and differently colored tickets, respectively, so that no matter what the requirements of a theatre, it may select the individual type which will supply its particular needs.

The manufacturers have issued an instruction sheet, showing how easily the register may be installed and operated, and it wouldn't be a bad idea for you house managers to ask 'em for a copy before they are all spoken for. You will find it worth reading.

To the House Manager.

This department is yours. In it from time to time will appear descriptions of accessories and equipment—outside the projection field—which will interest you and save you time and money.

When you put over a stunt in house arrangement or furnishing that would help the other fellow, tell us about it and we'll publish it.

When you are pleased with any particular line of theatre supplies, tell us so that we may pass the tip along.

When you are puzzled as where to procure any equipment for your house, wire this department and we will dig it up for you—if it is made.

"Must Sell," "Wanted to Rent," "Will Buy Theatre"—these are only a few of the business opportunities The World's Classified brings to light.

Music for the Picture

Conducted by GEORGE W. BEYNON

What Your Department Has Done in the Twelvemonth That Has Passed

THIS is the first anniversary of "Music for the Pictures" under the present editor, and we feel that you will require the annual report of your department.

On February 2, 1918, we began this department in a small way, covering two pages of text and comprising an editorial, a few comments, Leader's Service Bureau and cue sheet synopsis. There was considerable interest elicited from the trade upon this new departure and favorable commendations acted as a spur to greater endeavor. During July and the early part of August there was more matter than space, and the department overflowed to the third page.

The issue of August 31 marked the birth of the enlarged department as now constituted, and its general "make-up" has received universal approbation. We are now running an editorial; an educational article dealing with the history of folk songs or musical instruments; comments on the musical phases of new pictures; a review of prominent theatre programs; four pages of cue sheets, classified in alphabetical order and right up to the minute; a Leader's Service Bureau, where questions are answered and suggestions offered, and an average of three pages of advertising.

It is with mingled emotions that we come before you at this time, for, although much has been accomplished in spite of uncertain and unsettled conditions, much more could have been done had the musicians given us greater moral and tangible support. Many have become regular readers of the "Moving Picture World"; many have sent in kind words of praise; while others have given us valuable news tips. We are thankful, but not satisfied. We want all the musicians in the country to regard "Music for the Pictures" as a department printed expressly for them, requiring their hearty co-operation and endorsement, and calling for the artistic help needed to elevate picture music.

The war is over. The unrest and doubt engendered by the draft is gone. Normal business conditions will soon become stable, then the musician can "tend to his knitting." Competition will be keener, and every leader must not only be equipped with a fine library, but must read about the ever-changing phases of the film industry. He must keep posted on the latest pictures and how they were presented musically to the trade. It is the object of this department to supply him with just such information. He wants to know whether a picture has a special score or not, or where the music suggested in various cue sheets is available. Again, he may turn to us for the needed information. This is his department, and we need his support to make it the success for which we all look.

It is with pleasure and a deep sense of appreciation that we extend our thanks to the exhibitors and producers who have taken so kindly to our efforts. The department aims to give the exhibitor every possible assistance in the enhancement of his musical program. His problems are close to our heart, and the "Leader's Service Bureau" has been instrumental in solving many a knotty situation arising in various theatres.

We point with pride to the advertising done by the organ manufacturers, music publishers and song writers. The moving picture field has been rather shunned by this type of advertisers in the past, but they are now awake to its vast possibilities, and seek customers among the picture players. For those wishing new music no better medium can be found than the advertising columns of this department. When the exhibitor needs an organ he can always get a line on this product in the "Moving Picture World." Advertising in this periodical means something. The fact that he is advertising with us is a guarantee of the reliability of the advertiser.

What the future holds no one may say, but the prospects are alluringly bright. We expect that this coming year will see a wonderful advancement in the musical standards of picture playing. It will be our pleasure to bend all our energies toward that end.

By keeping before them this important fact and the fundamental reason for the service, readers of these columns may, in no small way, contribute to the success of the department compiled and conducted for maximum benefit to the greatest number.

Improved Music at the Strand Theatre.

Many causes contribute to the noticeable improvement in the music at the Strand. In the first place the orchestra has been considerably augmented and a tuba fills out the brass section. There are three trombones where formerly only one prevailed, and the string section is not only increased in quantity, but better in quality. The difference was apparent in the rendition of Victor Herbert's "American Fantasie." We have heard it many times, but never before has it seemed so poignant in its delineation of Americanism.

Carl Edouarde conducted and brought from the score all that was ever put into it. At the close, when the "Star Spangled Banner" was played, no one in the large audience stood with reluctance. All were pleased to rise, not only for patriotic reasons, but out of respect for the splendid musical offering.

During the playing of the pictorial, we heard "Madelon," that famous French marching song, and it seemed good. The tempo of the various marches was much better than heretofore, and the change was appreciated. The key sequence was also more uniform, although there is still room for improvement in the sychronization of the various numbers. Especially fine in its suitability was the scherzo used during the aeroplane scene.

The Strand male quartette sang two popular numbers in a setting the equal of which we have never seen. First the strains of "There's a Long, Long Trail" came floating through the curtains, sung a capella; then as the song finished and the curtain rolled back, we beheld four soldiers standing in the bow of a real ship. While they sang Cohan's latest hit, "And They Will Come Back," the scene became more realistic because the waves lapped the vessel and in the distance, growing more and more distinct, was the Statue of Liberty. This wonderful setting more than made amends for the poor singing.

"The Fighting Roosevelts" was featured pictorially and musically. This musical setting stands pre-eminent among Strand presentations. No easy picture to fit at best, it was handled in a masterly manner, with a sure eye to the dominant idea of the revival and maintenance of the spirit of '76. The opening medley of American airs, the children's simple melodies and the light intermezzo in the early portion of the picture formed a fine beginning. Such characteristic and typical numbers as "There'll Be a Hot Time" and "Lead, Kindly Light" for Roosevelt and McKinley respectively touched the hearts of the older generation and received favorable comment. The music was well graded up to the climax, and the silent pause when McKinley declared war was most impressive and respectful. Perhaps the finish might be criticised by the thoughtless for its quietness, but those who know the art of picture fitting will rightly praise the manner in which this anti-climax was handled. The last impression left upon the patrons after they had seen the stirring life story of the greatest American and had listened to nothing but American music was that simple yet symbolic melody, "The Girl I Left Behind Me." No finer finish could be conceived.

A rather amusing fact concerning the Second Mazurka written by Godard comes to light. This well-known composition was written for a pharmacist to give as a premium with a certain brand of liquor, but was rejected because it was "too hard."

Trombone Recognized as Stateliest Brass Instrument

The most important member of the trumpet family is the trombone. The name comes from the Italian in which tromba, in one of its meanings, signifies trumpet. Although the trombone was a stranger in the orchestra until the nineteenth century, it is an extremely old instrument. The invention of the slide has been attributed to Tyrtaeus in 685 B. C. It is a historical fact that one was unearthed from the ruins of Pompeii. By the end of the middle ages trombones were well established, particularly in Germany. Credit for the evolution of the trombone from its primitive state is given to Hans Neuschel, of Nuremberg, who was the most celebrated trombone maker and performer of the fifteenth century. By the sixteenth century the tromba was in demand in England, having been brought from Spain. In the latter country it was known as the "Sacabuche," which was easily Anglicized into "Sackbut."

Of all brass wind instruments the trombone has undergone the least changes. Modifications of the original model have been attempted, but with indifferent success. The greatest innovation was made at the end of the eighteenth century, when the tube of the bell was bent in a half circle above the head of the musician. This produced a bizarre effect, and resulted in great inconvenience, as the alteration in the proportional regularity of the bell affected the tone quality. The instrument soon reverted to type where it has since remained.

It is now a slender brass tube arranged in three parallel lines connected by two short curves and ending in a bell. In the middle section it is double, so the two outer sections slide upon the inner ones. There are seven distinct positions for this slide, and they must be learned. There is no guide, but the performer must be as proficient as the violinist. Naturally, the knowledge is only obtained by constant practice. There are three varieties of the instrument—the alto, tenor and bass. Formerly a soprano trombone obtained, which was introduced into Bach's Cantatas and in Mozart's Mass in C Minor, but has now disappeared from the musical world. The tenor trombone is the one used almost exclusively at the present time.

In military bands a valve trombone is sometimes used, which produces the scale by means of pistons instead of the slide. It is easier to play than its orchestral relative, and permits the performer more rapid execution. But these advantages are more than counterbalanced by an inferiority in tone coloring.

Trombones differ from other members of the brasswind family in being nontransposing. Hence, they sound the notes as written. The range is over two octaves, and the timbre is majestic and imposing, while it has sufficient power to dominate the entire orchestra. Being an instrument possessed of lofty dramatic power, it should be reserved as the interpreter of impressive passages in the music. Mozart appreciated this fact and used the instrument with discretion. In the "Magic Flute," he employed the trombone for the march of the priests and to accompany Sarastro, the High Priest.

Berlioz says: "The trombone, in my opinion, is the true chief of that race of wind instruments which I distinguish as epic instruments. It has all the deep and powerful accents of high musical poetry from the religious, calm and imposing, to the wild clamors of the orgy. The composer can make it shout like a choir of priests, threaten, lament, sound a dread flourish, or ring a funeral knell."

A Song Possessing the Power of Midas.

"Egyptland," the music of which is by James W. Casey and the lyrics by Bartley Costello, has just been transferred to F. J. A. Forster, of Chicago. But the composers still retain the rights for mechanical instruments and for piano copies.

It is said that the advance royalties on this song aggregate the largest amount ever paid on a song.

The publishers, the Echo Publishing Company, and the writers are to be congratulated, as this extremely popular song is their second hit within a year. "Hearts of the World," as the musical world knows, has been and is one of the biggest sellers on the market.

New Song Dedicated to Norma Talmadge.

A song entitled "Heart of Wetona," dedicated to Norma Talmadge and bearing an autographed picture of the Select star on the cover, is being brought out by Leo Feist, music publisher. Miss Talmadge's work in "The Heart of Wetona," her recent screen success, was the inspiration for the Indian lyrics by Sidney D. Mitchell and the music by Archie Gottler.

This is the third time that Miss Talmadge has had a song written in her honor. "San San," by Danny Nirella, was dedicated to her in recognition of her artistic work in "The Forbidden City."

"Heart of Wetona" will be placed on sale the last week of January. Orchestra leaders will be glad to take advantage of this opportunity of adding another Indian song to their libraries.

Home Coming Song for Our Soldier Boys.

When the American boys went away to war they marched to the strains of "Over There," and this song kept up the spirits of all loyal Americans during the trying times that followed.

Now that the boys are coming back, it is but fitting that they should be welcomed by a new song written in their honor. Appreciating this fact, "Then You'll Know You're Home" has just been published by Chappell & Company. The lyrics of this delightful ballad are by Gordon Johnstone and the music is by Jesse Winne.

The publishers say that the first edition was sold out within a week, and it is proving a worthy sequel to "Keep the Home Fires Burning," which was a tremendous success.

"Notes on Music in Old Boston."

While writing book reviews is no part of our province, a little booklet has come to us that demands some attention.

It is entitled "Notes on Music in Old Boston," and is put out by the Oliver Ditson Publishing Company and written by William Armes Fisher.

The book is attractively bound, printed on excellent paper and typed in a manner easy to read.

The opening chapter is a brief resume of the history of Boston Common, and is followed by articles on the introduction of singing and musical instruments in the Boston churches. Later, the history of the Oliver Ditson Company is given in an interesting manner, and many excellent cuts are introduced to show the growth of the business.

Alex Gerber Signs Up with Witmark.

The latest addition to the staff of lyric writers employed by M. Witmark & Sons is Alex Gerber, who has just signed up for a term of years with this house.

Mr. Gerber enlisted in 1917, and claims that he was the first song writer to join the colors. Among the best known of his popular successes are "You Can't Stop Me From Loving You," "At the Fountain of Youth," "Some Girls Do and Some Girls Don't," "Since Sarah Saw Theda Bara," "Don't Give Back My Wife to Me" and "He's Living the Life of Reilly."

Composers' Society Plans Many Suits

The decision of Judge Blodsoe, of the Federal Court in Los Angeles, Cal., recently in the case of the music publishing firms of Waterson, Berlin & Snyder against Chis. Tollefson, a motion picture theatre proprietor, is to be the basis of many suits at law which the Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers are contemplating bringing in the near future.

Tillefson, according to the evidence in the case, had performed in his theatre the song, "Joan of Arc, They Are Calling You," without having first obtained permission of the copyright owner. The judge in his decision awarded the publishers a judgment of $250 and an additional $100 for counsel fees.

This decision establishes the minimum assessment against the proprietor of any theatre, music hall, cabaret or other place of amusement where copyrighted music is performed for profit without first obtaining permission from the copyright owner.

It was formerly believed that $10 was the minimum fee which the copyright owner could collect for each infringement, but according to Judge Blodsoe's decision not only can a substantial amount be collected, but counsel fees as well.

FILM CLUB OF WASHINGTON ORGANIZES

Its Scope Will Be Social and Educational Temporary Officers and Committee Are Chosen

By Clarence L. Linz, 622 Riggs Building, Washington, D. C.

THE employes of the various film exchanges throughout the city have formed the Film Club of Washington. Its membership will cover all branches of male endeavor in the exchanges and its objects will be for the social and educational benefit of those who join.

The organization of the club was effected at a meeting held at the Fox Film Corporation offices, where Manager Ben Rogers offered the use of his exhibition room. Present to assist them in the work of getting together were Oscar A. Morgan, manager of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and secretary of the Washington Exchange Managers' Association; Abe Dresner, manager of the Exhibitors' Co-Operative Exchange, and Clarence L. Linz, Washington correspondent of the Moving Picture World.

The men named, each of whom has had experience in the work of organizing association, were called upon for advice, and they pointed out the good that can be accomplished through a club of this kind, when its efforts are rightfully and properly directed. The organization is in no way a union; its formation does not come by way of a desire to combat the managers; the men and boys so the exchanges feel the need for an organization that will have social advantages and educational features.

To start the club going it was decided to elect temporary officers who will serve for three months. A nominating committee was appointed, and two slates were brought in. The voting was quite spirited, the outcome being as follows: Gerald Payne, Fox Film Corporation, president; H. E. Lewis, Famous Players-Lasky Company, first vice-president; A. A. Bauer, Famous Players-Lasky Company; second vice-president; Albert C. Eckardt, Famous Players-Lasky Company, secretary, and Meyer M. Emanuel, Super Films Attractions, Inc., treasurer.

The president was authorized to appoint an executive committee to be composed of the president, secretary, treasurer and five other members of the club. It was decided for the present to hold meetings each Friday night. Later, when organization is finally completed, an effort is to be made to find suitable club rooms where the boys can get together every evening; in the meantime the meetings will be held at the different exchanges. The charter membership rolls will be held open for additions until February 1.

Exchanges Gain by Army's Loss.

THERE have been a number of additions to the local exchanges, now that the boys have begun to return from the Army. John Payette, one of the best known young film salesmen in this territory, goes to Baltimore for the United Picture Theatres of America. He was formerly the Baltimore representative of the General Film Company. Edward Sherwood, who, before donning the olive drab uniform, was with the Mutual Film Company, is going to cover the Virginia territory for Pathe, Inc. C. R. Milliman, at one time manager for the Universal and later the film representative of one of the Army departments, has also joined Pathe as a travelling film representative.

The Scenic in New Hands.

Griffin and Mitchell, who operate the Raphael Theatre, have recently taken over the Scenic Theatre, on Wisconsin avenue, in the Georgetown section. This house has been closed for several years and the present operators re-equipped it before opening. Mr. Griffin has just recently returned from army duty.

Garner Going on Road.

Leo Garner, who has been in charge of the office of Sidney B. Lust, is going on the road with "The Silent Mystery" and other special features of the Feature Film Attractions, Inc. It is the intention of Mr. Lust to open an office on Trade street, in Charlotte, in order that he may be better able to market his pictures in the state of North Carolina, and for some time Mr. Garner will work from there.

Washington News Notes.

John Shreve, who has been operating the Revere Theatre, has gone to Florida in an effort to recover his health. Mr. Shreve was one of the influenza sufferers who was so unfortunate as to contract pneumonia. He has gone south leaving his theatre in the management of Mr. Jenkins.

Lester Rosenthal, who recently joined the sales staff of the Famous Players-Lasky exchange here, has been appointed sales manager by Manager Oscar Morgan. Mr. Rosenthal was for some time an employe of the General Film Company in this city.

Harry M. Grandall, head of the string of theatres that bear his name, has been elected to the board of directors of the Merchants' Bank, one of the city's leading institutions. It is noticed also that the name of Barry Bulkley, Mr. Grandall's associate in the motion picture business, is also in the list of directors of this bank. Walter Brownley, who is connected with the Loew interests here, has been elected a member of the board of directors of the National Metropolitan Bank.

Dallas News Letter

By Phil Fox, Times-Herald, Dallas, Tex.

Mexican Movie Magnate Visits Dallas.

JUAN DELA C. ALARCON, formerly private secretary to President Diaz, of Mexico, and now proprietor of the Alcazar and Eureka theatres at El Paso besides holding interests in moving picture theatres in Chihuahua and Mexico City, was a visitor in Dallas during the second week in January.

Senor Alarcon used to own a big moving picture theatre at Juarez, across the border from El Paso. About five years ago Pancho Villa blew into the town, grabbed the show and gave it to one of his friends. The friend sold it and it changed hands again, so Alarcon's title is a trifle clouded. He can't go across the river to look into the matter, because, if he did, he would be promptly arrested and put up against an adobe wall as bull's eye for a Carranza firing squad.

Film Doings of Dallas.

E. H. Hulsey, of Dallas, has leased the Kyle Theatre, Beaumont, to Aaron Laskin, of Houston. Charles Sasseen, who has been manager of the Kyle for the past two years, has gone to the Grand Opera House at Galveston.

Dallas motion picture exhibitors, patriotic as ever, gave full assistance to the Y. W. C. A. of this city in January, aiding them to raise $25,000 for home-work purposes. Slides were run in all theatres and special talks were made.

Many special features are being planned by Dallas film exchange men for the entertainment of the thousands of delegates who will attend the annual convention of the Texas Cattlemen's Association, which will be held here during March. Several exhibitors and film men are on the entertainment committee.

Among exhibitors visiting Dallas film row during the second week in January were the following: Mose Weinstein, Washington, Sherman; J. E. Macon, Cozy, Kemp; C. J. Mussellman, Queen, Paris; S. V. Fulkerson, Alhambra, El Paso; Gus Peterson, Opera House, Strawn; T. E. Phipps, La Grand, Childress.

Ed Foy, owner of the Columbia Theatre, Dallas, a suburban house, has acquired the two other suburban picture shows in Dallas proper. He now controls the Columbia, the Ideal and the Colonial theatres. He will give the management his personal attention.

Manager Leroy Bickel, of Metro, went to Little Rock, Ark., January 20, to establish the new Metro branch there. Harry Tooms, former lieutenant in the United States Army, will be the Arkansas manager.

Miss Margaret G. Breckon, of Metro, and F. A. Russ, of the Texas and Pacific Railway, were married Saturday, January 18. The bride is one of the most popular girls on film row. Mr. and Mrs. Russ, after a honeymoon trip to California, will reside in Dallas.

Arthur Lucas, division manager for Goldwyn, visited Manager Lew Remy during the second week in January, coming here from Atlanta via South Texas. Mr. Lucas reports that trade indications for Texas lead him to expect a record-breaking business for the coming year.

J. B. Dugger, representative of the Hodkinson Corporation interests in Southwestern territory, has resigned to enter the oil business.

J. R. Curry has come from the Denver office of Pathe to represent the company in South Texas. He takes the place of W. T. Yoder, who has been made assistant manager of the Dallas branch.

Miss Maudleigh Renshaw, formerly efficiency expert with Universal at Oklahoma City, has joined the Dallas Pathe force as private secretary to Manager James Hill.

Texas Trade Notes.

Influenza has broken out in various small towns along the Mexican border. With this exception, all theatres in Texas,

Oklahoma and Arkansas are open and doing good business. Mission and De Rio, both border towns and quarters for border patrols, are closed. On behalf of the Texas Exhibitors' Association Secretary Lew Remy has formally protested the closings, and should the exhibitors wish litigation will be started with a view of opening them again.

There are no motion picture theatres at Crockett, a prosperous little Texas town of 5,000 population. It is understood that several Dallas men are planning to build a theatre there.

A little Texas Democrat was delivered by the stork to the home of E. H. Rowley, of Robb and Rowley, Hillsboro, January 17. She is an eight-pound baby girl. Women vote in this state.

E. V. Richards, general manager of the Sanger Amusement Company, of New Orleans, was a visitor in Houston en route home from the First National meeting at Los Angeles.

Joe Gilligan, well-known Texas film salesmen, is seriously ill with the influenza at New Orleans.

Where Revenue Taxes Count.

NEARLY $500,000 was received from war taxes on amusements by the Collector of Internal Revenue in this district during the first year of the law's inception since November 1, 1917. The tax indicated an expenditure of $5,000,000, which includes legitimate houses, vaudeville, baseball parks, athletic clubs, etc. The total amount collected from all sources in the district, which comprises Philadelphia and seven other neighboring counties, for the year was $1,375.460.46, or an average of over $100,000 a month. The other counties are Berks, Montgomery, Delaware, Chester, Bucks, Lehigh and Schuylkill.

There are 249 moving picture houses in the district, of which 149 are in Philadelphia. There are also thirty-six legitimate theatres and vaudeville houses in this city. Judging by the comparative figures, the revenue officials declare it safe to say that the money collected from moving picture devotees to help carry on the war during the year will easily reach a half-million.

Philadelphia Notes.

A. Katz has purchased from H. Backman the moving picture theatre at 2029 to 2033 South Third street. The purchase price is said to be about $17,000, $8,000 of which remains on mortgage.

William Wilson, manager of the Imperial Theatre, in West Philadelphia, after having successfully experimented with singing canary birds as an aid to make his lobby more attractive, announces that he has engaged a huge elephant for the week of January 27 to advertise his anniversary week.

Following the successful engagement of "An Eye for an Eye" at the Stanley Theatre, this production opened at the Colonial Theatre, Reading, last week to a standing-room crowd.

J. E. Berry, of the Jackson Theatre, York, Pa., has just completed extensive alterations and installed a new pipe organ.

W. E. Wooden, of Towanda, is converting his upstairs theatre to a floor house having a seating capacity of 1,000. This theatre is located in a town having only 4,000 population. Reports of charging 25 cents admission and using 24-sheets for advertising are very common occurrences here.

A private showing of the Paramount production, "Little Women," was held at the Arcadia Theatre last Sunday, January 19, and was attended by invited guests and members of the press. The production was unanimously pronounced a most delightful story.

PORTLAND EXCHANGES REPORT DECREASE

Drop in Business Due to the Closing of Shows During the Recent Epidemics of Influenza

By Abraham Nelson, 601 Journal Building, Portland, Ore.

THE "flu" epidemic has again reached such proportions in the Pacific Northwest and in the Oregon territory that the lid has been placed on public gatherings as a means of preventing its further spread. This is true in most of the medium-sized towns, although in Portland a strict quarantine of the persons stricken with the disease is being enforced, and the theatres are permitted to run with certain restrictions.

In the territory served by Portland exchanges there are approximately forty towns entirely closed. These include La Grande, Pendleton, Albany, Salem and The Dalles. At the time of this writing, Eugene was considering closing all places of public gathering.

Reports coming to Portland exchanges have it that the new theatre at Enterprise, Ore., was delayed in opening, first on account of the epidemic beginning in October and now by its recurrence. Estimates by Thomas Duncan, of the Service Film Company, show a decrease of sixty per cent. in the business done by exhibitors in the territory during the past week.

Exhibitors Aid Officials.

In Portland there has been complete co-operation between the theatre managers and the city officials with the result that there has been no closing of business due to the "flu" as was the case during the first wave in October. When a recurrence of the epidemic became evident, the theatre managers met, made their plans for preventing crowds in show houses, ventilation, and other precautions, which were approved by the health authorities, and in less than twenty-four hours had their plans in operation. E. J. Myrick, of the Liberty, headed the committee of theatre men whose rapid action was publicly commended by the city officials.

Vancouver Closes.

Theatre men at Vancouver, Wash., received instructions to close their shows, beginning Sunday, January 19, to prevent the spread of influenza. Vancouver has been unusually hard hit by closing orders, due to the fact that the baracks of the Spruce Production Division of the Army is located in this city, and every precaution is taken to prevent its spread to the troops. Messrs. Kiggins and Magill, who control the theatrical situation there, have been co-operating with the Army officials to keep the epidemic from the soldiers.

Film Rentals Down.

Prominent Portland exchanges decline to verify the statement that film rentals have dropped by reason of influenza conditions. They contend that the exhibitors have not sustained the enormous losses the exchanges have been compelled to stand. However, the wise ones intimate that first-run prices have gone through a downward revision.

A New Theatre for Portland.

Portland.—Notwithstanding all kinds of adverse business conditions existing in the territory, Portland is to have a new motion picture theatre in the suburbs at Montavilla. It will be called the Victory and seat between 300 and 400. Paramount-Artcraft has already contracted for service there. The new theatre will be conducted by J. Kisswetter, who formerly operated the Broadway.

Installs Mechanical Department.

The Service Film Company of Portland has installed a complete mechanical department for supplying parts and repairing machines. The new department is already stocked with every style of projectors. W. A. Stone, of the company, has been confined to his home with the "flu," leaving the conduct of the business to his partner, Thomas Duncan.

General to the Front.

The Portland exchange of the General Film Company is showing a lot of activity these days under the management of L. E. (Jack) Tillman. One of the big sales of the week by the company was "Sweet Honey" to the Portland Liberty, which showed the production under the feature title of "The Fighting Parson."

Hill on Censor Board.

C. M. Hill, manager of the Portland Paramount-Artcraft Exchange, is a member of the Portland censor board. The censor board didn't know it, though, until he had been serving for six months. The reason for the board's ignorance on the subject, said Mrs. E. B. Colwell, secretary, was that the Mayor's office, which made the appointment, had not notified her or any of the other members of the board except Mr. Hill. The new board member officiated for the first time when he viewed a picture at the Universal exchange.

Metzger Coming Back.

Gus Metzger, who left the Coast about six months ago to take over the management of Jewel productions in New York City, is coming back as district manager for the Pacific Coast for Universal.

Coast Supervisor Visits Wingham.

L. Wingham, the new manager for the Exhibitors' Mutual Distributing Corporation, recently received a visit from N. E. Levy, Coast supervisor of the company, en tour of the district installing new systems and outlining the future policies of the company. Mr. Wingham, who has only been in the Portland office about six weeks, is getting ready for a big campaign as soon as the "flu" epidemic subsides.

Majestic Puts Over Hayakawa.

Frank Lacey, manager of the Majestic, spread himself considerably in exploiting Sessue Hayakawa in "His Birthright." He gowned all the girl ushers as geisha girls and opened the show with a prologue of the girls in pantomime dances. The lobby was decorated with Japanese lanterns and the foyer with narcissus. J. J. Parker, managing owner of the Majestic, who has been touring California, is expected back to Portland soon.

Hill Shoots Big Buck.

C. M. Hill, Portland, Paramount-Artcraft manager, recently received from the taxidermist the head of a buck deer which he shot near Riddle, Ore., just before the hunting season closed. Mr. Hill made his hunting trip in company with Joe Bradt of the Echo Theatre.

Portland Shorts.

Clyde Gage, owner of the Liberty Theatre, Coquille, Ore., was a recent visitor in Portland. The "flu" has subsided in his town and he has reopened his show.

Ted Johnson, traveler for Mutual, just completed a business-getting tour of the territory before the epidemic got in its latest dirty work.

Harry Hunter, road man for Paramount-Artcraft, made a trip in the northern part of the territory where he secured all the new business the company did not already have.

Art Kolstad, theatre magnate of Hood River, maintained much secrecy as to the contents of a film box he received from Portland recently. He had the Portland boys completely mystified.

LOEWS WILL ERECT AN OTTAWA HOUSE

Large Block of Land Fronting on Queen Street Has Been Purchased for the New Theatre's Site

By W. M. Gladish, 33 Wineva avenue, Toronto, Ont.

REPRESENTATIVES of Marcus Loew interests have purchased a large block of land, known as the Le Moine property, on Queen street, between O'Connor and Bank streets, Ottawa, for the purpose of erecting a new moving picture and vaudeville theatre in the Canadian capital. The Loew people have had an option on the site for some time and the decision has now been reached to invade the city.

The property measures 99 feet by 132 feet and its location will permit the construction of a lobby running through to Sparks street, the main thoroughfare of the city.

Laurie Is Strand's Manager.

Archie Laurie has been appointed manager of the Strand Theater by N. L. Nathanson, managing director of the Paramount Theatres, Limited, Toronto, in succession to Herb Jennings, who has become associated with the Allen Theatrical Enterprises at Toronto. Jennings, who was in charge of the Strand Theatre for a year, will have the supervision of three houses in Toronto, controlled by the Allens.

Regent Celebrates First Anniversary.

The Regent Theatre observed its first anniversary week under the auspices of Allen Interests during the week of January 20 with the presentation of "Sporting Life" for the first four days of the week. The Allens of Toronto had taken over the Regent one year before, but the theatre has been in operation for several years. Manager Moxley used special advertising space in the local newspapers for the occasion, one whole page in the issue of Saturday, January 18, of the Ottawa Journal being used for the purpose. The public responded in great numbers and the theatre did a great business.

The Dominion Pulls a New Stunt.

An unusual use of a moving picture was seen at the Dominion Theatre during the week of January 13, in connection with a vaudeville novelty presented by Ritchie and St. Onge, two well-known performers. A condensed comedy was used to introduce the athletic-comedian, Fred. St. Onge. Miss Ritchie opened the act alone and the explanation was soon forthcoming that her partner was nowhere to be found. This was the cue for the dropping of the screen and the picture showed St. Onge in a cabaret. He receives a telephone message from the manager of the theatre and then follows a wild trip to the house during which St. Onge does tumbles with a bicycle, street car, automobile and finally from a balloon. He alights on the roof of the theatre and sprawls onto the stage with the same make-up and costume in which he is seen in the picture. The act then develops into a bicycle comedy presentation. The picture stunt went over big.

Two New Incorporations Announced.

Two incorporations officially announced at Toronto on January 18 are of interest to the moving picture industry. One authorization was that for British Films, Limited, the subsidiary company of Jules and J. J. Allen, and the provisional directors named are G. M. Orr, Wilfrid Field and Miriam Jackson.

The other new company is Griffin Theatres, Limited, with headquarters at Toronto. The Griffin circuit consists of a dozen or more houses in the Province of Ontario and, incidentally, Peter and John Griffin have been among the oldest exhibitors in Canada. Provisional directors for this company include G. R. Sproat, C. H. Kemp, R. G. McClellan, H. F. Cline and L. G. McConnell.

John Fiddes, a former Canadian exhibitor and now owner of "The Musical Travelogues" which have been playing at the Family Theatre, Ottawa, Ontario, for the past month or six weeks, took patrons of the theatre on a "Trip to Movie-Land" during half of the week of January 13.

The first screening of "Empty Pockets" in Canada was the trade showing at Ottawa, Ontario, on January 15 which was largely attended by local exhibitors and film officials.

Basil Horsfall, formerly Montreal manager of the Mutual company, has been made assistant general manager of the Specialty Film Import, Limited, Montreal, Canadian Pathe distributors.

The management of the College Playhouse, 344 College street, formerly owned by the late Maurice Thaler, has passed to Mrs. Davis, sister of the late exhibitor. She has adopted the policy of presenting two features on Wednesdays and Thursdays to bolster up the weak days.

J. J. Colleton, formerly manager of the Toronto office of the Specialty Film Import, Limited, Canadian Pathe distributors, has become manager of the St. John office of Regal Films, Limited, Toronto.

Death of Mrs. William A. Elliott.

Heartfelt sympathy goes out to William M. Elliott, manager of the Regent Theatre, Toronto, on account of the death of his wife. Mr. Elliott has taken his loss keenly although he has been able to attend to his many duties at the theatre as vigorously as ever.

News Notes.

Fred W. Crosby is back in Winnipeg, Manitoba, after a stay in Toronto, and has taken over the management of the Winnipeg branch of Exhibitors' Distributing Corporation of Toronto. M. Rose goes on the road for the Winnipeg branch.

H. Nathanson, formerly Winnipeg branch manager of the Regal Films, Limited, Toronto, is back in his old berth after serving with the Royal Air Force. The Winnipeg man nearly cashed in while in uniform because of pneumonia. Harry Price will work out of the Winnipeg Regal office.

Announcement is made that "Enlighten Thy Daughter" drew $6,000 at the Lyceum Theatre, Winnipeg, during the week of January 6. The feature has been sent on to Vancouver.

There has been a jump in the moving picture theatre license fee in the Province of Alberta. The fee to date has been $100 and the new scale ranges from $200 to $300. Theatres having up to 500 seats will pay $200; those with from 500 to 1,000 seats, $250, and those with larger seating capacity, $300.

Gleichman Departs from Precedent.

PHIL J. GLEICHMAN, of the Broadway-Strand, Detroit, broke all precedents the week of January 19, when he put on a Nine-Men Minstrel Act as an added attraction with the regular feature. Eddie McGrath, who holds a life job at the Broadway-Strand, collaborated with Mr. Gleichman in getting the act together. The act was well put on, with dancing, solos by individuals, trios and quartettes and the whole company. Each man was splendid in his part and the whole setting was a credit to the theatre and those responsible for it. This season the Broadway-Strand is doing things, and we are glad to report that under the direct supervision of Mr. Gleichman that first-run playhouse is having the best season in its history.

Ross Reports Prosperity.

Great prosperity is being enjoyed at the local Paramount-Artcraft exchange. Manager H. A. John C. McCabe, Detroit city engineer, has asked the local council to pass an amendment to the state law which will permit auditoriums like the Board of Commerce to show motion pictures. The present law insists that the seats must be bolted to the floor. It would also grant the privilege of showing pictures by Y. M. C. A. institutions, churches, etc.

Partial Refund of Spokane Licenser.

SPOKANE theatres are to have a partial refund of their license fees for 1918. On recommendation of Commissioner J. H. Tilsley, the council authorized a refund covering the 40 days the theatres were wholly closed by influenza quarantine. Commissioner J. C. Argall was the only member of the council opposing the refund. The annual theatre license fee is $200.

"While I do not think that the theatres have any legal ground for asking the refund, I believe, in justice, that they should receive some consideration," said Mr. Tilsley in his recommendation. "The amount involved is not great, either to the theatres or to the city."

Stilwell and the Union Agree.

On Saturday, January 11, a joint committee composed of the unions in the amusement section of the Central Labor Council and President W. J. Coates and James McCowan, acting for the council, entered into an agreement with C. E. Stilwell that all houses under his control should be unionized. These houses consist of the Casino, Class A, Unique and the Rex, the latter house showing vaudeville as well as pictures.

For some months there has been a difference between the unions of the amusement section and the manager of these houses and the members of organized labor. The Central Labor Council has had these places of amusement on the unfair list, and insisted that members of organized labor spend their money with those houses that dld employ union help.

Mr. Silverman has added some 40 pounds to his heft, which he gained, presumably, at Camp Funston, where he ran the National Army Theatre for some time. Mr. Silverman had formerly been with the Sherry Company—but he calls himself an exhibitor. He's right, as witness his success with the Prospect when he formerly ran it and the way he is taking hold now.

Baby Marie Wins K. C.

The Pathe Exchange force was busy all last week with Baby Marie Osborne, the 7-year-old girl who has taken this section by storm. Kansas City theatregoers were prepared for the little actress, and when she was advertised to appear at a theatre in the residence part of the city—well, the only way to get in was by a back window. The crowd in front was too dense to be penetrated. At the Ashland over 3,000 came out to see her. The Belmont had the largest attendance in its history. The Benton, the Bonaventure and the Diamond had similar crowds. The Liberty was packed for the performance. The Electric, over on the Kansas side, had the biggest audiences ever known at both appearances. At the Warwick and the Isis the reception was wonderful.

Two Live Ones for General.

J. E. Foland, manager of the General offices at Kansas City, has secured two good ones in Ralph Levy and Eddie Carr, who are going out on the road. Pennybaker Back to "Old Missouri."

The new manager of the Kansas City branch of the Mutual is a Missouri boy, although born in Iowa, and is glad to get back to his old home, as he considers Missouri. L. L. He entered the game in 1907 with the old Independent Film Company at St. Joseph, Mo., and later owned and operated an exchange in Oklahoma City, Okla.

Gem Theatre and Mutual Offices Burned.

IN a fire which took place recently the Gem Theatre, Waterloo street, St. John, and the offices of the Mutual Film Corporation were burned.

The Gem Theatre, of which the proprietor is Fred H. Trifts, computes its monetary loss at $15,000, which includes the seats and the stage fittings. The insurance was $7,500.

Mr. Trifts plans to rebuild his theatre, but states that it will be some time before its completion.

C. H. Kerr, of the Mutual Film Corporation, who occupied offices in the adjoining building, lost 65 reels of film, office furniture and motion picture machines. He is already back at his office doing business.

James Travis, Canadian Eastern manager of the Mutual, was here at the time arranging for the refurnishing of the exchange and other matters. This is his first visit to the Maritime Provinces.

Mr. Travis stated that his loss was in the neighborhood of $2,400. The insurance was $1,000, which was carried by the Aetna Company, of Chicago, who called it an entire loss.

Mr. Travis says that their company will be much strengthened by the affiliation with the Robertson-Cole Company, of New York, and the Exhibitors' Distributing Company. They expect to have a trade showing of the much praised "Cannibals of the South Seas" in March.

Chaplin Attracts Bumper Crowds.

The Imperial Theatre was crowded to the doors for the Chaplin picture, "Shoulder Arms." Manager Golding originally planned to run the picture two days, but so great has been the demand for seats that he held it over both Friday and Saturday, and Saturday's crowd was a bumper one.

There is no doubt as to the popularity of Chaplin in this city. The Unique Theatre has shown many of the Chaplin reels five times, and always has a good audience to see them.

By Paul J. Gray, Dayton Theatre Building, Dayton, Ohio.

MARK GATES, managing director of the Dayton Theatre, has been appointed chairman of the Motion Picture Publicity Committee of the Fifth Liberty Loan by the Citizens' Liberty Loan committee of Montgomery county.

Mark Gates.

According to Mr. Gates, motion pictures will figure even more prominent in this, the "Victory" loan, than ever before. Mr. Gates has promised the full co-operation of all the film houses in Dayton as well as surrounding territory and is already mapping out a publicity campaign.

Johnson's "Cannibals" Crowd the Dayton.

Martin Johnson's "Cannibals of the South Seas" broke all record at the Dayton Theatre last Sunday when used with a big double bill in conjunction with the Mildred Harris picture "When a Girl Loves." It is said that the house records were raised by about two hundred dollars.

John Kent, manager of the Mutual Exchange at Cincinnati, is all "het up" over the success of the film.

World's Music Department Strikes Right Note.

The musical department of the Moving Picture World is quite popular with Dayton exhibitors and several orchestra leaders, among whom is Hewit Thomas, use it to a large extent. George W. Beynon's score for Martin Johnson's "Cannibals of the South Seas," which was used by the Dayton concert orchestra during the run of that film at the Dayton, caused much favorable comment from patrons of that house.

SCHILLER, general manager of the Marcus Loew interests, was in St. Louis last week completing arrangements for the opening of Loew's new house, the Garrick, which is scheduled to open about the middle of February. T. W. Chadburn, Western division manager, and Edward Auger, Eastern division manager of the Vitagraph Company, were both in St. Louis last week on a tour of inspection. The simultaneous arrival of both men was a coincidence. They found things moving very swiftly in the St. Louis office, with business better than it has been for many months.

Workmen are now busy enlarging the St. Louis Vitagraph office, and the work is expected to be completed in a few weeks. Manager D. E. Boswell has arranged to have the partition between the main office and the poster department town down and the post room moved further back in the building.

Manager Boswell, Assistant Manager Stanley Spoehr and City Salesman Charles Noehn will occupy the new quarters when they are completed.

Miss Hildred Andreas has joined the local staff of the Vitagraph Company in the capacity of billing clerk.

SALT LAKE HAS NEW INFLUENZA WAVE

No Suggestion Has Been Made as to Closing of the Picture Theatres by the Health Board

By W. H. Bennett, Jr., care Deseret Evening News, Salt Lake City, Utah.

Salt Lake's Third Influenza Wave.

WHILE Salt Lake City appears to be in the midst of a third wave of the Spanish influenza epidemic, no suggestion has been made as to another closing of the theatres. Although there are as many cases being reported as the average during the two months that public gatherings were entirely prohibited by order of the state board of health, the moving picture theatres are doing a fair business and the managers pronounce the prospects ahead as bright.

Since the quarantine on schools has been raised, children under the age of fourteen years are again given admission to the showhouses. This tends to help to some extent. Though the ban on theatres was raised the attendance of children of school age was not allowed until the quarantine as affecting schools had been lifted.

Announcement was made this week that the local moving picture managers will ask for a rebate of city license taxes and of general taxes for the two months the showhouses were kept closed. Also, the matter of the payment of rental for premises occupied by theatres is being investigated to ascertain if the payment of rent can be avoided for the closed period.

It is declared that the burdens of taxation on theatres is becoming serious, and the managers say that no opportunity to reduce this burden must be overlooked. It is understood that some owners of property occupied by theatres have met the show people half way on the rental proposition, while others insist that it must be paid in full.

"The Heart of Humanity" Has a Preview.

A preview for exhibitors and newspapermen of the Jewel superfeature, "The Heart of Humanity," was given at the American Theatre, Monday, January 20. Metzger, who has recently been appointed district manager for the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, his territory covering Denver, Salt Lake City, Butte, Portland, Seattle, Spokane, San Francisco and Los Angeles. He was formerly manager at Portland and Seattle.

The American Theatre closed its box office early several evenings and was compelled to stop the sale of tickets for the Nazimova production, "An Eye For an Eye."

W. A. Calkins, local manager for Pathe, has returned from an extended tour of Idaho territory. He says that about 50 per cent. of the state is still closed under the influenza quarantine and that business is only about 50 per cent. normal in the "open" territory. Boise opened last Saturday, and Burley on Thursday. Mr. Calkins does not look for business to be normal before April 1.

The Idaho legislature has a bill before it which if passed will require that every distributor doing business in the Gem state be represented in that state by an attorney in fact, upon whom process may be served. This will obviate the necessity of legal action arising against a distributor being instituted outside of Idaho.

The American Theatre has inaugurated regular afternoon orchestra music with its shows. A sixteen-piece orchestra will furnish music at all shows, together with the pipe organ. The American has Clara Kimball Young in "Cheating Cheaters" booked for February 4, 5 and 6.

Ouimet Suffers a Loss.

CANADIAN moving picture men were shocked on January 25 to learn of the death, in California, of a daughter of L. E. Ouimet, president and general manager of the Specialty Film Import, Ltd., Montreal and other cities, Pathe distributors in Canada.

Mr. Ouimet received the sad tidings while in Ottawa, Ontario, where he had gone to supervise a special trade show at the Imperial Theatre. The features shown were two British productions, the Canadian rights for which had been secured by him. They are "The Chance of a Life Time," a six-reel vehicle starring Queenie Thomas, and "Canada at Mons," a two-reel topical feature, showing the end of the war with the Canadian troops entering Mons. "Canada at Mons" was immediately booked by Harry Brouse for the Imperial Theatre, Ottawa, for the week of January 27, to accompany Keenan's "The Bells" during the same week.

Canadian Exhibitors Repeating.

Canadian exhibitors are doing quite a bit of repeating. Manager W. M. Elliott, of the Regent Theatre, Toronto, booked Nazimova's "Eye for Eye" for a second week in January when the feature did so well during its first week's presentation. The New Grand Theatre, Montreal, managed by George Rotsky, also booked "The Better 'Ole" for a second week, while the Dominion Theatre, Winnipeg, repeated "The Better 'Ole" for a second week also.

Conover Gets Good Publicity.

Manager Howard Conover, of the Imperial Theatre, Montreal, Que., gets considerable advertising for Mutt and Jeff cartoon pictures by an arrangement with the Montreal Herald, which publishes these strips regularly. Under each Mutt and Jeff comic strip is a line which refers to the showing of the cartoon comics at the Imperial. This line reads: "Bud Fisher's Animated Cartoons are shown at the Imperial Theatre only, every Sunday, Monday and Tuesday."

Establishes British-Canadian Pathe News.

To meet the demand of Ontario people for more Canadian pictures, the Specialty Film Import, Ltd., of Toronto, in co-operation with the Pathe Company, has established the British-Canadian Pathe News, a Canadian news weekly service. The cameraman in charge of the operators in and around Toronto is Blaine Irish, and the first issue of the new weekly was issued on January 27. This contained views of the arrival of war veterans at Toronto; a review of local troops; views of the reception of Captain Carpenter, V. C., commander of the Vindictive, at Toronto; reconstructional work at the Davisville Military Hospital, Toronto; pictures of Canadian prisoners of war, and the opening of a Salvation Army campaign at Toronto.

The Canadian Pathe Weekly will be released in semi-weekly instalments, and 2,000 feet of Canadian events is to be issued each week. To this will be added 2,000 feet of European and American views of general interest, making 4,000 feet that will be released by the Toronto Pathe office each week.

Items of Interest.

Al. Shulberg, of Seattle, Wash., brother of J. A. Shulberg, of Vancouver, B. C., the prominent Canadian theatre owner, assumed the management of the Gaiety Theatre, Winnipeg, Man., on January 22.

Walter Dolman, the organist of the Province Theatre, is once more in his place on the organ bench after an enforced rest of several weeks on account of influenza.

To advertise "The Better 'Ole," which was presented at the Dominion Theatre, Winnipeg, for two weeks in January, small illustrations of "Old Bill" were scattered through the local newspapers for a week. "Old Bill's" head was shown along with just one line of type referring to the presentation.

Harry James, formerly a technical expert with Mae Murray Productions, and also a juevenile at Universal City, is no longer a signaler of the Canadian Army. He received his discharge from the C. E. F. at Ottawa on January 23 and left the next day for California to resume activities in the producing field. James is a native son of Ottawa, the Canadian capital.
